Court if they choose by way of appeal; every safeguard shall be thrown around the Treasury, except that that court shall have the right in its discretion to give such weight as it shall think they now deserve to the affidavits of the witnesses, whose testimony taken in the ordinary way has passed beyond the power of human magistrates to take.

That is all and it seems to me that is the most absolutely just course that the Government of the United States could possibly have taken. The original bill did not require the court to believe the affidavits, did not require them to decide the case on affidavits alone, but if there happened to have been a deceased Postmaster-General or a deceased Army official of high and unquestioned character, whose deposition now cannot be taken but who made his affidavit in the time when that was the only way in which his evidence could be procured, the court should have the right to consider it.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I do not know why the Senator from Massachusetts should say that I am in favor of what is not an honest course or that I am inaccurate in stating what happened before. Now I ask, first, that the bill reported before be read and then I will state briefly just what action was had. I send it to the desk for that pur-

The Secretary read the bill (S. No. 346, Forty-fifth Congress, first session) referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, November 26, 1877.

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, submitted a report, (No. 18,) accompanied by the following bill; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

A bill referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the claim of Benjamin Holladay, now before Congress, for spoliations by hostile Indians, on his property, while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States; and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment, upon the affidavits and orders now before Congress, and such additional testimony as either party may present, to ascertain the amount of losses of property and expenses sustained by him as aforesaid, and render judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That the said court shall have the power, in its discretion, to cause the production for cross-examination of any witness whose affidavit is now before Congress.

Mr. KERNAN. It will be observed that the court is there asked and REMAIN. It will be observed that the court is there asked to adjudicate the case upon the affidavits and records on file and without saying certainly "and such additional testimony as either party may present." When that bill was up in the Senate attention was called to it, not by me, but by Mr. Christiancy, Senator from Michigan. I find in the RECORD, volume 7, part 2, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 1554, precisely what the motion was to amond. Mr. Christiancy said. amend. Mr. Christiancy said:

I shall therefore move to strike out in the twelfth line of section 1 the words "affidavits and," so as to leave all "orders" matters of evidence "and such additional testimony as either party may present" to ascertain the amount of loss. In fact my objection would be answered by striking out simply the words "affidavits. The Vice-President. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from-

The Vice-President. The question is on the amendment of the Michigan.

Mr. Christiancy. I should prefer to strike out still more, to make the bill read as follows:

"The same is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment upon such testimony as either party may present."

The Vice-President. The Secretary will report the amendment to the Senate.

The Chief Clerk. It is proposed in lines 12 and 13 of section 1 to strike out the words "the affidavits and orders now before Congress," and strike out the word "additional;" so that, if amended, the bill will read:

"The same is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment upon such testimony as either party may present."

Tacking it all to the court, whereas the former bill in the second Leaving it all to the court, whereas the former bill in the second section provided that the court in its discretion might require him to produce additional testimony. I am right about it. It will be found that it was discussed several days, and on page 1642 the amendment was adopted by a vote of 27 to 23. You will find later on, at page 1688, the resolution which the committee reported.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution:

The bill had been amended, making it a fit one to go to the Court of Claims, and it was then, on the motion of Mr. Mitchell, referred back to the committee in 1878-

Resolved, That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report to the Senate what amount, if any, is equitably due the claimant on account of his claim, and the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to take testimony.

That was done by the friends of the measure, those who knew much about it. I said then during that debate, as I say now, that I think the case ought to be sent to the Court of Claims. It involves a very large amount. The evidence which was before us then is not strengthened much now in regard to the horses and mules, and was entirely too loose to establish the exact loss. I think still that the claim should be sent to the Court of Claims because, as the first committee says, it is an important case and should be examined in a court where the Government will have an attorney present and where the witnesses can be produced and examined. Mr. Pease is not dead, I presume. At any rate he does not pretend to know anything about it that I can see from looking through this evidence. They asked men to give evidence. They named others who are living now; there may be some who are dead, but I do not remember any. I do not think such a course is delay, because there is now an effort to pass the bill and order the claimant to be paid this half million dollars in a lump. I have never seen a man in the Senate who was opposed to sending this case to the Court of Claims, with a fair bill that the claimant may get what he is entitled to receive. Lest I forget it, I ask that the amendment may be printed, as the bill will not be disposed of to-day

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The printing of the amendment will be ordered.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, some two years ago, at the suggestion of the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] who has just taken his seat that I should look into this matter and draw a bill to send the case to the Court of Claims, I took the papers to examine them with a view of drawing such a bill. I made a close investiga-tion of the papers, of the three different reports made by the three different committees, and instead of convincing myself that Holladay ought to go to the Court of Claims I convinced myself very thoroughly that Congress should pay him this money.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Arkansas will yield to me, I will move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. GARLAND. It that is the pleasure of the Senate, I have no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I make that motion.

Mr. KERNAN. My amendment will be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print the amendment has been made. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of D. T. Kirby was passed, for the purpose of moving an amendment which was overlooked in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST. In line 9 of the bill I move to strike out the words "to the same regiment," and in lines 10 and 11 to strike out the words "in said regiment" and insert "of infantry;" so as to read:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect D. T. Kirby; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said D. T. Kirby, late a captain, with the rank of captain, in any vacancy occurring in the grade of captain of infantry.

Mr. LOGAN. That amendment is correct. The bill was passed the other day without noticing the defect which the amendment corrects. The change the committee intended to make, but it was corrects. overlooked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to have an understanding in regard to the bill (S. No. 1210) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy. The bill was passed on the last day of the last session of Congress, and I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. My understanding with the committee was that if the Senate would agree to reconsider the bill and allow it to be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs so that they could re-report it to the Senate after examining the facts in connection with it, I should have no opposition to it. The Senator from California [Mr. Farley] who had charge of the bill agreed to that course, and the chairman of the committee also had no objection to it. If the Senate can agree to do that, I will ask that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered now, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FARLEY. There is no objection to that course.

Mr. FARLEY. There is no objection to that course.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 5, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By Thy good providence, Almighty God, we have been permitted to meet together to enter again upon our public labors. May it please Thee, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, to bless these Thy servants, the officers and members of this House, and to preserve them in good health, to enable them in the discharge of their duty to seek the highest good of the people whom they represent. May the blessing of Divine Providence abide upon our Chief Magistrate, upon all classes of our people, and all sections of our country. May God govern us; and may we, in righteousness, in justice, in peace and harmony, obey Thy will and keep Thy commandments. And to Thy name be all praise in Jesus Christ our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of Wednesday, December 22, 1880, was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to make a few remarks in the way of personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will pro-

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentieman will proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion which took place two days previous to the holiday adjournment, on House bill No. 5897, some remarks made by me on that occasion have been construed, I understand, as reflections upon the correctness and efficiency of the reporters or journal clerk, or both. Inasmuch as these gentlemen cannot be heard in their own defense on this floor, I deem it due to them and to myself to say that no such reflection was intended. To say that no mistakes are made by them is to suppose them to be more say that no mistakes are made by them is to suppose them to be more than human, but all who have given any attention to their work must acknowledge that, considering the confusion which sometimes takes place in this Hall, their work is done with marvelous correctness, and this opinion I have taken occasion to express frequently during my ten years' service in this House.

I wish also to say a word in reference to my utterances that day in the discussion upon that bill. When questioned as to whether the bill had been referred by the House to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and whether the bill reported back to the House from said committee was in every particular the bill discussed in committee, I answered both in the affirmative, and did so under a firm conviction that such was the case. It will be remembered that this bill was reported by the committee and placed on the Calendar, not at this but ported by the committee and placed on the Calendar, not at this but at the last session of Congress, some eight months ago, and that my statements were made entirely from recollection. The record kept in the document-room, showing what bills are introduced, by whom introduced, and the subject-matter of each bill, shows this bill to have been introduced by me. In addition to this, it is also a fact that the record of our proceedings and the Journal of the House do not agree in every particular, yet the manuscript copy of the bill, which was shown to me only an hour or two before the adjournment for the holidays, does not show any evidence of having been referred by the shown to me only an hour or two before the adjournment for the holidays, does not show any evidence of having been referred by the House to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I conclude, therefore, that the entry of the journal clerk is correct, and that the Journal as it now stands contains the history of the case as it occurred. My recollection of the consideration of the bill in committee, of its being reported from the committee to the House without amendment and placed on the Calendar without objection, and the authority of the committee to call it up for passage under a suspension of the rules, were all exactly as I stated; but on the question of the reference of the bill by the House, I am now inclined to believe my memory was at fault, and I have taken the first opportunity afforded me to make this statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that at the time he said the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] was mistaken, he did so upon the authority of the journal clerk; and a subsequent examination by the printing clerk and the journal clerk has shown that the statement of the journal clerk was correct. The Chair thinks it due to the offi-cers having charge of these matters to make this statement in corrob-oration of what the gentleman from Iowa has said; and the Chair is oration of what the gentleman from Iowa has said; and the Chair's very glad that the gentleman from Iowa has made this statement. Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ought probably to say that the chairman of our committee concurred with me in the opinion I expressed; so that I was not alone in my mistake.

The SPEAKER. Then both gentlemen were mistaken. Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins; and the regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

MELTING AND REFINING OF BULLION.

Mr. STEPHENS. By the unanimous direction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I report back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes so as to authorize a charge for melting or refining bullion when at or above standard. There will be no objection I think to the passage of the bill at this time, though perhaps it is not in order to ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. We had better hear the bill before consent is given. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3524 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out of said section the words "for melting and refining when bullion is below standard" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for melting or refining bullion." Mr. STEPHENS. I will state that this bill is reported upon the earnest request of the Director of the Mint. He was fully heard be-fore the committee, who have unanimously directed me to make this report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I must object. I dislike to do so; but I believe it is quite out of the regular order to consider bills during the hour devoted to reports; and I think we had better adhere to the regular

Mr. WILSON. The Director of the Mint and the whole Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures recommend this bill. I hope the gentleman will let it go through.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is simply on general grounds that I object.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN COMMERCIAL COMPANY.

Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1782) to incorporate the Foreign Commercial Company; which was laid on the table and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS DISTRICT IN MAINE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which has been already favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6451) to amend and re-enact sections 2517 and 2518 of the Revised Statutes, and changing the boundaries of a customs district in the State of

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there is no objection to the passage of this bill. I have been requested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Beale,] my colleague on the committee, who is not here now, to ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered at this time. Under the new rules the practice has been during the morning hour not to allow the consideration of any bill reported from any committee, because it would deprive other committees of the privilege of making reports. However, as there does not seem to be any matter pressing at present, the Chair submits the question to the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

of the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2517 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting after the word "sixty-nine," in the third line of the first clause of said section, the following words: "Excepting those towns, plantations, and townships lying on the line of the European and North American Railway;" so that said clause, as amended, shall read as follows:

"First. The district of Aroostook, to comprise the county of Aroostook as bounded on the 22d day of February, 1869, excepting those towns, plantations, and townships lying on the line of the European and North American Railway, in which Houlton shall be the only port of entry."

Also, that said section 2517 be further amended by inserting after the word "forty-seven," in the fourth line of the sixth clause thereof, the following words: "And the several towns, plantations, and townships in the counties of Aroostook and Washington lying on the line of the European and North American Railway;" so that said clause, as amended, shall read as follows:

"Sixth. The district of Bangor, to comprise the counties of Penobscot and Piscataquis and the town of Frankfort, in the county of Waldo, as bounded on the 3d day of March, 1847, and the several towns, plantations, and townships in the counties of Aroostook and Washington lying on the line of the European and North American Railway, in which Bangor shall be the port of entry and delivery, and Frankfort and Hampden ports of delivery."

SEC. 2. That the sixth clause of section 2518 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sixth. In the district of Bangor, a collector, who shall reside at Vanceborogh."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accord-

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, the committees having been called through, I ask now by unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill I reported this morning from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measure

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I made objection before, but as the House seems willing to entertain this by unanimous consent and as I have no personal objection, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to introduce a bill for reference?

Mr. STEPHENS. If my bill is disposed of, I shall move to reconsider and lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard no objection to its consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. If there be no objection, I ask by unanimous consent to introduce a bill (H. R. No. 6722) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States and to secure to the people of each State equal and just representation in the House of Representatives.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. KEIFER. That should be referred to the Committee on Elec-

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should be referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no Committee on the Census under our rules at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just called the Committee on the Census.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a special committee, and not one under the rules, as I understand it. It is a special committee, looking wholly and entirely to the taking of the census, and has nothing to do with working out the results which come from the census.

The SPEAKER. The practice heretofore has been to refer all questions relating to the taking of the census to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. KEIFER. The present rules are very different from the old rules in that respect, and I desire to say that I think the Chair is in error. Hitherto such bills have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; not to the Committee on the Census, but to the Committee on the Judiciary. My examination has taught me that. Now, under our rules, all legislation, (and that is the word used,) all legislation relating to the election of members of Congress must go to the Committee on Elections. It was not so formerly. The Committee on the Census is a mere committee for the purpose of providing tee on the Census is a mere committee for the purpose of providing legislation to take the census.

The SPEAKER. This provides for the apportionment of representation, and not for the election of members.

Mr. KEIFER. I so understand it. The SPEAKER. For apportionment of representation under the census just taken.

Mr. KEIFER. But the census is the basis of the representation. I desire to call attention to it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this subject has been before the Committee on the Census, and the practice heretofore has been universal to refer such bills to that same committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is where it belongs.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not so understand.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not so understand.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the Committee on the Census is a joint select committee of the two Houses, and that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] the chairman of that committee, is sick and absent from the city. He has no chance on behalf of that committee to set the matter right before the House.

committee to set the matter right before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no choice, so far as the reference of the bill is concerned, but I desire to say before the vote is taken that the pending proposition embodies also a provision for the election of members hereafter on what is known as the minority plan, authorizing the creation of congressional districts so as to permit the election of minority candidates. That feature of the bill should have consideration by some other committee than the Committee on the Census. Still I do not object to the reference of the bill to that committee, nor do I desire to prevent the members of that committee from considering this subject; but it seems to me it would be more appropriate to refer the bill to the Committee on Elections. I would like however, to have the sense of the House on that sphicet appropriate to refer the bill to the Committee on Elections. I would like, however, to have the sense of the House on that subject.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The Committee on the Census has already had referred to it, by order of the House, so much of the President's annual message as relates to this subject. I do not see, therefore, why the same subject should be considered by two committees of this House. It is already before the Committee on the Census.

Mr. M. H. H. H. We are unable to bear what is said on the flow.

Mr. KEIFER. We are unable to hear what is said on the floor.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to refer to the Committee on the Census. That is an amendment to the original motion made by the gentleman from Ohio, to refer to the Committee

Mr. LORING. I should like to ask where the bill has usually gone

Mr. LORING. I should like to ask where the bill has usually gone under such circumstances.

The SPEAKER. All matters relating to apportionment, so far as the Chair has read or observed, have come from the Committee on the Census. But the Chair may be wrong.

Mr. LORING. That is a joint select committee.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is a joint select committee especially having charge of matters relating to the census. An apportionment clause was reported in the census bill, was stricken out by the House, and there was a motion made to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary at that time, which was overruled by the House, and it was referred back to the Committee on Census as the appropriate committee by which the apportionment should be considered.

committee by which the committee of Census as the appropriate committee by which the apportionment should be considered.

Mr. BURROWS. I should like to inquire whether the Census Committee is not a joint committee?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is.

Mr. BURROWS. A select committee and joint committee of both

Mr. LORING. And appointed for this special purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the language of our present rule upon the subject. Rule XI provides

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating,

1. To the election of members—to the Committee on Elections.

1. To the election of members—to the Committee on Elections.

Now, if the Speaker will take notice, this bill proposes legislation which relates to the election of members. It does not refer to legislation looking to contests between members, but it relates to the election of members of the House, and according to the language of the rule to which I have just referred all such subjects must be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. There are existing laws which regulate the election of Representatives growing out of the Constitution of the United States.

States.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, but this is a law which proposes to regulate the election of members also, and it relates to the election as well as the apportionment of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no wish upon the subject, but desires to submit the question for the judgment of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no rule under which this can be otherwise referred. The language of this rule is absolute and admits of no doubt. The Census Committee was properly constituted as a joint committee, to which was referred all matters essential to taking the census, but it was not contemplated in the powers of that committee that it should take into consideration or that it should be entitled to consider legislation relating to the subjects proposed in this bill. to consider legislation relating to the subjects proposed in this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It has cognizance of matters relating to apportionment.

Mr. KEIFER. And if we refer this bill to that committee now we refer it to them in violation of the language and spirit of our own

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it is customary for this committee to have charge of the apportionment bill—and this relates to the apportionenarge of the apportionment bill—and this relates to the apportionment of members under the Constitution—and furthermore that the calculation upon which representation is based is made by the Secretary of the Interior, or, rather, by the Superintendent of the Census, who reports the result of the census to the House, and the House has generally referred the matter to the Census Committee and through that committee the subject-matter is reported to the House

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the very object of a census is not to provide a basis for apportionment?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly that is one of the purposes. But the committee is to take cognizance also of questions. growing out of the census and pertaining to the question of apportionment also.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, and incidentally to note the question of the gentleman from Illinois as to what the object of taking the census is: Whether, if they agree to the conclusion that the gentleman from Kentucky seems to have arrived at, if hereafter every particle of legislation based upon any fact found in the census returns is not also to go to the Census Committee for consideration? There may be a thousand questions raised out of the taking of the census besides the mere fact of furnishing the basis for the apportionment of members of Congress; and nishing the basis for the apportionment of members of Congress; and if there should be found a thousand subjects growing out of that census, is it their conclusion that all of these subjects shall go to that committee and to no other committee of the House, although the rules of the House specifically prescribe the legislation which shall go to these other committees? This committee was simply a joint committee, formed for the purpose of arranging the result of legislation of each branch of Congress for taking the census, and that only. There is nothing else in it. While we have committees that we understand are efficient in numbers, which are constituted by our rules, and to which all legislation is to be referred—all legislation—this is a mere transitory committee, having only a specific purpose, and having no further duties than are involved in that specific pur-

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it has not been customary to fix the apportionment in the passage of the bill and upon the report of the Committee on the Census until the ninth census was taken?

Mr. KEIFER. I have not pursued the subject far enough to be able to answer the question of the gentleman, but my impression is that the legislation came from the Committee on the Judiciary. The House referred the subject to that committee for action.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KEIFER. And not to the Census Committee at all.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The legislation was reported in the census bill, coming from the Census Committee, of which General Garfield was chairman. It was stricken out of the census bill by the House itself, and an attempt was made to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, but it failed, and the subject went to the Census Committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman is in error.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do not think I am.
Mr. KEIFER. My recollection is that the gentleman is entirely mistaken, and my examination has led me to reach an entirely different conclusion.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The Census Committee certainly

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The Census Committee certainly had that power.

Mr. KEIFER. Then it may be, Mr. Speaker, that the Census Committee at that time was differently organized and differently authorized from the present committee. I do not understand that this present committee has any power, or was intended to have any power, given to them excepting such power as was connected with legislation necessary for taking the census.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the original resolution to be read under which the ninth census was taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions; which were severally read, considered, and agreed to, viz:

Resolved, That a select committee of nine members be appointed to inquire and report to the House what legislation is necessary to provide for taking the ninth census as required by the Constitution; and that said committee have leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise; and that all papers and matters which are before the Select Committee on the Ninth Census of the Fortieth Congress referred to them be referred to the committee authorized by this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now cause to be read a report from that committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STOKES. by unanimous consent, from the Select Committee on the Census, reported a bill (H. R. No. 424) to provide for taking the ninth census of the United States and to fix the number of the members of the House of Representatives and to provide for their future apportionment among the several States; which was read a first and second time, and made the special order for Wednesday next, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which reference is made there became

Mr. KEIFER. That subject was specially referred to that committee at that time. But there is no such resolution providing for that reference now. On the contrary our new rule provides for the reference of all such matters to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SPEER. The new code of rules has changed the rule of procedure which was applicable at the time of the precedent just read by the Clerk; and the comparison of the old rule with the new will show that under the present code this bill properly goes to the Committee on Elections. The old rule was:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Elections to examine and report upon the certificates of election, or other credentials of the members returned to serve in this House, and to take into their consideration all such petitions and other matters touching elections and returns as shall or may be presented.

The new rule is entirely different and refers to matters of substantial legislation. It is as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating,

1. To the election of members—to the Committee on Elections.

Subjects relating to the election of members. Why, sir, this is a subject relating to the election of members, for two reasons: in the first place it is to provide an apportionment for the election of members; and in the second place it is impossible to escape the argument that this bill also provides for minority representation and a new system of elections. system of elections. As a matter of course, therefore, it is a subject relating to the election of members, and accordingly the bill should go to the Committee on Elections. The new rule is not restricted to the questions of contest and petition, &c., which, under the old rule, were referred to the Committee on Elections, but contemplates all subjects relating to the election of members, and this I submit, under the new rule, must be referred to that committee.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that we have a Committee on the Census, and if they do not have this bill to consider they have nothing else before them. The Committee on Elections, on the contrary, have as much before them as they can get along with. They have been engaged ever since the commencement of Congress in the consideration of contested-election cases, and they have not yet got through the cases referred to them.

I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] that when this subject was formerly under discussion, when General Garfield had charge of the census bill, on motion made by the chairman of the committee, this matter was referred to the Committee on the Ninth Census

Mr. KEIFER. At that time was there not a special resolution authorizing that committee to take charge of the matter of apportion-

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. As to that I cannot say.
Mr. KEIFER. Now there is not.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. But the matter, as I understand it, has already been referred to the Committee on the Census. That portion of the President's message relating to the question of apportionment has been referred to them.

When the proposition was made on a former occasion to take the matter out of the hands of the Census Committee it was because in the apportionment bill at that time there was an attempt made to matter out of the hands of the Census Committee it was because in the apportionment bill at that time there was an attempt made to scale under the fourteenth amendment the representation of those States which had any disqualification of voters except on account of rebellion or crime. It was therefore proposed to send it to the Judiciary Committee rather than to the Committee on Elections, for the purpose of inquiring how far Congress had the power to enforce such a law. Now, I understand that question does not arise, and cannot arise here. There may be involved in this bill matters which may go to half a dozen different committees, including, it may be, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Elections. But the question is whether the whole bill as it relates to apportionment ought not to go to the Committee on the Census as the appropriate committee. I think it ought, and I make the motion that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Census, to which this subject has hitherto been referred, and where it properly belongs.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the question of reference is put I wish to make some remarks with reference to the basis on which the bill has been prepared, and also in regard to the additional provision in reference to the election of members upon what is known as the principle of minority representation.

erence to the election of members upon what is known as the principle of minority representation.

I have provided in this bill for the election of the same number of members during the next decade that were elected to this House, namely, two hundred and ninety-three. I have taken the population which has been ascertained by the Commissioner of the Census, as will be seen by a letter from the Commissioner which I hold in my hand, giving the approximate statement of the population of the several States and Territories. I will not read it, but will have it printed as part of my remarks: printed as part of my remarks:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 4, 1881.

Washington, D. C., January 4, 1881.

Dear Sir: As requested, the inclosed approximate statement of population has been verified.

The figures, I believe, will come within five thousand, and probably within three thousand, of the final figures, which will be definitively reported as soon as correct returns are received from one or two remaining districts.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. A. WALKER, Superintendent of Census.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, House of Representatives.

CENSUS OF 1880-POPULATION OF STATES AND TERRITORIES.

The Superintendent of Census makes the following approximate statement of the population of the States and Territories:

Alabama	1, 262, 344	Missouri	2, 169, 091
Alaska		Montana
Arizona		Nebraska
Arkansas	802, 564	Nevada
California	864, 686	New Hampshire	347, 784
Colorado	194, 649	New Jersey	1 130 800
Connecticut	622, 683	New Mexico
Dakota	134, 502	New York
Delaware	146, 654	North Carolina
District of Columbia	177, 638	Ohio
Florida	266, 566	Oregon	174, 767
Georgia		Pennsylvania	4, 282, 738
Idaho	32, 611	Rhode Island	276, 528
Illinois		South Carolina
Indiana	1, 978, 358	Tennessee
Iowa		Texas	1, 597, 509
Kansas		Utah
		Vermont
Kentucky	940, 263
Maine	648, 945	Virginia Washington
Maryland	935, 139	West Virginia	75, 120
Massachusetts		West virginia	618, 193
Michigan	1, 783, 086	Wisconsin
		Wyoming	20, 788
Minnesota
Mississippi	1, 131, 899	Total	50, 152, 559

It will be seen that these figures are so nearly correct as to be reliable as a basis for apportionment, and not likely to vary after all corrections are made more than two or three thousand.

I will also have printed a table showing the population of each State, the number of full ratios to which each State is entitled, the number of fractions over that ratio, and the number of members to which each State will be entitled if this bill should pass. The statement is as follows:

States.	Population 1880.	Full ratios.	Fractions.	No. of members.
Alabama Arkansas California Colorado. Connecticut. Delaware Florida Georgia Illinois Indiana Iowa Kansas Kentucky Louisiana Maryland Maryland Massachusetts Michigan Minnesota Mississippi Missouri Nebraska Nevada New Hampshire New Jersey New York North Carolina Ohio Oregon Pennsylvania Rhode Island South Carolina Roonnesses	1, 262, 344 802, 564 864, 686 194, 649 652, 683 146, 654 296, 566 1, 538, 933 3, 078, 636 1, 978, 358 1, 694, 463 995, 335 1, 648, 599 940, 263 1, 634, 096 1, 634, 096 1, 634, 096 1, 634, 096 1, 131, 899 2, 109, 091 452, 432 62, 265 337, 782 1, 330, 892 5, 083, 173 1, 400, 000 3, 197, 794 174, 767 174, 767 174, 767 174, 767 174, 767 175, 528 995, 706	7 4 5 1 3 1 1 1 9 9 18 11 1 9 5 5 3 3 5 5 10 9 4 4 6 12 2 1 2 2 6 30 8 18 1 24 1 5	82, 858 128, 572 22, 196 23, 971 1117, 189 22, 451 45, 672 124, 880 107, 984 132, 117 97, 773 143, 451 98, 106 117, 614 106, 815 115, 944 106, 815 115, 944 106, 815 115, 944 106, 815 115, 944 106, 815 115, 944 116, 815 115, 944 116, 815 117, 614 117, 614 118, 904 119, 904 119, 904 119, 904 119, 904 118, 766 119, 904 118, 766 119, 904 118, 766 119, 904 118, 766 117, 030 118, 216	77 55 55 11 44 44 11 19 91 18 12 100 100 55 100 110 100 55 77 133 31 11 22 56 66

I also have a statement of the twenty-one highest fractions or those over 100,000, which will entitle the States named and having those fractions to additional members so as to bring the number up to 293. It is as follows, in the order named:

10	hio	164, 830	Indiana	124, 880
	irginia		Mississippi	120, 911
10	ermont	163, 788	Now Town
6	Crimone	100, 100	New Jersey	119, 904 outh Carolina
	ansas		Connecticut	117, 189
1 7	Iissouri			115, 436
A	faine	143, 451	West Virginia	112, 699
P	ennnsylvania	138, 786	Rhode Island	108, 030
	Visconsin		Iowa
	entucky		Minnesota
	rkansas			100, 010

States having large fractions, but below 100,000, but which would be entitled to one additional member each, in the order named, if the number of members should be increased over 293, are as follows:

Massachusetts		Alabama Texas	82, 858 81, 027
Louisiana	97, 773	North Carolina	52, 016
Maryland	372, 043	Illinois	45, 672

I have deducted from the whole population of the United States the population of the Territories and of the District of Columbia, which ought not to be included in an estimate in reference to the number of members of Congress. Taking out the population of those Territories and the District, I find that the population of the States of the Union amounts to 49,369,965. That amount divided by the number 293, the present number of members of the House, gives 168,498 as the ratio of population for one member of this House. Taking the population of each State and dividing it by that ratio will give the number of Representatives to which each State will be entitled upon full ratio, and the fractions over 100,000, which it is proposed shall entitled the States to additional members, will bring the whole shall entitled the States to additional members, will bring the whole number up to the full quota, 293.

There are two States which have fractions coming very near to 100,000, which States may be the subject of special consideration hereafter. The State of Massachusetts will have a fraction of 98,106, hereafter. The State of Massachusetts will have a fraction of 98,106, and Florida will have a fraction of 98,068. If Representatives are allowed to those States on account of such fractions, then the State of Florida will have two members, and Massachusetts will have her present number; and in that event the whole number of Representatives will be increased to 295. Otherwise Massachusetts would lose one member. I call attention to the losses and gains of the several States under the proposed bill, as follows:

The following States, by the bill which I have introduced, lose one member each: Alabama, Florida, Indiana, Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Hampshire, Ohio, Vermont, Tennessee. Pennsylvania loses two members.

New York loses three members.

The following States gain one member each: Arkansas, California, Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, South Carolina, West Virginia.

The following States gain two members each: Minnesota, Nebraska. The following States gain three members each: Kansas, Texas. One word now in reference to the principle of minority representation contained in this bill. It provides for dividing States having more than two members into districts having three members each, as far as possible. Where there shall be a fraction of two members then there will be a district having five members, and where there is a fraction of one member then there will be one district having one member. In each district of three members the voters will be en a fraction of one member then there will be one district having one member. In each district of three members the voters will be entitled to vote for but two members, thus securing absolutely to the minority one member. In districts having five members each voter would be entitled to vote for but three members. I state this for the purpose of calling the attention of members of the House to the fact that this bill embodies more than a mere apportionment, and relates to the election of members of this House upon a principle different from the one heretofore adopted. I therefore think the reference of this bill should be properly to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. STEPHENS. I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question shall be sustained, the House will be brought to a vote first upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Thompson,] to refer this bill to the Select Committee on the Census; should that amendment not prevail, the question will then be upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer,] to refer the bill to the Committee on Elections.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. The question was upon the motion of Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, to refer the bill to the Select Committee on the Census.

Mr. KEIFER. On that I call for tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KEIFER and Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were-ayes 94, noes 34.

No further count being called for, the motion of Mr. Thompson of Kentucky, was agreed to, and the bill was accordingly referred to the Select Committee on the Census, and ordered to be printed.

MELTING AND REFINING BULLION.

Mr. STEPHENS. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes so as to authorize a charge for melting and refining bullion when at or above standard.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken up, ordered to be engressed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6723) to amend sections 1244 and 1253 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the retirement of Army officers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. I now move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

the Whole for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That bill is not now in Committee of the Whole; it was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to report the bill to the House and to move its reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. And I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What effect will the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] have upon the special order of to-day, the funding bill?

Mr. CLYMER. The understanding was that the general appropriation bills should not be postponed for the funding bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. The order was that the funding bill should not interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. CLYMER. And I will state further that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] in charge of the funding bill is sick and cannot appear in the House to-day. He wrote me a note requesting me to go on to-day with the appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It does not displace the special order, the funding bill?

order, the funding bill \(\frac{7}{2} \)
The SPEAKER. It does not.
Mr. CLYMER. The funding bill is always subject to the appropriation bills.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 39, 1882, and for other purposes, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The points of order will be reserved.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLYMER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill. Pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to make that motion until the bill has been reached in Committee of the Whole.

The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole was agreed to

The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I can assure the committee that there is nothing in this bill save that which relates specifically and exclusively to appropriations for the support of the Army for the ensuing fiscal year. I believe that none of the items of the bill are new save one under the head of "pay," which provides, in general terms, for the payment of interest upon sums deposited by soldiers under the act of May 15, 1872, Revised Statutes, sections 1305 and

The amount recommended to be appropriated by it is $25,190,800. The amount appropriated for like purposes for the existing fiscal year is $26,425,800, making an apparent reduction in this bill upon the appropriations for the present fiscal year of $235,000. But, Mr. Chairman, there are in this bill reappropriations of balances of sums heretofore appropriated for the use of the Quartermaster's Department during the fiscal years 1879 and 1880, amounting to $564,714 25, which under existing law would lapse into the Treasury on the 1st day of July in 1881 and 1832 respectively, so that, with these reappropriations added to the total amount apparent upon the face of the bill, there is an actual increase of $329,714.25 upon the amount which by law has been appropriated for the support of the Army for the existing fiscal year.

law has been appropriated for the support of the Army for the existing fiscal year.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether the reappropriations made in this bill are not just the same as are made in the Army appropriation bill every year?

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct. It has been the practice to make reappropriations of unexpended balances, but I have made my statement broad and accurate for the reason that I do not wish to mislead the committee or the country as to the actual amount which will be required for the support of the Army during the coming fiscal year. This increase goes almost entirely to the Quartermaster's Department; for regular supplies, for incidental expenses, for purchase of horses, for transportation of the Army, for hire of quarters for troops, for repairs of hospitals, and for purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp equipage. I hold in my hand a statement, which I will incorporate with my remarks, that shows succinctly what is proposed to be done by this bill, and instituting a comparison between its provisions and those of the law for the present fiscal year:

By examination it will appear that there is no increase proposed over this year for the Commanding General's office, for expenses of recruiting, for contingent expenses of Adjutant-General's Office, or for the expenses of the Signal Service.

The amounts for the pay of the Army and mileage are the same as for the present year, although fifty men were added to the Signal Corps by the act of June last, and that for the first time provision must be made under the head of "Pay" for the interest due soldiers on deposits made with that Department, under the act of May 15, 1872, which provides that the Pay Department shall receive on deposit from soldiers money in sums not less than $5, which when they amount to $50 shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, principal and interest to be payable on the expiration of the term of enlistment. It will surprise many to be informed of the large enlistment. It will surprise many to be informed of the large amounts received and held by the Government in this way. In 1876 there was deposited $435,912.68; in 1877, $328,585.05; in 1878, $346,-243.94; in 1879, $370,770.38; in 1880, $477,174.44; making a total of $1,958,686.49.

For miscellaneous expenses there is a decrease of about four thousand dollars

For the Subsistence Department the amount is the same as for the present year.

For the Quartermaster's Department there is an apparent decrease of $236,000, but, adding the proposed reappropriation of $564,714.25, there is an increase of $328,714.25.

The only other increase in the bill, or change in amounts from the existing law, is the proposed addition of $5,000 to the appropriation for the testing reaching.

For the contingent fund we appropriate precisely the same amount as last year, $40,000; for the Medical Department also the same amount, $210,000; for the Engineer Department, $5,000; and for the Ordnance Department, $770,000, these amounts being in both cases those appropriated for the existing year.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that I have clearly stated wherein this bill differs from the existing law, and thereby explained its provisions fully. In its preparation great care was taken to examine the several bureaus or departments—Pay, Subsistence, Quartermaster's, and Surgeon-General's; and having examined the balances in each one of these bureaus which are turned in yearly to the Treasury, I cannot feel that the amounts appropriated for this year or the amounts proposed to be appropriated for the coming year are excessive in any case. I do not think it wise that in legislating for a great bureau such as the Pay Department of the Army we should so appropriate that the paymasters (of whom there are more than fifty throughout the country) will be at any time without means at their command.

I hold in my hand a statement showing the appropriations for pay of the Army and disbursements, from 1876 to 1880 inclusive. The statement of the disbursements for 1880 is incomplete. They will be quite as large as the previous years:

* Excess. + Surplus.

The largest surplus in the series of years has not amounted in any one to but little more than a quarter of a million of dollars; and one to but little more than a quarter of a million of dollars; and when you consider that this sum is distributed to every quarter of the Union, north and south, east and west, through the Territories and on both coasts, it is not a large margin; indeed I think it a necessary one; and while I believe that the amount proposed for pay for the ensuing year is possibly a quarter of a million in excess of what may be absolutely disbursed for that purpose, yet it is not in excess of the amount required by the necessities of the Department and for the convenience of the officers and soldiers who are to be noid.

of the amount required by the necessities of the Department and for the convenience of the officers and soldiers who are to be paid.

It is well understood by this committee that in each bureau of the War Department, save that of subsistence, all surpluses are after two years covered into the Treasury. Therefore, if the appropriation should be slightly in excess in any one year there can come to the Government no loss. Such an excess cannot be used upon the expenditures of the next or any subsequent year. An appropriation for 1882 cannot be used to meet expenditures incurred in 1883 or 1884, but can only be used to next of the next or appropriation the fiscal year for can only be used to pay bills contracted during the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made. It seems to me, sir, that after many years of practice and after a good deal of tribulation we have finally reached a system which saves this Government from anything like excessive expenditures at the mere will or whim of officers who distribute the public moneys. While our Army establishment as compared with similar establishments in different nations of the world seems to be costly, yet after a somewhat intimate acquaintance with its details and with an earnest desire to see if there might be some changes in practice which would lead to greater economy and less cost I confess to this committee that if there be opportunity for such reduction of expenditures it has not been within my ability to discover it. True, there might be great and ruthless reduction which would cripple and greatly impair the usefulness of the Army; but it would not be wise economy.

I will say, and it is only just I should say to this committee and to the country, that so far as I can discover the affairs of this great arm of the Government are economically and prudently administered. We make the law and they execute it, and it is my pleasure to be able to say, sir, that so far as I know the law is fully and fairly and honestly carried out. I must bear testimony, and it is an agreeable thing for me to be able to do it, to the fidelity and efficiency of each one having charge of its great bureaus.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if any member of the committee desires to ask me any questions which will more particularly demonstrate what is Now, Mr. Chairman, if any member of the committee desires to ask me any questions which will more particularly demonstrate what is contained in the bill, I shall be most willing and happy, so far as I am able, to answer him. Should no questions be asked, and if no one desires to engage in general debate, I will move the committee rise for the purpose of closing it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLYMER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be glad to hear the opinion of the representative of the committee upon this question. If I recollect aright, General Sherman would like to have the number of enlisted men in the Army raised to an extent to cover these general-service men and the Army raised to an extent to cover these general-service men and others who are charged to the Army but are not soldiers in any proper sense. They are clerks really, and ought to be taken out of the Army list and be so classified. There are a number of extra-duty men who are charged to the Army as private soldiers but who never perform any duty as private soldiers. The country supposes that the Army consists of 25,000 men, but take out clerks and those detailed to service and deing duty which might be decay by sivilings was reduced. consists of 25,000 men, but take out clerks and those detailed to service and doing duty which might be done by civilians, you reduce the actual fighting force of the Army to a very low figure. We cover more territory with it than ever before in the history of the country, from the Mississippi to the Pacific, and from the northern boundary of the Union to the southern. It has more duty to perform, and it is with great difficulty and at considerable expense in the way of transportation the Army is able to secure force enough to suppress Indian or other disturbances. It is a waste of money and a lack of true economy.

For example, let a force of two or five hundred Indians start out and frequently the most the commanding general can do is to start an equal number after them. It seems to be the theory of the country that we ought to make a fair fight of it, and the consequence often is a brush and the loss of five or ten or twenty men, whereas, if the com-manding officer had within his reach enough to send out a crushing force, they could avoid any fight whatever. I think we have been pursuing a false economy in this matter. I should like to answer the recommendation of the General so far at least as to give him enough to cover these non-combatants who ought to be classed among civilians. I should like to add 2,000 to the purely enlisted men of the Army, if there was any chance to do it, because I know it is accordingly the independent of the head was to be a second-

Army, it there was any chance to do it, because I know it is according to the judgment of the best and most patriotic men of the Army.

Mr. CLYMER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Connecticut I would say the subject to which he refers received careful consideration by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Hewitt, in the Forty-fifth Congress. During the first session of this Congress the question was again under consideration and excited much interest. I cannot but feel, when it is said the Army consists of 25,000 men, that great injustice is done to it, by the fact that a large number of persons enlisted as common soldiers are employed in various bureaus of the War Department, and at the several headquarters throughout the country, acting in the capacity of clerks. There are enlisted as common soldiers men whom it is never proposed shall carry a musket or do any military duty. My impression is, although I have not the figures before me just now, that in number they amount to over three hundred who are thus employed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to correct the gentleman; not at the headquarters, but regularly at work in the Surgeon-General's Office and elsewhere. They are not assigned to the staff at the headquarters of any general.

Mr. CLYMER. I mean to say there are, in the different bureaus of the War Department, and at the various headquarters throughout the country, in the different divisions of the Army, men employed in clerical service, and my impression is they number between three and four hundred. That is my impression. I may be understating, but I would rather choose to do that than to overstate it. This subject, as I have said, has attracted attention, and been investigated by gentlemen who have heretofore had this bill in charge, as well as by myself. We have all felt that it was an injustice to the Army that men who should be in the ranks are at the desks. It was a custom which grew up during the war, when pressing and urgent necessity required that men should be taken from the ranks and assigned to clerical duty. It continued subsequent to the close of the war. I think the only thing which warranted it in the minds of most gentlemen who have had to deal with this question is the fact that the services could be recovered character that the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the country of the services could be recovered to the services could b most gentiemen who have had to deal with this question is the fact that the services could be procured cheaper by detailing soldiers as clerks than by employing them as civilians. In other words, Mr. Chairman, if we provided the same amount of clerical force here and elsewhere, wherever these detailed and special service men are used, it would cost us much more to supply it by persons appointed from civil life to hold positions merely as clerks than to have those duties performed by persons not technically soldiers, but who are detailed for that preprices. detailed for that purpose.

It is true that some of them receive as high, I think, as $1,400 a year, but it is not true that any one of them or any considerable number of them receive anything like the amount which is paid for first-class clerks, though I doubt not in many if not in most instances we receive much better and more intelligent service from a soldier at $1,000 or $1,200 or $1,400 than we receive from many clerks borne upon the rolls as first or second class clerks.

The Appropriations Committee, Mr. Chairman, has not undertaken to remedy this thing, and we do not propose to do it in this bill even had we the power, which we have not under the rules. It is not the time nor are we the committee to attempt it.

In the future it presents a field for investigation and, in my judgment, for reform in the practice of the Government in this regard; and therefore, sir, I would advise the Committee of the Whole in this short session, so hear the close of the Forty-sixth Congress, that it leave the question as it finds it. In the future, as I have before intimated, I would gladly see those who are to follow us examine this question and do what is best for the Army and possibly just to the civil service of the Government at the same time.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

tion?

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly.
Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he can state to us about how many enlisted men are detailed in the various offices to which reference has been made and consequently away from their command on detached duty?

Mr. CLYMER. I will answer the gentleman immediately; I have sent for a statement which will give full particulars upon that subject, and I will then endeavor to give him the information he desires.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

proval of bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WARNER. I ask this question for the reason that this bill as reported from the committee carefully restricts the number of enlisted men to 25,000, while I observe—

Mr. CLYMER. That is the law.

Mr. WARNER. I observe that the officers for which appropriation is made are 16 brigadier-generals, which amounts to one brigadier-general for every 1,561 men; 68 colonels, or one colonel for every 360 men; 85 lieutenant-colonels, or one for about every 300 men; majors, 243, or one for about every 100 men, and a captain to about 40 men.

243, or one for about every 100 men, and a captain to about 40 men. It is plain to me that we have here too few men or too many officers; too much rank altogether for the Army that we have. While I do not claim this to be the place, Mr. Chairman, to enter upon a course of reform in this regard, yet I do think the attention of the committee ought to be called to this question.

Another matter, too, which is further on in the bill, I desire to call attention to. I observe that appropriations have been made for all specific objects named in the bill, and then a round sum of $1,000,000 is thrown in for incidental expenses. This appears on pages 6 and 7 of the bill. That seems to me to be a large sum for incidental expenses after everything has been already appropriated for. It reminds me very much of the estimates of a certain builder I once knew, who adopted the rule and followed it to appropriate a sufficient sum for everything that he could think of and name, and then put sum for everything that he could think of and name, and then put in twice as much for those things that he could not think of and whose names he had forgotten. It strikes me that this appropriation is in apparently that same spirit, and I would like, if it be possible, to get information from the committee upon the subject.

Mr. CLYMER. I may and possibly do agree with the gentleman Mr. CLYMER. I may and possibly do agree with the gentleman from Ohio that our Army is top-heavy at present, that for an Army of 25,000 men there are too many officers. But I do not know, sir, that that is the fault of the Army; it is the fault of the law; and if the law exists that requires this number of officers, and requires them to be paid, it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to make provision for their payment. We are not here to make laws under the rules of this House. It is for another committee to recommend legislation on that subject; and if that committee has, after earnest effort during the last two Congresses, failed to make a change in the law governing the Army, I do not think that it is their fault or that it is the fault of the Committee on Appropriations that that number has to be provided for. We have to deal as an appropri number has to be provided for. We have to deal as an appropriations committee with the law as we find it; and it would be denounced as rank injustice for us as a committee, if the law authorizes a certain number of officers, to fail to make appropriation for their pay; and in the discharge of my duty as a member of that committee, and in obedience to law, I do not propose to fail to do so. Hence it is that we have had to appropriate this amount. If the law is unwise which makes the number, it is in the power of this House to change it.

Mr. WARNER. I recognize the justice of the gentleman's remarks there; but I think it is a very fit time in this connection to call the attention of the House to the subject, and I would like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania state to the committee the number of retired officers for whom appropriation is made.

Mr. CLYMER. There cannot be by law over four hundred. The number is dependent somewhat on the President; he may decrease

Mr. MAGINNIS. There are now three hundred and eighty-one on the retired list.

Mr. WARNER. Are they generally of the highest rank?

Mr. CLYMER. They are from lieutenants up.

Mr. HAWLEY. The retired list embraces all ranks.

Mr. MAGINNIS. They ought to be of the highest rank, but they are not.

Mr. CLYMER. I think it is matter of regret to the country that many officers of the higher ranks who should be retired are still in the service. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] seems to complain of one of the divisions of appropriation in the Quartermaster's Bureau, the one providing for the incidental expenses. As to that, I do not think the bill could be more definite than it is in its enumeration of these matters of expenditure. They are set forth with particularity, and I would pledge my word for it that every dollar is spent with honesty and due regard to the object for which it was appropriated. General Meigs, the Quartermaster-General, has earned a name that will be resplendent for its honesty so long as the country has an army worthy of a record. Surely the necessity for these expenditures exists or they would not be estimated for; and I have no hesitation as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, while not giving him everything, yet trying to deal so fairly by him that one of his just disposition who estimates so accurately the cost shall not be disappointed in his just expectation as to the amount he deems necessary to do what he believes to be right and necessary for the Army. In these incidentals there are appropriations for postage and telegrams or dispatches. I campot, and neither can the Quarter-Army. In these incidentals there are appropriations for postage and telegrams or dispatches. I cannot, and neither can the Quartermaster General, anticipate what amount will be needed for purposes of that kind. Then he has to pay for the erection of temporary barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals at different points. He must give extra pay for that, and it is not in his power to say what the exact amount will be. Then, sir, expresses have to be sent in times of Indian wars and trouble from different frontier posts to the armies in the field. Who can say accurately what those will cost or what the emergencies will be on such occasions? Then he has to send his paymasters all over the West and through the Territories and to inaccessible points. Having vast sums of money they must have escorts. Who can say precisely what this will cost?

All these items can only be determined relatively by comparison—taking a series of years and ascertaining an average. And that has taking a series of years and ascertaining an average. And that has taking a series of years and ascertaining an average. And that has been done; because I have seen, as other gentlemen may see, and I can present to them, the balances which, from year to year, have remained under this head to be paid into the Treasury; and I can assure the committee that they are so meager that the only wonder to me is that there have not been deficiencies in this particular item. Veterinary surgeons have to be employed. Medicine has to be provided for horses and mules. Rewards have to be offered for the apprehension of deserters, and they have to be delivered to headquarters. And so, Mr. Chairman, there are numberless items of expense under And so, Mr. Chairman, there are numberless items of expense under the head "incidental" that no man can accurately estimate. They the head "incidental" that no man can accurately estimate. They are not fixed by law, yet they are absolutely necessary to the well-being and to the efficiency of the Army; and the best we can do is to take the judgment of some skilled and honest officer and abide by his judgment, and to feel satisfied that if the amount is not required it will be returned to the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to give my judgment of the little of the treasury and the state of the treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to give my judgment of this bill before taking my seat it would be that it has been reduced not by myself but by those who have gone before me at successive stages in the history of the legislation of this House during the last five or six years to about the lowest sum with which it is possible to maintain the Army. That is my judgment. The experience of the past has demonstrated it. Therefore I shall commit the bill to the committee with entire confidence that its provisions will be found to be just and right, and that the country will not suffer from their adoption.

If there is no other gentleman who desires to address the commit-there is no other generalian who desires to address the committee, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House limiting general debate.

Mr. WARNER. Before that is done I would like if the gentleman at some time during the discussion would give us the number of private soldiers detailed on extra duty in connection with the various departments.

ons departments.

Mr. CLYMER. I have a paper containing that information, furnished me last year, and when we come to that portion of the bill I will, if reminded of it, gladly furnish it to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] that the committee now

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1832, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon. thereon.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to one minute.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, and Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the Army appropriation bill; and by order of the House all general debate upon the bill has been limited to one minute. If no further general debate is desired, the Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1882, as follows:

For expenses of the Commanding General's office, $2,500.

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $75,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, including Indian scouts and bospital stewards; and thereafter there shall be no more than 25,000 enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained, as now organized and as provided by law, with a force of enlisted men not exceeding 500.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe I will test the sense of the Committee Mr. HAWLEY. I believe I will test the sense of the Committee of the Whole by an attempt to increase the number of enlisted men in the Army. I therefore move to amend the last paragraph read by the Clerk by striking out "25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "26,000" as the number of enlisted men in the Army.

Mr. CLYMER. I reserve all points of order upon that amendment. Mr. HAWLEY. My opinion is that there is no law, except such as is made by successive appropriation bills, each year for itself, in relation to the number of enlisted men in the Army. I therefore think that my motion is not subject to the point of order that it "changes" that my motion is not subject to the point of order that it "changes existing law and is not in the interest of economy."

My object is sufficiently understood by those gentlemen who heard what I said before upon the subject. The Army, for certain effective services west of the Mississippi River, is now too small. It is charged with 25,000 enlisted men; but it is inevitable that an army of 25,000 men must have a very large fraction of its enlisted men incompetent for active service.

It is the habit of some gentlemen to frequently point to the fact that enlisted men are detailed as clerks around generals' quarters, &c., as if there were more men for that service than was necessary. There are some men detailed for that purpose. Considering the clerical duty at the different headquarters, commencing, if you will, at the company headquarters and passing up through battalions and divisions, &c., you find that nearly all grades of officers require enlisted men for clerical duty, and it is the cheapest service that you can employ

In addition to that, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLY-MER] has stated, and as every man familiar with the service knows, there has grown up a habit of detailing enlisted men for extra duty, putting them upon a class of labor that might well be performed by civilians, and which should be classed with that done by civilians. Now, there is no fraud about that, and no wastefulness so far as I know. There are several hundreds of men in this city who are nominally enlisted men; men who go through the form of enlistment but never put on the uniform, never go through any physical examination to show that they are fitted for soldiers. They are in name only enlisted men and go directly on service here as clerks. So far as I know they are first-rate clerks, and I know some of them personally.

I doubt, however, if there is much economy in employing such men for that service, because by an ingenious system of allowances their pay is brought up to nine hundred, ten hundred, eleven hundred or more dollars per year, for which amount competent civilian clerks could be obtained. It is not a wrong, but it is the custom to have men nominally enlisted detailed for clerical duty, and who are in reality clerks. They are all charged to the Army.

Now, at all the forts along the coast there must be a few men to keep the gates closed and the forts in order, others are in the arsenals, others in charge of various classes of property, so that this number of 25,000 enlisted men really serving as soldiers is reduced many thousands, I will not say how many, when you come to anything like effective service. It is unfair to charge the Army as an army with that number of men, with these men who are performing purely clerical work in time of peace.

Now, we are liable to have Indian and other disturbances at any point from our northern frontier down to Mexico, from the Mississippi belt to the Pacific. In all this vast region difficulties with the Indians may arise. Our posts are almost innumerable. They have grown tenfold within twenty years. There are from five to fifty or one hundred men at many of these posts. When an Indian raid breaks out the general in command must exert his wits to the utmost to out the general in command must exert his wits to the utmost to gather up the necessary force of men in squads of ten, fifty, or one hundred taken from different posts. And somebody must be left at each of these posts for the care and defense of the public property. Then the commanding general must put the railroads into requisition. His men in the middle of winter may have to march two, three, or four hundred miles until he has accumulated a force sufficient to match that of the Indians who are making the raid; and perhaps he must meet them about man for man. This is not the way to conduct war. It is cruelty; it is almost murder. The general in command when he knows that there is a raid of two hundred Indians, for instance, ought to be able to bring against them five hundred or six when he knows that there is a raid of two indicated indicats, in instance, ought to be able to bring against them five hundred or six hundred or eight hundred men. Then perhaps there would be no fight at all. That is true economy. But we seem to have gone upon the ground that in order to make a fair thing of it we ought to make our force about the same, man for man, as that of the Indians; and our force about the same, man for man, as that of the Indians; and in that case there is generally a fight.

I would be in favor of an additional force of 5,000 men; but I propose 1,000 just now, because this number, properly distributed, would compensate for a part at least of the detached men, and be of very valuable assistance to General Terry on the north, General Schofield and General Augur and our other military commanders on the frontier. I think that my motion ought to be adopted.

Mr. CLYMER. I make the point of order that the law now fixes the number of men for the Army; that this amendment changes that the number of men for the Army; that this amendment changes that law, and is not in the direction of retrenching expenditures.

Several MEMBERS. "Too late!"

The CHAIRMAN. The right to make the point of order was reserved. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay Department:

For pay of the Army: For one General, one Lieutenant-General, three majorgenerals, sixteen brigadier-generals, thirty-nine aids-de-camp, in addition to pay in the line, sixty-eight colonels, eighty-five lieutenant-colonels, two hundred and forty three majors, three hundred and twelve captains mounted, three hundred and six captains not mounted, thirty-four chaplains, twenty-one storekeepers, forty adjutants, forty regimental quartermasters, adjutant and quartermaster of Engineer Battalion, in addition to pay in the line, two hundred and two first lieutenants mounted, three hundred and sixty first lieutenants not mounted, one hundred and forty-eight second lieutenants mounted, three hundred and five second lieutenants not mounted, one hundred and eighty acting assistant commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in line, to officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted, to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington, and to the examiner of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War; additional pay to officers for length of service, be paid with their current monthly pay; pay to enlisted men for length of service, payable with their current monthly pay; retired officers; enlisted men of all grades, not exceeding 25,000 men; five hundred enlisted men of the Signal Corps; the allowances for travel, retained pay, and clothing not drawn, payable to enlisted men on discharge; one retired ordnance sergeant; and for interest on deposits of enlisted men, $11,548,601.55.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wanted to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wanted to say a word on the point of order. I was not aware that the decision had been made.

Mr. CLYMER. It is too late for the gentleman to raise the point now.

Mr. HAWLEY. There was a sort of snap judgment on me. I decidedly wish to argue the point of order. I thought the Clerk was reading from some old statute to justify the point of order. I can knock the gentleman's point of order sky high.

Mr. CLYMER. The decision has been made. Let the Clerk read. Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Clerk was reading from the existing law which it was claimed my motion would change.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced his decision very clearly, and no exception was taken to it. The Clerk then resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I will offer another amendment. I move, in line 50, to strike out "five" and insert "six." so as to allow the enlist-

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I will offer another amendment. I move, in line 50, to strike out "five" and insert "six," so as to allow the enlistment of 26,000 men.

Mr. CLYMER. A point of order has already been made on that amendment and sustained.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The law on this subject is contained in the second section of an act making appropriations for the year 1871. It is a permanent provision of law adopted in 1870 and put into an appropriation bill. I read it:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, on or before the 1st day of July. 1871, to reduce the number of enlisted men in the Army to 30,000; and thereafter there shall be no more than 30,000 men enlisted in the Army at one time, unless otherwise authorized by law.

Now, as I understand, the provisions in subsequent appropriation bills agree substantially in their tenor. Appropriations are made for 25,000 men, and it is provided that the money shall not be used to pay more than 25,000. But nowhere, since the law I speak of was enacted, has Congress established 25,000 as the permanent limit of by the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have read the provision which I claim to be the only permanent statute on the subject, a provision contained in the bill for the support of the Army for the year 1871. In subsequent appropriation bills for 1875 and other years I find such a provision as

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, including Indian scouts.

This I understand to be the substance of the provisions in successive annual appropriation bills. There has never been any provision changing the law which fixes 39,000 as the legal limit of our Army. We have simply appropriated money sufficient for 25,000 men. My motion to increase the force from 25,000 to 26,000 is in accordance with motion to increase the force from 25,000 to 26,000 is in accordance with law. I have a right to move an amendment fixing any number not exceeding 30,000. Twenty-five thousand is simply an arbitrary figure fixed from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending bill contains this provision:

And thereafter there shall be no more than 25,000 enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law.

any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law.

The Chair wishes to inquire whether this provision is not copied from some other appropriation bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I take it that is new. That is the result of my investigation, at all events.

Mr. CLYMER. It has been the same for years.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not so informed.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has been the language for many years before 1870. It is the language of the Revised Statutes fixing that there shall not be in the Army more than 30,000 enlisted men, but the law of last year and for years before reduced the number to 25,000 men, and this is strictly in conformity to the law, as I think I can show the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the gentleman can find that there is any permanent law to that effect. There may be, as I have said, a temporary law in an appropriation bill, but no permanent law. If he can show me any law for it anywhere, of course his point is good.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not concede that the point of order is determined or that what has been advanced here is very material as far as this point of order is concerned; but as this has become a question of history it may be interesting. By the act of 1870 in the Army appropriation bill of July 15, for that year, it was provided that the President is hereby authorized and directed on or before the 1st day of July, 1871, to reduce the number of the Army to 30,000 enlisted men, unless otherwise authorized by law.

day of July, 1871, to reduce the number of the Army to 30,000 enlisted men, unless otherwise authorized by law.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is exactly it, but where is the law that reduces the number to 25,000?

Mr. CLYMER. That, Mr. Chairman, reduced the Army from its excessive proportions after the close of the civil war down to a peace footing. In 1874, when Mr. Blaine was Speaker of this House and Mr. Garfield was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the present Vice-President of the United States had charge of the Army appropriation bill, the Army was reduced from 30,000 to 25,000 men.

Mr. HAWLEY. For that year?
Mr. CLYMER. And ever since that time the number has been limited to 25,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to call his attention to the Army appropriation bill that was passed last year. That reads as follows:

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid-

Mr. HAWLEY. Exactly; for that year. Mr. BLOUNT.

for recruiting the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, including the Indian scouts and hospital stewards, and thereafter there shall be no more than 25,000 enlisted men in the Army at any one time unless otherwise authorized by Mr. HAWLEY. That probably will sustain the point of order, but it has succeeded in keeping down the force on the frontier.

Mr. CLYMER. And that was done by the gentleman's own friends when they were in power; the Army was cut down in that way.

Mr. HAWLEY. I remember that point very well; it has been made before.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to offer an amendment to the present paragraph. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word service in line 47:
"And the actual time of service in the Army and Navy of the United States, or in both, shall be allowed to all officers in computing their pay and length of service."

"And the actual time of service in the Army and Navy of the United States, or in both, shall be allowed to all officers in computing their pay and length of service."

Mr. CLYMER. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some confusion in the matter of ascertaining the pay of officers on account of length of service. Some officers have been transferred, especially in the medical force, from the Navy to the Army, and some from the Army to the Navy. In that way, under the present construction of the law, they have lost the benefit to which they were entitled by their length of service; that is to say, the benefit that extended to officers who have served a certain length of time, and which is received by officers who are transferred from the Marine to the Navy, or from the Navy to the Marine service, and who are allowed pay in accordance with their length of service. Now, the same rule which benefits them, or gives them simply their rights in that respect, should apply here. Under the present construction of the law many officers in the military service who are entitled to the benefit of increased pay from length of service are entirely deprived of it by reason of the want of adequate legislation. Many of these have been transferred from one service to the other, and they ought to be allowed their pay and have the benefit of that length of service. I trust there will be no objection to this, which seems to be simply a matter of right and justice.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio the question whether, if this amendment is adopted, it will not increase the total amount of the bill?

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly the effect of it will be to slightly increase the total amount of the bill but it is simply an act of instice.

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly the effect of it will be to slightly increase the total amount of the bill, but it is simply an act of justice.

Mr. CLYMER. Then undoubtedly it is my duty to make the point of order against it.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think it is the gentleman's duty to object to a matter so obviously just as this is, and I hope he will not insist to a matter so obviously just as this is, and I hope he will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania as insisting upon his point of order?

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly. I am compelled to insist upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. It does not undertake to repeal any law, nor does it undertake to amend any law; it simply corrects what is now an abuse, and it gives the construction that is just and proper to the law, so as to enable these officers to derive the benefit of their length of service. of service.

Mr. CLYMER. I sympathize just as much as the gentleman from Ohio with any case of hardship that may arise under this or any other bill. But I have simply before me the duty, with which I am intrusted by the committee, of objecting to anything which will increase the total amount of this appropriation and which is not warranted

Mr. KEIFER. The law in its spirit does warrant this. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow the sense of the committee to be taken upon this question, at all events. Mr. CLYMER. I must insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being insisted upon, the Chair is bound to decide that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment at this point. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to an amendment which I believe will meet with the approval of the committee.

Insert on page 3, in line 56, the following:
"And the allowance for commutation of quarters to the Lieutenant-General shall be $100 per month."

Mr. CLYMER. My duty is to reserve the point of order. Does the gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. MAGINNIS. I do not care to be heard if the point of order is insisted on. I understood the committee agreed to the amendment.

Mr. CLYMER. I am only insisting on the point of order under a stern sense of duty. I feel that this is an amendment that ought to be adopted, and if I could get rid of the point of order I would be

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then you should not make the point of order yourself.

Mr. CLYMER. I must.
Mr. HAWLEY. The committee are all in favor of the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. WARNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 49, after the words "retired officers," insert:

Provided, That no officer on active duty in the field shall be retired without his consent."

Mr. CLYMER. I reserve the point of order. Mr. WARNER. I would like to be heard on that amendment. Mr. WARNER. I would like to be heard on that amendment. I do not think any point of order can lie against it; and I am induced to offer the amendment in view of the late retirement of a distinguished and gallant officer, who has been in service in the field most of the time since the war, and who was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general at the beginning of the war on his merit as a soldier, and who fairly won all his promotions during the war in the field; and I confess, Mr. Chairman, that on this subject I have some personal feeling, as General Ord, to whom I allude, was my first brigade commander, and I know something of him as a soldier, and it is well understood that he did not desire retirement at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WARNER. I thought it was not insisted on.
Mr. CLYMER. I thought it was not insisted on.
Mr. CLYMER. I insist on the point of order, and desire that the discussion shall be confined to that. The gentleman provides by his amendment that officers shall not be retired without their consent.

That changes existing law.

Mr. WARNER. My amendment provides that they shall not be retired without their consent if on active duty in the field. This changes the law, but certainly it does not increase expenditures. It retains an officer in the service in the field instead of placing him on the retired list and paying him for no duty; in other words, it requires services for pay.

Mr. CLYMER. Will the Clerk be kind enough to report the amend-

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CLYMER. That amendment is clearly within the point of order. The law now is that an officer must be retired at a certain age. Under this amendment he could not be retired without his consent although above that age. The cost therefore would be greater to the Government, and the amendment is not in the interest of economv

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. WARNER. I move, then, to amend the bill by striking out the words "retired officers," in line 49; and I wish to speak to that amendment.

I was induced, Mr. Chairman, to offer the amendment which has twas induced, Mr. Chairman, to offer the amendment which has been ruled out of order in view, as I stated, of the late retirement of a distinguished general officer who was on active duty on the frontier and who did not wish to be retired. I regard General Ord's retirement under the circumstances and against his will as unjust to him and injurious to the service. I think the discrimination made against General Ord and in favor of an officer older than General Ord, and one who was one of the oldest brigade commanders. I believe on the list, and was one of the oldest brigade commanders, I believe, on the list, and who has no such record of successful service to sustain him as supports General Ord's claim to the consideration of his country, to be unjust to him. It is believed, too, that the selection for retirement in this case was not made on purely military considerations, but that political considerations had quite as much to do with it. If that be true, ical considerations had quite as much to do with it. If that be true, I think it ought to be known. I think it due to General Ord and to the country that it should be known that a deserving officer has been retired, not at his request nor for the good of the service, but from political considerations. I do not desire to speak disparagingly of the merits of General McDowell, but his name certainly stands unfortunately connected with events that shed no luster on him or the country, while General Ord's services, during the war and since, both on the western frontier and the Mexican border, deserve commendation and not the ingratitude of early retirement.

I wish in this connection and in support of what I have said, Mr. Chairman, to refer to an interview reported to have been held with the desk and ask to have read the paragraph I have marked.

Mr. HUNTON. Does the gentleman from Ohio know if that interview was actually held?

Mr. WARNER. It is reported to have been held, and I believe it

The Clerk read as follows:

Well, I have the highest regard for General Garfield as a large-hearted, whole-souled, splendid man, who would not commit an act of palpable injustice, and also for General Hayes, who I believe to be of too kindly and just a disposition to do a deliberate wrong, but I have been told that politics had something to do with it; that General McDowell came here to New York to vote for General Garfield in a very ostentations manner, while General Ord did not do that.

Mr. WARNER. It is reported elsewhere also that General McDowell drew his mileage. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if that is included in this appropriation.

Mr. CLYMER. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio that the mileage was appropriated last year, and who is drawing it this year we have no means of knowing. I Ohio does not insist on his amendment. I presume the gentleman from

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to know if the gentleman from Ohio states as a fact that General McDowell did draw mileage on the occasion referred to.

Mr. WARNER. I stated that it was reported that he had drawn mileage

Mr. KEIFER. Did you state it as a fact?
Mr. WARNER. Oh, no; I was careful to state it as being so reported

Mr. KEIFER. Then you expect to enlighten us with statements based on common rumor without reference to the fact?

Mr. WARNER. I asked for information. Possibly the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] may be able to give us some information on the subject. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

For miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of one hundred and twenty-five contract surgeons and two hundred hospital matrons; extra-duty pay to enlisted men for service in hospitals; pay of fifty-four paymasters' clerks and fourteen veterinary surgeons; hire of paymasters' messengers, not to exceed fifteen thousand dollars; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; compensation of citizen clerks and witnesses attending upon military courts and commissions; travel expenses of paymasters' clerks; commutation of quarters for officers on duty without troops at places where there are no public quarters; and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1882, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act, $547,198.45.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding to it the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the allowance for commutation of quarters to the Lieutenant-General shall be $100 per month.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve all points of order upon that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk read the following:

The Clerk read the following:

Subsistence Department:

For subsistence of 25,000 enlisted men, 120 additional half-rations for sergeants and corporals of ordnance, enlisted men of the Signal Service, women to companies, (laundresses,) 2,065 civilian employés, 125 contract surgeons, 220 hospital matrons, 75 military convicts, and 500 prisoners of war, (Indians,) in all, 10,668,220 rations, at twenty-cents each; for difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men and for enlisted men and recruits, at recruiting stations, and for cost of hot coffee and cooked rations for troops traveling on cars; for manual for Army cooks; for subsistence stores for Indians visiting military posts, and Indians employed without pay as scouts and guides, $2,250,000; of which amount $300,000 shall be available from and after the passage of this act for the purchase of stores necessary to be transported to distant posts in advance of the 30th of June, 1881: Provided, That to the cost of all stores and other articles sold to officers and men, except tobacco, as provided for in section 1149 of the Revised Stautes, 10 per cent. shall be added to cover wastage, transportation, and other incidental charges, save that subsistence supplies may be sold to companies, detachments, and hospitals at cost prices, not including cost of transportation, upon the certificate of an officer commanding a company or detachment, or in charge of a hospital, that the supplies are necessary for the exclusive use of such company, detachment, or hospital.

Mr. CLYMER. By direction of the Committee on Appropriation.

Mr. CLYMER. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I offer an amendment to come in at the close of the paragraph just

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further. That the cost price of each article shall be understood in all cases of sales to be the invoice price of the last lot of that article received by the officer by whom the sale is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the proviso in the printed bill, and inserting in lieu thereof that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all stores and other articles sold to officers at any post or station west of the Mississippi River shall be sold at cost prices exclusive of the cost of transportation, and whenever there is Government fuel for issue on hand at such post or station, officers of the Army thereat on duty shall be permitted to draw for their own use their proper allowance, free from cost, in accordance with the regulations of 1863.

Mr. CLYMER. I must insist upon the point of order in regard to that amendment, that it changes existing law and is not in the direc-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law on the subject?

Mr. CLYMER. It changes existing law.
The CHAIRMAN. In what respect?
Mr. UPSON. Wherein does it change existing law?
Mr. CLYMER. In the very proposition to allow the cost of transportation to be taken off absolutely. The law now is that 10 per cent. is to be added to the cost of the material in place of any amount for transportation. for transportation.

Mr. UPSON. There is no general law to that effect.
Mr. CLYMER. You will find that provision in the appropriation

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the next paragraph; but, before concluding,

Mr. UPSON said: Do I understand that the Chair has ruled upon my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order upon the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] that the amendment proposed to change existing law.

Mr. UPSON. Then I will offer another amendment to strike out

Mr. CISOR. Then I was called another another the whole proviso.

Mr. CLYMER. I must insist upon the rule that we cannot go back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take no advantage of the gentleman from Texas. If the gentleman states that he intended to offer this amendment before the Clerk had proceeded to read, the Chair will go back. But if the amendment was an afterthought the Chair holds that it comes too late and that the committee cannot go back.

Mr. UPSON. I did not know that the Chair had decided the point of order at all

Mr. BLOUNT. The Clerk has read half way through the next paragraph.

Mr. UPSON. I intended to offer this amendment if the other was not adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following: The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing and camp and garrison equipage from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of elivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms from the founderies and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies, and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require it to be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads and for removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops in the field, $4.114,000.

Mr. CLYMER. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLYMER. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in after the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds due them for transportation, $125,000.

Mr. CLYMER. That is an estimate furnished by the War Department. When this bill was first reported to the House it did not contain this item, for the reason that the Committee on Appropriations, not having examined the subject, was not certain whether it was necessary to make the appropriation or not. On further examination we are unanimously of the opinion that it is necessary to insert a clause of this kind in this bill.

we are unanimously of the opinion that it is necessary to insert a clause of this kind in this bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I would inquire of my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CLYMER] if this item has ever been incorporated in any previous appropriation bill?

Mr. CLYMER. Never before.

Mr. ATKINS. And it is proposed now in consequence of a recent decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. CLYMER. Which decision is to the effect that our law of 1874 (I think that is the date) prohibiting any payment by the Government to land-grant railroads for transportation over them is not operative and that notwithstanding that law we are obliged to pay those railroads 50 per cent. of the cost of the transportation over them. That act was passed in 1874, and from that time to 1879 no appropriations were made to pay the bills of land-grant railroads against the United States for transportation. By the act of March 3, 1879, the sum of $300,000 was specially appropriated to pay 50 per cent. of the then existing indebtedness of the United States to these land-grant railroads; and the amount was expended in pursuance of that appropriation. Subsequently there has been a judicial decision, first by the Court of Claims and then by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company vs. The United States. In the decision of the Supreme Court upon these cases, which will be found in the third volume of Otto's Reports, the court determines that 50 per cent. is the amount which the Government must pay. We can refuse to make the appropriation; but it would only put these railroad companies to the amount which the Government must pay. We can refuse to make the appropriation; but it would only put these railroad companies to the cost of suit, in which recovery must be had against us. The Quartermaster-General estimates that during the coming fiscal year the bills for these expenses will run up to about $300,000, and therefore 50 per cent. of that amount, $150,000, is necessary to be appropriated for paying debts which we shall incur to these railroad companies during the next fiscal year. This recommendation of the Quartermaster-General is made in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in the cases to which I have referred.

Mr. WARNER. What railroad companies will receive this money?

Mr. CLYMER. There are a great many of them; I cannot enumerate them. They are all the land-grant railroads over which we send troops, including, among others, the Pacific Railroads and the roads I have mentioned.

Mr. WARNER. Let the amendment be read again.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The amendment was adopted. The Clerk read as follows:

And the unexpended balances of the several appropriations for the different bureaus of the Quartermaster's Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, are hereby reappropriated and made available for the use of said bureaus for like purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, to those for which they were originally appropriated.

Mr. CLYMER. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 197 and 198, the words "of the several appropriations for the different bureaus of" and inserting "under the several heads of appropriations for." This is merely a formal amendment.

The amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I also move to amend by striking out, in line 202, the word "bureaus" and inserting the word "Departments."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

United States testing-machine:
For caring for, preserving, using, and operating the United States testing-machine at the Watertown arsenal, $10,000.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to amend by adding to the clause just read the following:

Provided, That the tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes shall be continued by a board of officers appointed to that duty; and an annual report thereof shall be made to Congress.

Mr. CLYMER. I make a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Ohio desires to be heard, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to be heard on the point of order. In addition I might make the point of order that the clause in the bill is not in order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to be heard on the point of order. In addition I might make the point of order that the clause in the bill is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order against the clause, if sustained, would carry the amendment with it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire that they shall stand or fall together.

Mr. CLYMER. I will state that the clause in the bill is in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. CONVERSE. There is no law authorizing these tests to be continued. The clause is not in pursuance of law. The law by which the board for making these tests was created was the appropriation act of March 3, 1875; and when those appropriations had been expended that was the end of the law upon the subject, and Congress at the session of 1878 expressly provided that the board should cease to exist when the money then appropriated should be expended. There is no authority now under the law for making a single test or for using that testing-machine for any purpose whatever.

Mr. CLYMER. When I say that the provision of this bill is in pursuance of existing law, I mean that a testing-machine, like a Government steamship, is useless to the Government or anybody else unless means be provided to work it. A steamship lying in the dock without coal and without men is useless, but if built in pursuance of law its maintenance is in accordance with law. The provision in this bill is designed simply to make a testing-machine already constructed useful to the Government. Hence I say the provision is in this bill is designed simply to make a testing-machine already constructed useful to the Government. Hence I say the provision is in structed useful to the Government. Hence I say the provision is in pursuance of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania please state the law on the subject? As the Chair understands, the law which provided for a testing-machine was repealed some years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. There was a special board for a special purpose—to conduct an investigation. That board after a while completed its report. But the testing-machine was not thereby destroyed. It is an independent matter entirely.

Mr. CONVERSE. That is very true; the machine is not destroyed. But the fact that the machine has been paid for and is in existence does not prove that an appropriation for continuing the operations But the fact that the machine has been paid for and is in existence does not prove that an appropriation for continuing the operations of that machine is in pursuance of law. By the bye, the machine was not completed and paid for until after the board went out of existence. It was then that the machine was finally completed and the Government placed in possession of it. The board made its final report June 8, 1878, and the testing-machine was not completed till the latter part of that year.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriates $10,000, not for preserving that machine at Watertown arsenal, but for using and operating it. Now, Mr. Chairman, my amendment proposes to direct that this machine shall be used in testing materials for industrial purposes. We are appropriating annually $40,000 or $50,000 for making tests for destructive purposes, but no appropriations amounting to anything have ever been made in the interest of industry and peaceful pursuits, except that appropriated for the commission just referred to. During the war the Government was in the habit of purchasing vessels and stationing them out at a distance from shore, to be shot to sels and stationing them out at a distance from shore, to be shot to pieces or blown up by torpedoes, at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Millions have been expended in making tests of cannon and other warlike implements and materials for their construction and for other warlike or destructive purposes; no tests have been made for industrial purposes, except under the law of 1875 creating this commission. What I desire is that these tests shall be continued in the interest of industry and the civil pursuits of life.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no personal knowledge of the management and use of this machine; but I read many of the industrial journals, and from my reading of those journals I am quite sure that the gentleman is under a misapprehension. I have seen in not only our own tleman is under a misapprehension. I have seen in not only our own journals but those of England eulogies upon the merits and the utility of this testing-machine, as having shown itself the most perfect which has ever been produced, and also seen a statement of its great value in industrial pursuits connected not only with steel and iron but other

Mr. CONVERSE. My friend is right in that statement, but still the statement I made is true that that machine was not completed until the commission went out of existence which was to operate it. Then some mine owners or some men interested in iron and steel con-

Then some mine owners or some men interested in iron and steel contributed a fund, and for themselves made some experiments. They were not made by the Government, although upon the Government machine. The money, I believe, was all paid out, and some fourteen or fifteen hundred dollars was contributed by the iron men to complete certain tests. The tests which my friend from Pennsylvania refers to are the tests of iron and steel that were reported and printed last year by Congress. They are invaluable, so far as they go, but they ought to be continued.

There is no subject in which this country is as deeply interested as in the tests of materials. The tests which were made whereby the present rules under which engineers and architects are operating and make their calculations were made twenty and thirty years ago. They were imperfect tests, made mostly in England, France, and Germany by testing machinery that was itself imperfect. Knowledge of chemistry and the means of producing iron and steel and the mixing of metals was not so far advanced as now, and the rules which have been deduced from those experiments are themselves therefore imperfect, and the formulas not entirely accurate and reliable. Thoubeen deduced from those experiments are themselves therefore imperfect, and the formulas not entirely accurate and reliable. Thousands, I may say millions of dollars are expended by the Government each year in providing material in excess of that which is necessary to secure the required strength in the construction for want of these very tests. There is no subject that would so rapidly advance the interest of science as well as material prosperity in this country as the continuing of these very tests. This $10,000 would be ample to continue the tests and make the reports each year to Congress. They ought to be made, and should not be limited to small bars of iron and steel but should embrace heams and columns in various forms lengths.

ought to be made, and should not be limited to small bars of iron and steel, but should embrace beams and columns in various forms, lengths, and size, and should extend to and determine the strength and value of all other materials, and especially those of American production.

Mr. CLYMER. I sympathize very fully, both in a general way and personally, with the gentleman from Ohio and all he has said as to the value of the experiments made by this testing-machine with reference to the different qualities of iron, their strength, durability, &c. I do not wish to resist this amendment, save I conceive from what I have heard that by providing for the appointment of a heard crence to the different qualities of iron, their strength, durability, &c. I do not wish to resist this amendment, save I conceive from what I have heard that by providing for the appointment of a board we are merely doing that in a most cumbrous way which can be arrived at by the Department if it had the means in a very simple one under the direction of an engineer officer. Last year we appropriated $5,000 for this purpose, and I have heard no special complaint as to the lack of means so far as we have gone up to this time.

The gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Hubbell,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, was very much interested on this subject; and although we only appropriated $5,000 last year on his representation, the amount was doubled and made $10,000 this year. We felt we had done all that was required.

Now, it is a mere difference of opinion between the gentleman from Ohio and the Committee on Appropriations as to which is the best method, if I understand it. We think the Engineer Department of the Army, through one of its officers, can conduct these experiments without providing for the cumbrous machinery of a board; that it will cost less; that it will be equally reliable, and certainly quite as serviceable to the people.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let me call attention to the fact that this amendment does not change the appropriation. It does not change the board; it simply provides that tests shall be made in the interest of industrial pursuits as well as of others.

Mr. CLYMER. There is no board provided.

Mr. CONVERSE. Where does the gentleman get the board to do it?

Mr. CLYMER. It puts it under the Engineer Department. I simply provide this board of engineers, or whoever is detailed to make experiments, shall report to Congress. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment. Certainly there can be no objection to it when it is amderstood.

The amendment was read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. CLYMER. You, Mr. Chairman, and most of the House, like myself, have served long enough in Congress to see what mighty structures are built up on small foundations in these appropriation bills. We have seen this Capitol surrounded by greenhouses. I do not object to them, but vote for them and support them, but they were all built up originally upon an appropriation to take care of about one hundred and fifty dollars' worth of plants brought here by Com-modore Wilkes' exploring expedition. There is no board provided by modore Wilkes' exploring expedition. There is no board provided by law for this thing.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the provisions for the board of officers.

Mr. CLYMER. That will do.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will accept the suggestion. My intention was the same board should make the test.

Mr. CLYMER. But there is no board.

Mr. CONVERSE. Some one must be detailed to make the experi-

Mr. CLYMER. If the gentleman will incorporate the idea that the result of the test by that machine shall be reported to Congress, well and good. Mr. CONVERSE.

That is what I say; I will strike out that part relating to the board.

Mr. CLYMER. I will withdraw my point of order if the gentle-man's amendment is confined to that idea. For, if we put in it a board, that board will come here and demand to be paid, as they were

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it is now proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the tests of iron and steel and other material for industrial pur-oses shall be continued, and an annual report thereof shall be made to Congress.

Mr. CLYMER. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. All officers, agents, or other persons receiving public moneys appropriated by this act shall account for the disbusement thereof according to the several and distinct items of appropriation herein expressed.

Mr. WARNER. I desire not to offer an amendment but simply to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill. To whom are these reports to be made?

Mr. CLYMER. To the Treasury Department.

Mr. WARNER. To the accounting officers of the Treasury; so I supposed. Now another question. Are these reports to be made also to Congress

Mr. CLYMER. They are furnished in the reports of the Department to Congress.

Mr. WARNER. The law already requires that.

Mr. CLYMER. The law requires it but not in as imperative a form as the Appropriations Committee desire to have it here.

I move now, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. Harris, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill of the House No. 6719, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask the previous question on the bill and amendments.

ments. The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. CLYMER. There is no contest on any amendment, and I therefore move that they all be adopted in gross

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ATKINS. On the passage of the bill the rule requires the yeas and nays to be called.

The SPEAKER. That is demanded by the rule.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 7, not voting 110; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 60) for the relief of B. S. James, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also that the Senate had passed, with amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company, through the United States cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi.

Also that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call up the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4748) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman from Texas directs attention stands fifth on the House Calendar. Before it can be considered it would be necessary to lay aside the bills that are ahead of it. The gentleman can reach his object by making a separate motion to lay aside each bill as it is reached.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill which I call up is not in Committee of the Whole. It is in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the House Calendar which embraces

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the House Calendar which embraces bills that under the rules do not go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The bills will be called in their order, and the gentleman from Texas can move to lay aside one bill after another until the order which he desires the House to consider is reached. The gentleman should first move to proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to make an inquiry. Is not the funding bill the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The funding bill is in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The funding bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Mr. REAGAN. Can I not under the rules call up the special order, the interstate-commerce bill, and antagonize with it all other busi-

The SPEAKER. A motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would have preference.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a bill which is a special order in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I now ask the privilege of taking it up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend from Texas will amend his proposition by saying that his bill shall not interfere with the appropriation bills or the funding bill. Those are not before the House at this but they are pressing upon us. I make this suggestion to osition by saying that his bill shall not interfere with the appropriation bills or the funding bill. Those are not before the House at this moment, but they are pressing upon us. I make this suggestion to the gentleman because I am in sympathy with him and desire to act with him; but I think the funding bill ought to be disposed of one way or the other. So, also, with the appropriation bills. If the gentleman will agree to that, I have no objection to his proposition. Mr. REAGAN. I cannot hope ever to get gentlemen ready to act upon this bill. The funding bill is not up to day and cannot be. There is no appropriation bill here now. The bill I call up is a special order before the House, made so in last February, to be considered as in Committee of the Whole, and I ask the House to proceed with it. Of course, when appropriation bills come up they have their full privilege. Their rights are already reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has suggested to the gentleman from Texas how he can reach his bill by making a motion to proceed to the consideration of bills on the House Calendar.

Mr. REAGAN. I understood the Speaker to make that suggestion; but not being very familiar with the operation of the rules of the House I did not understand why I ought to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. Because there is a House Calendar to be considered under the rules in order, and if the House is in favor of considering the bill indicated by the gentleman his object will be reached in the way the Chair has suggested.

Mr. REAGAN. If the motion would bring the House to the consideration of bills that are not special orders, then I would accomplish nothing. That would cut me out.

The SPEAKER. There are other special orders that are ahead of that of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PAGE. Would it be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the pending bill?

Mr.ATKINS. How many special orders are ahead of that in charge of the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER. Four.

Mr.REAGAN. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar.

Mr.BLOUNT. I should like my friend from Texas to consent that the consideration of his bill shall not interfere with the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has already so stated. The funding bill has gone into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and has a preference over this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I know my friend from Georgia is very vigilant as to all matters coming from the Committee on Appropriations. If he will content himself with taking care of them and let us take care of will content himself with taking care of them and let us take care of other measures we will get along very well. As regards the importance of this bill to the country, neither the funding bill nor any other now before Congress stands equal to it in importance, and that fact is recognized by the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I recognize the propriety of my friend from Texas taking charge of this bill, and I do not propose to interfere with his doing so; but other gentlemen of the House must exercise their judgment as to the legislation which is pressing upon us.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Georgia favors this bill I hope he will not fritter away time by making useless objections to the taking of it up.

the taking of it up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not frittering time away, and the suggestion I made to the gentleman is not to be regarded in that light. But I regard the funding bill of greater importance than that in charge of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Texas can reach his bill in another way: by having the House Cal-endar considered and then raising the question of consideration against each bill as it is reached which is ahead of the interstatecommerce bill.

Mr. REAGAN. That is what I propose to do.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN'S motion, that the House proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar, it was agreed to.

The title of the first bill on the House Calendar, reported by Mr.

HOSTETLER from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Mr. REAGAN. I raise the question of consideration upon that bill.

The question of consideration being put, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. PAGE called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make an inquiry. I have understood that a special order of the House can be called up at any time. I cannot understand how the bill, the title of which has just been read, can be permitted to antagonize the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is endeavoring to aid the gentleman to reach his hill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is endeavoring to aid the gentleman to reach his bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays on considering the bill, the title of which has just been read.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 22 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

The House accordingly refused to consider the bill.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2973) to provide office-rooms for the National Board of Health, and Mr. REAGAN. I raise the question of consideration on that bill.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FRYE. If the bill which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ReaGAN] desires to reach shall be reached this afternoon in this way, will that give it any advantage to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will come up to-morrow as unfinished business.

Mr. FRYE. And take precedence of the funding bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is a special agreement in regard to the funding bill and appropriation bills. Besides that, the funding bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is a special agreement in regard to the funding bill and appropriation bills. Besides that, the funding bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and a motion to go into committee would take precedence of this bill at any time.

The House refused to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2023) to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4748) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on Commerce by Mr. Reagan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there evidently must be a way under the rules to reach a bill of this character and must be a way under the rules to reach a bill of the House to connust be a way under the rules to reach a bill of this character and importance when it is the desire of the majority of the House to consider it. That is the reason that the Chair pointed out to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] the mode and the manner under the rules by which his bill could be reached.

Mr. REAGAN. I am much obliged to the Speaker.

Mr. CHALMERS. I would ask unanimous consent to concur in a little Senate amendment that will take up no time.

Mr. REAGAN. If it leads to no debate I do not know that I would object.

object. Mr. CHALMERS.

It will not.

Mr. CHALMERS. It will not.

Mr. REAGAN. It is suggested to me by friends around me that I had better go on with the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will now be read.

Mr. REAGAN. Members of the House have read the bill, I have no doubt, and unless some one desires to have it read now, time could Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The bill had better be read.
Mr. REAGAN. Very well.
The Clerk then read the bill at length.

Mr. ROBESON. Is there a report accompanying this bill?
Mr. REAGAN. There is not a written report.
Mr. ROBESON. I think the rules require that there shall be a written report.

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported before the new rules were adopted.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like the Speaker to decide whether a bill that was reported before the rules were adopted requiring a written report can be considered without a report when it comes up after that rale has been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The rules existing at the time of the reporting of the bill must be adhered to, of course.

Mr. ROBESON. But when the bill is considered the rule then existing must be enforced.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. When this bill was reported there was no rule requiring a report in writing to accompany it.

The SPEAKER. And it is too late now to raise the question of consideration, as the bill is before the House and has been read.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read a resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. REAGAN. If I am entitled to the floor I do not propose to Mr. REAGAN. If I am entitled to the noor I do not propose to give way to idle questions which merely consume time.

Mr. ROBESON. My question goes one step further. If, after the new rule is adopted, a substitute is reported, can that substitute be considered without a report in writing accompanying it?

The SPEAKER. They were all reported together.

Mr. REAGAN. They were all reported together and at the same time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read a resolution which will throw light upon this subject. It is a part of the proceedings of March 2, 1880.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the foregoing rules, just adopted as a substitute for all existing rules of the House, shall take effect and be in force from and after the hour of noon on Monday next, on which day, after the reading of the Journal, the Speaker shall present to the House the calendars provided for in these rules, on which shall be entered in proper order all the measures now pending before the House or the Committee of the Whole: Provided, That, in carrying these rules into effect, no standing committee shall be abolished, nor the number of the same decreased, during the present Congress; nor shall any existing special order be set aside.

House number, but with printer's number 4929. It authorized the reporting of a second amendment by way of substitute—a measure bearing the same House number but with printer's number 4928. The latter was the substitute offered by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] which he proposes to withdraw. That will leave for the action of the House the original bill and the substitute, the latter being substantially the bill which passed in the Forty-fifth Congress, there being but two changes—one in the fourth section and another in another section, to which I may call attention, although the change is not of great importance. This is the bill with which the House

Now, for the purpose of getting the matter in a shape for debate I propose to explain for a moment the provisions and objects of the substitute offered to the committee's bill, to suggest a few points with respect to that bill, and then, if the House will sustain me, to call the previous question upon the adoption of this substitute for the committee's bill. If I can have the attention of the House one moment, I think I can relieve some difficulties which gentlemen have encountered in the consideration of this subject. tered in the consideration of this subject.

At the very threshold the question arises as to the constitutional power of Congress over this subject. I can well understand how other gentlemen may have difficulty on this point, because before studying the question I encountered the same difficulties which they encountered the same diffi But if one distinction be taken it relieves the whole matter of difficulty.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the gentleman from Texas will yield for a moment I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REAGAN. I will yield, of course.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there ought to be an understanding in regard to debate upon this bill. The bill occupies a somewhat anomalous position. The gentleman from Texas, being chairman of the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill to the House when he was unfriendly to the bill, and when some friend of the bill ought to have reported it and ought to have the control of it in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas must have reported it as the action of the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir. I understand that perfectly well. But what I want now (and I want nothing but what is entirely fair and just) is, that this bill, which has been read and which is the bill of the majority of the committee, shall first be considered by the and just) is, that this bill, which has been read and which is the bill of the majority of the committee, shall first be considered by the House. I do not wish to have a motion made to substitute another bill for it and for the previous question on that motion without the friends of the bill having had any opportunity whatever to discuss it on the floor of the House, or to perfect the provisions of the bill.

What I would suggest (and it seems to me very fair) is, that we shall first discuss the bill before the House and then proceed under the five-minute rule to consider this bill, so that those who are friendly to it may have an opportunity to perfect it. That will be legitimate and proper. When that is done the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, can move to substitute his bill and take the sense of the House on the substitution of it. I am sure that nothing else than this will be fair in the consideration of this question, which, in my opinion, is of more importance to the people of the country than any other before this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The reason the Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas as in charge of the bill was because the Chair found that it had been reported by him.

it had been reported by him.

Mr. HENDERSON. But I think that regularly it ought not to have been reported by him. It is an anomalous condition of things for a member unfriendly to a bill to have control of it on the floor of the

Mr. REAGAN. If my friend will allow me, I desire to say that if there is anything anomalous in the position of this measure, it was made so by the express purpose of the committee. This was a subject to which I had devoted a great deal of attention for more than four years. The committee determined to adopt instead of the bill which I advocated another bill. But in consideration of the fact that I had devoted real, earnest attention to the matter the committhat I had devoted real, earnest attention to the matter the committee determined by its own action to permit the control of the subject in the House by reporting a bill of which I did not approve, and by reporting as a substitute the bill which passed the Forty-fifth Congress, and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maryland, all at the same time. I asked that privilege because I desired the action of the House, and I did not desire that this great question should go into the hands of its enemies, where it would sleep the sleep of death. It was for that reason, and that alone. Now, if my friend will allow me, I desire to say that no one more than myself wishes to obtain fairly an expression of the opinion of the members of the House upon this matter. I have listened to his suggestions and observations in relation to proceeding on this bill with interest. and observations in relation to proceeding on this bill with interest. I was proceeding to say, and if he will permit me to proceed for a moment without interruption, I think I can state enough to satisfy the members present clearly that if it wishes to act to abridge debate and avoid delay, that I can point the way for it to do so. That is what I ask, and that only, and it was with a view to make a suggestion in reference to that matter that I have asked the attention of

Mr. HENDERSON. And I wish to say further, Mr. Speaker, that I understand the gentleman from Texas proposes to call the previous question upon his substitute, which would cut off any discussion whatever, as I understand it, by friends of other measures, which it might be desired to substitute for his.

Mr. REAGAN. Oh, no! I shall leave the whole subject open for

Mr. REAGAN. Oh, no! I shall leave the whole subject open for discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. My impression is that a fair and just way would be to take up the bill which has been reported by the majority of the committee and let us consider it as in Committee of the Whole, and then when we have perfected the bill it will be a proper time for the gentleman from Texas to propose his substitute.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, this is a subject which surprises no one. All are more or less familiar with this bill. It has been repeatedly debated in Congress in the last few terms, and in this House during the present term. My friend from Illinois as well as myself have discussed it and given our views in full upon it. Now, I ask, are the members of the House not sufficiently familiar with this to justify them to proceed to the consideration of a bill which is not a sham bill—

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say now to the gentleman from Texas that if he alludes to me in his remarks he is entirely mistaken.

tleman from Texas that if he alludes to me in his remarks ne is entirely mistaken.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not allude to the gentleman personally.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am as much interested in the passage of a proper bill upon this great question as he can possibly be, and I do object to the assumption of all the virtue of this House, which the gentleman from Texas sometimes indulges in.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will only permit me for a moment, I wish to say that I do not propose—

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman from Texas indulge me for a moment?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir, not now; I want to make a statement now. Mr. HENDERSON. I only want a fair understanding in reference

Mr. HENDERSON. I only want a fair understanding in reference to the debate upon this question.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that in the remarks which I have made in reference to this bill I have no thought of reflecting upon him in any way. He knows very well that I have the greatest respect for him personally, and could not be induced to make any remarks about him which would be personal in their tendencies. I only spoke of the bill, and to that bill, if he will permit me only for a few words, I wish to call the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is the usual course. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas to say that he will call the previous question upon his own amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir. That is the idea.

The SPEAKER. If his own amendment is adopted it settles the question that the House accepts that as an amendment or substitute for the original bill.

for the original bill.

Mr. ROBESON. Without discussion or consideration?

The SPEAKER. Discussion is involved in the fact of consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am unwilling to agree to anything that will involve the cutting off of a reasonable time for discussion and the opportunity to perfect the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there should be some understanding between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois in reference to this matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. There ought to be, sir.

The SPEAKER. So that there may be equal time to discuss both propositions, and the House have an opportunity of understanding and voting upon them.

Mr. REAGAN. We have each of us made a speech upon this bill.

Mr. ROBESON. Not here in this session.

Mr. REAGAN. We are now in the short session of Congress. Every member knows just as well as I know that it will be the object of dilatory motions and discussion to defeat action upon this matter, and member knows just as well as I know that it will be the object of dilatory motions and discussion to defeat action upon this matter, and that these motions may, if so desired, defeat all action upon this great question. Now, I propose a plan by which that can be avoided, and if I can be permitted to proceed without interruption for a very few moments, I think I can make suggestions which will be so plain that the House will agree readily to the conclusion at which I have arrived.

Mr. ROBESON. But the very question here is as to the manner of proceeding, not whether you shall proceed or not; the question is simply as to the manner in which this matter shall be considered.

Mr. REAGAN. I know very well that the gentleman by dilatory motions can defeat the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBESON. I deny that I have any such intention. I have not even read the bill.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. It is whether the bill, as reported by the chairman of the committee, is reported in virtue of the action of the committee? The SPEAKER. It so appears.

Mr. ROBESON. That is my first question. Then I want to know if that bill is reported by the chairman of that committee for the favorable action of this House? That is my second question.

Mr. REAGAN. I decline to answer the gentleman's question further than it has been answered already, and I hope I will be protected in my right to the floor, and that time will not be thus consumed.

Mr. ROBESON. It appears to me that that goes to the very merits of the question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like-

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like—
Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to hear the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to come to some fair arrangement in regard to this, if it be possible to do so; for I do not want to delay action on the bill or to retard discussion in any way. I have no speech to make myself. There are some suggestions which I propose to make, and which I stated in my speech in the House I would be active the proposer to make and which I stated in my speech in the House I would be active to the stated in the second to the control of the second to the make at the proper time. But it seems to me the gentleman from Texas proposes to cut off all debate and all discussion and substitute this bill in place of that reported by the majority of the committee. I do not think that is fair or just.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot do that unless I am sustained by a majority of the House. The SPEAKER. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there might be an arrangement to permit a brief discussion on both these bills.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection if we can limit the discussion to the bill before us, but I do not wish to open general debate on the original bill.

Mr. ROBESON. I understand the gentleman from Texas to say this is the most important bill and involves the most important questions that have been before this House; that it involves questions of millions of property; that it involves the relations of the powers of the States to that property, and the relations of the powers of the United States to that property, and the relations of the United States

United States to that property, and the relations of the United States Government to the State governments.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is on the floor.

Mr. ROBESON. But I am asking a question.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I believe he means to use every dilatory expedient to prevent the House from doing anything to reach a result, and I say he ought not to obtrude himself into this debate until the proper time comes. I want, however, to come to an agreement with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Henderson.] He is a fair man, and I shall be as fair. What I want to agree with him is that we shall explain the provisions of these bills and let the House take a vote on which it shall proceed to discuss. I would not ask any privilege which I would not accord to the gentleman from Illinois. If that would be agreeable, that is what I sak to do. I propose we shall make brief statements of what we mean by these bills and then ask the House which of those bills they proby these bills and then ask the House which of those bills they propose to make the basis of action.

Mr. ATKINS. How much time would it require to make a statement on each side?

Mr. REAGAN. A very short time, so far as I am concerned. The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to make a speech.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to make a speech. I have already made the only speech I propose to make on the bill. There are some gentlemen here, however, who expect to speak on the bill. Mr. REAGAN. I will now proceed with the remarks I was making. I was saying that at the threshold of this question has been raised a question of the extent of our authority. When we come to look at this subject we are confronted by the fact that most of the railroad corporations are the creatures of the State governments. So far as the power of Congress over this subject goes it is derived from the clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States. It has to that extent the power to regulate commerce. That power carries with it no other powers over these corporations. The Congress have no power and this committee and this bill assume no power to operate on the railroads as railroads, or upon their franchises or corporate rights. And when the committee have been asked to remedy other evils, such as the watering of stock as a pretext of levying additional tribute upon the people, we have had to meet the friends of such propositions as that with the statement that we had of these corporations and deal with with the statement that we have no power, however much we symwith the statement that we have no power, nowever much we sympathize with them, to take hold of these corporations and deal with them as such, but our powers are limited alone to the regulation of commerce among the States. While under an unbroken line of precedents the Supreme Court have held that the power is exclusively in Congress to regulate interstate commerce, they hold that the power of Congress is not only exclusive, but that it is ample and as complete in every respect as the power of the State to regulate commerce within the State. merce within the State.

Perhaps I may as well say that Mr. Story, in his Commentaries, and the justices of the Supreme Court, in their opinions, a number of them, refer to the fact that the point has been made that railroads were not in existence when the Constitution was made, from which it has been inferred that its provisions did not cover the regulation of commerce on railroads. The papers connected with the formation of the Federal Constitution and the transition from the articles of confederation to the constitutional government, show that the question which was most conspicuous in those discussions was one which looked to limit-ing the power of a State to legislate in a hostile manner against the commerce of its sister States and to conferring upon Congress a power which would prevent them from doing so.

It is held by the Supreme Court in some of its decisions that it was an evidence of the wisdom, the foresight, and the prescience of that convention than in its few simple, elemental rules of government it was wiser than it could itself foresee by making a regulation which applied to all the future modes of carrying on commerce among the States, as well as to those which existed at the time. That is as much as I desire to say on that point.

We take the position that we have no power to regulate commerce over railroads outside of that power which follows the authority to regulate commerce among the States. With that settled under the provisions of the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, regulate commerce among the States. With that settled under the provisions of the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, our pathway is clear on the question of power.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to the provisions of the substitute offered by myself for the original bill. And I desire the attention of the House for a few moments while I endeavor to show that by labor and study the Committee on Commerce of the Forty-fifth Congress succeeded in developing a few simple, plain, clear, and easily understood rules that will obviate the greater number of complaints against the action of the railroads, without in any way embarrassing the railroads or crippling their usefulness.

And I desire to say here that in three Congresses and on three committees I have heard no member of the committee of the House express any opinion which indicated a hostility to railroads. We all realize their beneficent effect in building up our commerce, in promoting the prosperity of the country, and generally in contributing to the progress of the civilization and wealth of our country. No purpose has existed to cripple them; no one has expressed any desire to inflict a serious injury upon those great interests.

How did we meet this great question? We propose, first, that one man should not be charged more than another man for like services by a railroad. That is a simple rule, so elemental in its truth that no one can or will controvert its justice or propriety.

What next? As a corollary to that we propose to say that no rebates or drawhacks shall in any case he allowed. Behotes and draw.

What next? As a corollary to that we propose to say that no rebates or drawbacks shall in any case be allowed. Rebates and drawbacks are simply a means of discrimination which we propose to cut

Next, we propose that the people shall not be deprived of the benefit of competition among these corporations by their pooling freights between competing lines. We propose to secure to the people the between competing lines, benefits of full competition.

We propose next to protect the people of localities by a partial re-We propose next to protect the people of localities by a partial restriction upon the powers of corporations, not by taking away their power of discrimination, but by limiting their power of discrimination between places. And the best rule which we were able to adopt, which does not quite approach equity, but leaves a larger discretion than strict equity would justify, being the best rule we could adopt, is one by which we declare that more shall not be charged for a shorter than for a longer distance on the same haul. For instance, we declare that no more shall be charged for a car-load of freight for one hundred miles than for three hundred or five hundred miles on one hundred miles than for three hundred or five hundred miles on the same line.

Remember, we do not use the term prorate, we do not use the idea prorate. We simply make the car load the unit. We then provide that more shall not be charged for a car load for a shorter than for

Now to illustrate the necessity of this. The sworn testimony before the Committee on Commerce of the Forty-fourth Congress shows that freight from the city of Pittsburgh, to be sent to Philadelphia, in the same State, could be placed on the Ohio River and sent down the Ohio River five hundred and forty miles to the city of Cincinnati, where there are competing lines of railroad, and from there sent back through Pittsburgh to Philadelphia cheaper than it could be sent directly from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia.

directly from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia.

A year ago last winter the commercial bodies of New York and Philadelphia stated before our committee that they could ship articles of commerce from Philadelphia and New York to the city of Boston and from there ship them to the West cheaper than they could send them directly from those cities to the West. My friend from Nevada here [Mr. DAGGETT] has the evidence, which if he has the opportunity he will present to the House, showing that a car load of freight sent from Omaha to the West will be charged more if it stops at the Pal-isades, in Nevada, than if it went to San Francisco and was brought back. Freights could be taken from Omaha to San Francisco on through rates and back to the Palisades on way rates as cheap or cheaper than they could be taken from Omaha directly to the Pal-

I could go on and multiply instances of this kind to an indefinite extent, showing the necessity of limiting the power of these corpora-tions to discriminate in favor of one locality or business and against another locality or business, to enrich one town or city and impoverish another town or city.

When these corporations were created it was for the purpose of furnishing conveniences of transportation to all the people, and not as instruments of oppression to any.

These are all the provisions of the proposed bill except one. We require these railroads to print and post up their schedule rates of freight. They say they do that now. If they do, then they pay no respect to their schedules. It was denied by the president of the New York Central Railroad and by the president of the Eric Railroad in writing over their considerations in answer to an inquire. road, in writing over their own signatures, in answer to an inquiry of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York, that they discriminated in rates or made any special rates, and immediately succeeding that denial proof was made before the committee of the New York Legislature engaged in the investigation of the subject that six thousand special contracts had been made by the New York Central Railroad in one year preceding that time—that many instances of special rates, of discriminations.

I am speaking now of the railroads themselves, not the stockholders, for these fare but little better than the other people of this country. It is the managers, the officers, who profit by the wrongs inflicted upon the people and the stockholders. One of the modes of doing this is by the organization of corporations within corporations, doing this is by the organization of corporations within corporations, rings within rings, to control particular branches of commerce in their own interest and then to exercise the power of discrimination as between men and places, to secure a monopoly in the particular trade. But I pass from that branch to the subject.

These are the provisions of the bill—simple, easily understood, incontrovertible, on account of the practical truth which underlies and supports each of them. We propose to remedy these evils. We propose three remedies: first, a civil action in behalf of the party aggricated by a violation of the provisions of this hill, with trule dame grieved by a violation of the provisions of this bill, with triple damages in case of recovery; second, a qui tam action—a civil suit to be brought and conducted by a public officer where the litigants are unable to combat the power of these vast corporations; and on the anable to combat the power of these vast corporations; and on the successful prosecution of such suit the penalty is to be not less than $1,000. In addition to this we propose by the bill which I advocate to allow a criminal remedy by indictment against the officers and agents of the corporations violating the law, with a penalty of $1,000. These measures do not involve imprisonment; they involve pecuniary liability only; but they have been intentionally made sufficiently vigorous to prevent a willful violation of the law.

But if these simple provisions of the bill with these remedies so orous to prevent a willful violation of the law.

But if these simple provisions of the bill, with these remedies so easily understood, were adopted, and nothing more, the measure would not meet the expectations of the public. I looked to the action of the various States to see why it was that State legislation of a somewhat similar character had been ineffectual. I found that suits often failed for want of evidence. When one of the officers of these corporations was summoned before the tribunals of justice and put upon the stand as a witness he declined to testify. When asked for upon the stand as a witness he declined to testify. When asked for his reasons, he would say he could not testify without criminating himself; and so he was permitted to stand aside. To overcome this difficulty, to open the mouths of these gentlemen who know what they are doing, we propose to compel them to testify in civil suits in which they are parties, with the reservation that their testimony shall not be used against them in criminal proceedings. This is not an unusual, but in such cases a necessary remedy.

Again, in States where equitable powers were not given, in the trial of civil causes of this kind it often became necessary to get facts from the books, papers, and documents of these corporations, and when they declined to surrender them the court was powerless to enforce its production. To overcome this difficulty we provide that the courts trying civil cases under this bill shall have equitable as well as legal powers, and may compel the production of books and papers, may compel discovery as in any other proceeding in equity. Thus we pro-compel discovery as in any other proceeding in equity. Thus we provide for opening the mouths, for opening the books, papers, and documents of these corporations, so as to prevent the concealment of facts necessary to the ends of justice, and to prevent evasions of law which would defeat the purposes of the bill.

These, briefly stated, are the provisions of the bill which I propose to ask the House to adopt as a substitute for the original bill, that substitute being now in fact the bill of the majority.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the gentleman mean that his bill is the committee's bill?

Mr. REAGAN. No. sir: my bill is the substitute.

bill is the committee's bill?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; my bill is the substitute.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman mean that the majority of the committee are at present in favor of his substitute?

Mr. REAGAN. I think so.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like the gentleman to explain the particular provisions of the bill of my colleague, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would like to get the gentleman's contribution upon the question of the power of the States to furnish the

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would like to get the gentleman's opinion upon the question of the power of the States to furnish the same remedies proposed by this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. As to the power of the State, it is as full and ample as the power of the General Government, though limited to commerce wholly within the State. The State can adopt the same provisions with reference to State commerce that we adopt with reference to interstate commerce.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Does not this bill apply to internal commerce?

Mr. REAGAN. We cannot control that; we have not the power to control commerce wholly within a State.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. All the commerce within a State must be internal commerce, of course.

Mr. REAGAN. I will tell my friend how we meet that difficulty.

Of course when goods are shipped in a State the commerce originates in the State; but the marks upon the goods indicate whether they are destined to stop within that State or go to another. These marks are put upon the goods, not by the railroad company, but by the shipper; and if the shipper in Illinois marks his freight for New York or any other State than Illinois, it is interstate commerce; and the law takes hold of it and protects it from the initial point to the time the freight is landed at its destination.

Mr. RICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. What I wished to ask was, whether that commerce would be subject to inspection at the terminal point?

Whether the commodity the gentleman treats as commerce in transitu would be subject to inspection or not? Is that your understanding?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman's question. There is nothing in the bill in reference to that, however.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. This is a very important inquiry, because our courts have held that it is not even an article of commerce until after it has been inspected, much less commerce itself.

merce until after it has been inspected, much less commerce itself.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well. However that may be, when a man ships five tons of wheat from Chicago to New York I submit that it is commerce, and it does not take an inspector to make it wheat.

Mr. RICE. May I ask the gentleman a question now?

Mr. REAGAN. I am replying to the gentleman from Illinois. As soon as I have heard his inquiries I will answer the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RICE. My question is in the line of the gentleman's question. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he believes that Congress has power to oblige the New York Central Railroad in any way to modify its charges on freight received by it at Buffalo, either from railroads coming into Buffalo or by water carriage over the lakes, that freight to be carried within the State of New York by the New York Central Railroad, a corporation of the State of New York, lakes, that freight to be carried within the State of New York by the New York Central Railroad, a corporation of the State of New York, and not existing outside of the State of New York?

Mr. REAGAN. I will answer the gentleman from Massachusetts as I have already answered the gentleman from Illinois. Whether the commerce is interstate or State commerce depends upon the fact as to whether it is shipped from one State and destined to another or to a foreign country, or shipped from a foreign country for one of the States. If the commerce is shipped the bill specially provides that from the point of shipment in the State where it starts to the point of its destination it is interstate commerce in the sense of the law, whether it goes over one or many railroads. It would be undoubtedly as much interstate commerce passing part of the way over water as if it passed all the way overland. The question of water or land transportation has nothing whatever to do with the character of the commerce, but simply its origin and destination. Its origin and destination fix the fact. origin and destination fix the fact.

Mr. RICE. I wish to ask the gentleman does not this bill in any way affect the freight that comes to Buffalo by water and is then transported by rail?

Mr. REAGAN. The fact that the freight comes to Buffalo by water and is then transferred to railroads does not change its character as interstate commerce.

Mr. RICE. That gives, of course, railroads having water facilities advantages over those which have not.

Mr. REAGAN. We assume it safe to trust to the competition of ship-owners—the boat owners—for reasonable rates in the shipment of freight, and declined in any way to embarrass them by the pro-visions of this bill.

Mr. RICE. I would ask whether the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, for instance, would have equal facilities with the New York Central Railroad with its water carriage in the carriage of freight from Railroad with its water carriage in the carriage of freight from Chicago to New York?

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman assumes by his question more than should be assumed under this bill. There is nothing in the bill which compares rates of freight on one line with those on another, or that fixes rates on any line. These roads would remain as free as now to charge reasonable rates and to compete for freights. This bill does not always their relations in these respects. not change their relations in these respects.

If the commerce originated at Chicago or at any port upon the lake, if destined for New York it is interstate commerce from the place where it starts to the place of its destination, whether it travels by water or by land or both by water and land.

Mr. RICE. But I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that this bill in no wise affects freight charges by water; that such charges are in no way disturbed, whether interstate or State commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill carefully avoids making any reference to water freight.

Mr. RICE. That leaves water carriage free, then, and gives a great advantage to railroads that can avail themselves of it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman a ques-tures and congresses, but we thought it safe to assume that they could not heat he Almighty on the natural open water ways.

Mr. RICE. I hope the gentleman from Texas will meet the argument which I have advanced and answer the questions which I have ment which I have advanced and answer the questions which I have asked him. I have as yet had no answer.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas myself, further, if a stream should have its source in one State, and thread its way through the mountains and valleys for one-half its length before it became navigable and subject to the power of Congress, would it be an interstate stream?

Mr. REAGAN. That is a question that has already been decided by the courts of the country. The Supreme Court has settled that questian and it is even stronger than the question of my friend from Illinois. They have declared, and the decision has been repeated, that if a commerce originates upon a stream running entirely within a State which ends by emptying into another stream or bay, gulf or sea, and thereby communicates by water with other States or foreign countries, the commerce which passes on from State to State is interstate commerce. The Saginaw River in Michigan, a small stream only forty miles long, is given as an example. All its course is wholly within the State of Michigan, but the commerce passing on it to other States is held to be interstate commerce.

within the State of Michigan, but the commerce passing on it to other States is held to be interstate commerce.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Does not the case to which my friend from Texas has alluded say that where a voyage may be commenced in a State and terminated in a foreign country, or commenced in a foreign country and terminated in a State, that Congress has the power to declare that it is interstate commerce?

Mr. REAGAN. Upon such a quastion as this property.

Mr. REAGAN. Upon such a question as this we must observe nice legal distinctions. It is not a river or the means of transportation that affects the character of the commerce. It is the origin and destination of the commerce itself that fixes that question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will my friend from Texas permit me

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman says the destination of the commerce shall determine its character. Then let me suppose a the commerce shall determine its character. Then let me suppose a case that must inevitably arise. Goods or produce in Ohio destined for Wheeling, West Virginia, is shipped on a road that has no control east of the west bank of the Ohio River, and the company says "We will ship this to the west bank of the Ohio River, but we have no power to ship it beyond that;" would that be, under the gentleman's bill, interstate commerce if landed on the Ohio River, simply because directed to Wheeling, on the east bank of the Ohio River?

Mr. REAGAN. I will read a clause of the bill which answers the gentleman's question. We knew the railroads would make the exact point which my friend from Virginia has made, and we undertook to settle that for them. The bill provides:

No break, stoppage, or interruption, nor any contract, agreement, or under-

No break, stoppage, or interruption, nor any contract, agreement, or understanding, shall be made to prevent the carriage of any property from being and being treated as one continuous carriage, in the meaning of this act, from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such stoppage, interruption, contract, arrangement, or understanding was made in good faith for some practical and necessary purpose, without any intent to avoid or interrupt such continuous carriage, or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

We take care to provide in advance that the objects of the act shall

We take care to provide in advance that the objects of the act shall not be defeated by the machinations of the railroads; and if you will give us the bill I will guarantee that that shall not be done.

Mr. RICE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question right there. Does he contend that under that section he has read Congress can force the New York Central road—I speak of that road merely in illustration—to make any rates beyond its terminus or to do anything else than take the freight that comes to it at Buffalo and carry it to its destination? Can the power of Congress be exerted over that State corporation to compel it to make contracts and rates beyond the State?

Mr. REAGAN. I will answer that question, and I hope the gentleman will listen to me, because I understand the various objections that are urged to the bill, and I want to meet them all.

Mr. RICE. We want to have that done in a discussion, and not in this desultory manner.

Mr. REAGAN. What I propose to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts is that this bill nowhere fixes any rates. I expressly avoided making any rates. But it takes the protection of the commerce between the States into its control and out of the monopoly powers of the corporations; it prevents charging one man more than another man; it prevents rebate and drawbacks; it prevents peoling of freights and prevents unjust discriminations between place and place. And the gentleman before he debates this question intelligently must separate his idea of regulating freights from the consideration of this

I know, sir, in all preceding discussions here in this House, in our committee, and in the committee of the Senate the lawyers and managers of railroads have attempted to confuse this subject by saying that members of Congress by their vocation were not qualified to regulate railroad traffic. I have answered that before as I answer it to-day. They have said that none can do it but experts. God deliver this country if its interests are placed in the hands of railroad experts in the interest of railroad companies, under the dictation of railroad officers. Sir, we have done better than that. We ask no aid of a railroad officers. Sir, we have done better than that. We ask no aid of a railroad expert. We ask but honest consciences and common sense to solve these propositions. What expert is necessary to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall not pay two dollars a ton for his freight while the gentleman from Illinois pays only one dollar a ton for the same sort of freight over the same ground? What expert is necessary? Common justice common right gentleman from is necessary? Common justice, common right, common necessity settles that question, and settles with equal conclusiveness the question against rebates and drawbacks, against the pooling of freights and against the destroying of one city or town or business for the benefit of another.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman from Texas please explain to the House the points of difference between the original bill of the committee and his substitute?

Mr. REAGAN. I shall do so with pleasure.

Mr. SCALES. The time of the gentleman from Texas is nearly expired. Mr. WILSON.

Let the gentleman go on and make his speech. We will extend his time.

Mr. RICE. I object to the gentleman from Texas going on unless the same privilege of debate be allowed on the other side. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has not quite expired.

Mr. REAGAN. The committee's bill in all of its twelve pages and eighteen sections nowhere gives a remedy to the citizen; nowhere does it give to the individual citizen any right to appear in a court of justice to vindicate his rights. Then in the eighteen sections of the committee's bill no provision is anywhere made to authorize the indictment of the man engaged in leaving unconscionable exactions upon the people. Those are two fatal defects to begin with. All the citizen can do under that bill is to complain to a commission, and the commission does—what? It inquires and reports to the railroad. Good God! is the remedy of the poor citizen to end there?

There is no legal remedy given to correct these wrongs, and when the complaint is investigated this great commission, made by the United States and paid high salaries, reports to the complainant and the railroad.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. ROBESON. This is a very important question, involving the most important interests of the country, and I would like to hear the gentleman discuss it further.

Resolved. That the Committee on Rules be instructed to examine a compilation of the decisions of the Senate on questions of order prepared by ex-Chief Clerk W. J. McDonald, and report upon the propriety of having the same printed for the use of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendone of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company, through the United States cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6451) to amend and re-enact sections 2517 and 2518 of the Revised Statutes, and changing the boundaries of a customs district in the State of Maine;

A bill (H. R. No. 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes.

A bill (H. R. No. 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes so as to authorize a charge for melting or refining bullion when at or above standard; and A bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The business of the morning hour is concluded, and under the standing order of the day the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached when it was last considered.

The bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order upon the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. Kernan on the 17th of December last, in line 5 of section 1 of the reported amendment, after the word "support," to strike out all down to and including the word "alms," in line 7, as follows:

to and including the word "alms," in line 7, as follows:

Or who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.

Mr. KERNAN. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if we do not strike these words out, the bill makes it penal for a man who cannot get work, an idle man, to habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or to occupy any public place for the purpose of begging or receiving alms. There are many people, you meet them habitually at your church doors, one-legged soldiers who cannot work, maimed people who cannot work, who are therefore idle, who are not able to work, who do solicit alms; and we are to punish them under this bill just as we do pickpockets. I do not think we should do that. I am opposed to punishing a man simply because he asks alms. It may be that now and then people are imposed upon, but they need not give. I would not make the are imposed upon, but they need not give. I would not make the asking of alms an offense for which a man shall be confined for a term not exceeding one year in the workhouse of the District of Columbia unless he can give security.

Columbia unless he can give security.

Take the case of an humble, poor person who cannot get work or who is not able to work if he can get it. Do you mean to say that it shall be an offense and that he shall be ranked with a pickpocket and with vicious persons if he asks people for alms? Take other cases. Take a mother with children—there are such in this District, plenty of them—who is not able to live by her work, or who cannot get work, and who does go to the doors of people, generally where she is known, and solicit aid for her children. I object to bringing that class of people in under a bill intended to punish vicious people, because an idle person going from door to door falls under this bill. I hope the clause will be stricken out.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think the bill is obnoxious to the Senator's objection at all.

Mr. KERNAN. Let me show my friend how I read it. "All idle persons who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or objection at all.

Mr. KERNAN. Let me show my friend how I read it. "All idle persons who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms," are within the bill, because the language is "that all ide, vicious, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia, without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, or who habitually go from door to door," &c. Therefore an idle person who habitually solicits alms, giving no offense beyond merely asking people who would be apt to do so to aid him, would fall under the provisions of the bill. I ask the Senator if I am not right in this construction.

the Senator if I am not right in this construction.

Mr. HOAR. I would ask the Senator from New York if his whole idea will not be carried out by simply striking out the word "idle," in the third line, leaving the provision to apply to vicious or disorderly persons who go about?

Mr. KERNAN. That would remedy it to a large degree, and I do not know but entirely. However, I think I would prefer to strike out the description of that class of persons who habitually ask alms. I think the bill will remedy the evils by striking out what I move to strike out. If that fails, I would ask to strike out the word "idle."

Mr. VANCE. I have no objection to the idea of the Senator from New York being incorporated in the bill, but I want to say in justification of the committee that I do not think the bill as prepared and reported by them is obnoxious to the charge of the Senator from New York. I think that it refers to habitually idle persons; that is, whenever a person is habitually idle and goes from door to door and place to place begging there shall be some restraint in the law upon such conduct. If it is the sense of the Senate that the effect of this bill, properly construed, would be to punish a person who happens to be idle through misfortune and who is a proper subject of charity, I would be as far from voting for it as the Senator from New York.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the District of Columbia had a great deal of difficulty with this subject. The suggestion that is great deal of difficulty with this subject. The suggestion that is made by the Senator from North Carolina appears to me to cover and made by the Senator from North Carolina appears to me to cover and fully meet the objection offered by the Senator from New York. The bill does not cover the cases referred to by the Senator from New York of persons who are driven by some temporary stress to occasional mendicancy. The word "habitually "refers to all classes who solicit alms under the circumstances named in the bill. It applies to the habitually idle, vicious, and wicked persons who go from door to door begging and soliciting alms.

The purpose of the bill is to control professional vagrancy and mendicancy in this District. It appears to me that if the Senator from New York will regard the effect of the word "habitually" he will withdraw his objection and also not insist upon his amendment, because so long as the word "habitually" remains in the bill no court withdraw his objection and also not insist upon his amendment, because so long as the word "habitually" remains in the bill no court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter that is referred to would think of condemning a person who was infirm, or mutilated, and stood occasionally by a church door while soliciting alms for some temporary relief. There must be some action had by which this class of professional mendicants and beggars who unite that profession with stealing and other violations of law, shall be controlled in this District. If the Senator will observe the language and see the controlling effect of the word "habitually," I think he will not insist on his amendment. his amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. The words "habitually begging" give a very wide discretion. There are persons in this city, and deserving persons, as I am informed by others, who cannot labor. They are infirm, they are stripped of their property, and they live through a month by habitually going about and asking a few people to give them cold pieces and give them other aid.

A SENATOR. Are not places provided for them?

A SENATOR. Are not places provided for them?

Mr. KERNAN. Talk about places being provided for them! We know about the places provided! There are plenty of women who would rather die in the street than be put in the places provided, with the vicious and dishonest.

with the vicious and dishonest.

I simply ask the Senate to say whether in the case of an idle person—a person who is either unable to get work or unable to do it, and who is therefore idle—if some magistrate says this person is idle because she does not work at all, and because she habitually calls at certain places and gets aid, the penalty shall be enforced. My experience is that we do not anywhere give too much to the poor, and it is no hardship to be asked. If you are not inclined to give, if you think you ought not to give, you give nothing and pass on.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him so far as to call attention to the saying clause of section 8 or rather to the to call attention to the saving clause of section 8, or rather to the whole section, for it is all a saving clause?

Mr. KERNAN. I have observed that; I marked it. It reads:

That this act shall not apply to any female or blind person who, upon examination, shall be found by the court to be a worthy object of charity.

Why send it to a court? Can I not decide for myself whether I think Why send it to a court? Can I not decide for myself whether I think she is a worthy object of charity? Can I not be trusted to decide? That section only saves women or blind persons. Take a man who can hardly walk. My objection to the bill is on the principle that it is not a crime to ask alms where the party asking needs them; that there is no such evil to those who give alms as requires us to say that they must be protected by penal statutes from being asked for alms. Take children who are sent out sometimes by mothers who cannot go themselves. Your wife will inquire, if she finds that such a child comes habitually to her door asking alms, whether help is needed. Why say that some officer may construe that that coming is habitual under this act, and that that child must go to jail, because the poor cannot give security.

I hope, sir, we shall not legislate against asking for alms as a crime. I have no objection to saying that every vicious person, whether he asks alms or not, and every disorderly person, whether he asks alms or not, may be punished; but it is not right to say that in the case of an idle person we will send it to a court to determine whether he shall not be sent to jail because it is habitual, if he cannot live during a winter without getting alms habitually. I hope the clause will be attribled out.

Mr. HOAR. The great difference between the Senator from New York and the committee seems to be in an understanding of what the bill really means. I will move an amendment which I think will be accepted by the Senator from North Carolina. In line 3 of section 1 I move to strike out the word "idle," and after the word "vicious" to insert "willfully idle," and in the fifth line to strike out the word "or," where it first occurs; so as to read:

That all vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia, without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, who habitually go from door to door, &c.

That will relieve a large portion of the objection of the Senator from New York, and I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will accept that amendment?

Mr. VANCE. I am authorized by such portion of the committee as is within my reach to accept that amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. That would doubtless improve it, but why send it to a court? I do not believe the time has come when we should begin to have courts decide whether women, children, and men who are asking alms are willfully idle or not. Some may say they are; others may say they are not. I do not think there is any evil which requires us to include this class in a bill of this kind for the vicious, the disorderly, the pickpockets and thieves.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from North Carolina to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. Inserting that might lead to the rejection of the amendment I offered. I object to that being put in the bill on that ground, and ask for a vote upon it. "Willfully idle" and "idle" are about the same thing, only the former sounds a little better, and you leave it to some judge to point out the difference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. KERNAN. I hope that will be rejected.

Mr. TELLER. If the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is to fail, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I should prefer to vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That cannot be done under the rule. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts perfects the matter moved to be stricken out, and is in order before the

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division-ayes 27,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. Kernan] to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. WHYTE. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to move to correct the text by striking out the word "or."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He did.

Mr. WHYTE. The vote should be taken on that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was included in the first amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. I did not so understand the proposition.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to strike out the first clause of the

Mr. HOAR. Before voting on the motion of the Senator from New York to strike out the first clause, I desire to be informed whether the committee think that it is desirable to prescribe so severe a pen-alty as is to be found in the conclusion of this section for all cases which come under the section without allowing any discretion whatwhich come under the section without allowing any discretion whatever to the court. This section covers, for instance, every child who trespasses in a front yard in the night-time, every boy of ten or twelve years old, persons guilty of indecent behavior, which may cover a large latitude of meaning, and persons having in their possession a pack of cards. Now, no Senator would ever travel the streets of Washington with a pack of cards in his pocket, but some other very respectable citizens may do so. This section as it is leaves no discretion whatever in the court but requires in all sends cases. other very respectable citizens may do so. This section as it is leaves no discretion whatever in the court, but requires in all such cases that the presiding judge shall compel security for good behavior to be given in "a sum not exceeding $300 for a space of time not exceeding one year;" so that a bondsman must be obtained for some amount. Of course the judge need not make it so large as that. "And in case of refusal or inability to give such security, they shall be confined for a term not exceeding one year." It seems to me that this section, instead of saying they shall be required to do so and so, night to say that the court may in its discretion require seeding security. ought to say that the court may in its discretion require such security. It seems to me that otherwise there is an absolute mandate upon the court to treat as a serious offense, requiring security for good behavior, many acts which are not offenses at all.

Mr. VANCE. It seems to me there is a very wide discretion allowed to the court in this case. The court is required to take bond, and the bond shall in no case exceed $300; it may be $5 and it may be but fifty cents.

Mr. HARRIS. Or one cent.

Mr. VANCE. Or one cent, as the court may order. In case the bond is not forthcoming and the defendant is sent to the workhouse, then the limit on the discretion of the judge is that the time shall then the limit on the discretion of the judge is that the time shall not exceed one year.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to put him a practical question? If a boy twelve years old commits the slightest possible trespass after six o'clock at night in anybody's front yard, does the Senator think a judge ought to be compelled to require that child to furnish a bondsman for his good behavior for twelve months, or otherwise send him for twelve months to the workhouse; or to furnish any bondsman at all? Does he think that any citizen of the District of Columbia who has a pack of cards in his pocket ought to be absolutely and as a matter of course liable to such a judgment? It is true a discretion is left in the judge by the bill as to the length of time and as to the amount of security; but the bill leaves no discretion in the judge in regard to the question whether he shall order a bondsman in some amount for some time. It seems he shall order a bondsman in some amount for some time. It seems to me that when you have got a definition of an offense which includes, among a great many other cases I might quote, the two cases that I have stated, which are enough, the judge ought to have a discretion whether he will order the person to be punished at all or whether he will be the discretion whether he will be the person to be punished at all or whether he will not discharge him.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose that the judge will have some discretion, some knowledge of law, and some common sense. Those are requisitions for judges, I believe, in this country. The defendant has in the first place to be convicted of one of the crimes which are defined in the bill, and when he is convicted of that crime then the punishment and the amount of the bond are entirely within the discretion of the court. He may he sent to the workhouse for one hour; he may be required to enter into bond for one cent, but he cannot be may be required to enter into bond for one cent, but he cannot be required to enter into bond for over $300, and he cannot be sent to the workhouse for a period longer than twelve months.

Mr. HOAR. Then will the Senator allow an amendment in the twenty-third line, after the word "Columbia," by inserting the words may in the discretion of the court ?"

Mr. VANCE. No, sir, I do not accept that amendment.
Mr. HOAR. I should like that amendment made, and I think the Senator will agree to it on reflection. I move that amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him whether section 6 does not cover all that he would like to accomplish? It leaves it in the discretion of the court to allow the parent or friend of the child to become the bondsman, and he may not be worth half a dollar.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Maryland is more fortunate in his children than some of us who think themselves very fortunate; but I suspect there are very few small boys who have not thrown a stone over a fence or have not run or lain in somebody's front yard, and have not done something which is technically a trespass. My point against the bill is that it absolutely requires this judgment, which is in the nature of a criminal judgment, a conviction of the offense, and a requirement to give security for good behavior in the case of any person who commits in the night-time a trespass upon the premises of another. To say nothing of various other cases, (I do not wish to detain the Senate by proposing a great many other cases, because one is enough for my point,) I cannot conceive that any Senator, if he understands the bill as I do, can vote for a proposition which requires the courts in this District to condemn as a criminal, and to exact a bond either of the parents or somebody else, or a commitment to a reformatory institution, every boy who commits a trespass on anybody's premises.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to call his attention to the provision in lines 20 and 21 "shall be taken and deemed to be vagrants, and upon conviction thereof." As I understand his argument it is upon the assumption that every boy who throws a stone over a fence is guilty; but according to this bill he must be convicted in court before he can be sent to the workhouse.

Mr. HOAR. But convicted of what? Convicted of the offense.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely; but I take it for granted that no court would convict a boy and make him a vagrant because he throws a stone over a fence.

Mr. HOAR. Then it is because the court would disobey the express mandate of this law.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.
Mr. HOAR. And the Senator from South Carolina, if I understand him, proposes to the Senate to pass a law which can only be justified and made tolerable on the ground that any respectable magistrate would of course disobey it. The law is to be this:

All persons found trespassing in the night-time upon the private premises of others * * * shall be taken and deemed to be vagrants, and upon conviction thereof, or any part thereof, in the police court, * * * be required to enter into security for their good behavior.

And then there is a subsequent sentence that if it is a boy under venteen years of age he may be committed to a charitable or reformseventeen years of age he may be committed to a charitable or reformatory institution until his parents or friends give security that he shall not again commit the offense. I do not understand that the Senator from South Carolina or any Senator thinks that is a just law, but he says that no decent magistrate will obey it if we pass it, if I understand him correctly; perhaps I misunderstand him.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator very certainly misunderstands me. I said nothing of the kind, nothing that would justify any such interpretation. I said that before anybody under this bill could suffer the penalties imposed he must be convicted by a court of competent jurisdiction, and that I did not believe any court would convict a boy for throwing a stone over a fence.

Mr. HOAR. But does it not make it the duty of the court to con-

Mr. HOAR. But does it not make it the daty of the court to vict him?

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. Why not?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not so understand it. "Shall be taken and deemed to be vagrants, and upon conviction thereof," that is, on conviction of one of the offenses alleged, shall be punished. It does not follow that because a man is charged or a boy is charged that he will be convicted, by any means.

Mr. HOAR. When a statute enacts that if a person does a thing, on conviction thereof he shall be punished so and so, I understand that the statute makes of that thing a penal offense.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. And that every magistrate before whom that alleged offender is brought, properly charged with that offense, says guilty or not guilty on his official duty and oath, and he says "guilty" if he finds the man has done the thing, he says "not guilty" if he finds that he has not. Now, the act which is made a penal offense by this bill is trespassing in the night-time on the private premises of others. It includes every act for which a civil action may be maintained by the owner against a trespasser. The committee meet that difficulty by saying that a magistrate would not convict for all these trifling matters. My answer is that the best way is to say that in the discretion of the magistrate conviction may be had.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him if it is not common in the ordinances or municipal regulations of every city to provide where there is a breach of the peace, a trifling breach of the peace for which the party is not punished by sending him to jail or confining him, that he shall give security to keep the peace for six months, or a year, or what not?

Mr. HOAR. A breach of the peace means a breach of the peace of the commonwealth, or, in this case, of the United States; that is, the violation of some criminal law. This proposed statute goes further and makes of the merest and most trifling trespass a crime or penal offense.

Mr. WHYTE. But suppose the crime of a box throwing stones in offense.

Mr. WHYTE. But suppose the crime of a boy throwing stones in the public streets. That is a very trifling thing. The boy may throw at a bird and not suppose he is violating the law at all. It is a violation of law. The parent or guardian of the child has to go and pay his fine or give security that he shall not offend again. That is common in every city; and the reason for this sort of legislation is that the Senate and House of Representatives are really the municipal body regulating these trifling affairs of the District of Columbia and the city of Washington. If the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question as he has got through his question to me?

he has got through his question to me?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator know of any State where the committing of a trespass on the private property of another is in all cases

Mr. HOAR. Does the Schator know of any state where the committing of a trespass on the private property of another is in all cases made a penal offense?

Mr. WHYTE. Why, certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know of any such.

Mr. WHYTE. Probably if I were to take the time of the Senate in getting the tramp laws of the various States the Senator from Massachusetts would find that going upon a man's property and sleeping in his barn at night was an offense for which a man could be punished.

Mr. HOAR. That is a different thing. The learned Senator does not answer my question or my point, he will allow me to suggest to him. This bill makes, not of some trespasses penal offenses, but it makes of all trespasses committed after sundown penal offenses, including those of the lightest and the most trifling character committed by children, committed by women, committed by anybody. Now it is not a good answer when I ask him if he knows of any jurisdiction where so harsh a provision exists to point out to me that certain trespasses committed by tramps are punishable. That does not answer my question or the point. My question is, does the Senator know any civilized jurisdiction where the law makes of the most trifling trespass upon real estate in all cases, of every trifling trespass, a crime?

Mr. WHYTE. I do not know of any particular case that I can re-

Mr. WHYTE. I do not know of any particular case that I can refer to at the moment, but almost all the vagrant laws which are of new creation, growing out of the extraordinary circumstances which existed in this country in 1877 and 1878, have been made so broad and expansive in their character that every one of them would be liable to some technical objection of this character.

Now, this bill can be amended, of course; it is yet open to amendment. The object of the committee is to cover the case of tramps within this District, and you cannot limit it as you can in a country district; you cannot here speak of barns, barracks, hay-ricks, and all those places that you can designate, but you must make the language general in its character; you must make the punishment elastic; you must make the requirement of a bond also elastic. That is done in this case. Where it is a trespass not willful in its character, where it is small in its nature and ought not to be severely punished, the judge has the power under the jurisdictional clause here of exacting only, not even a bond with good security, but the individual recognizance will be sufficient under this bill; the requirement is to give security, but no sureties are called for. It allows the party to escape upon a bond of a dollar or of two dollars, which any charitable party would give for him if he was entitled to commiseration and compassion; and it allows the judge to inflict a fine of fifty cents or twenty-five cents, according to the crime which has been committed. It must be, in the nature of the character of the legislation, expansive; it must be left in the discretion of somebody, either of the police to arrest or of the judge to punish, and it is better to put it in the hands of the judge who acts judicially rather than in the hands of the officer of the law who acts in seizing upon the individual, and on the presumption that he has been guilty rather than on the presumption which the judge has of his innocence. It is better to leave it with which the judge has of his innocence. It is better to leave it with the judge. You must leave it broadly for all the cases. When you commence to circumscribe it as the Senator from Massachusetts would circumscribe it the act will fail of its good effect and will be worthless.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to call his attention to the fact that he is argning against an amendment proposed by me to insert in the twenty-third line of the first section of this bill, after the word "Columbia," the words "may in the discretion of the court?" That is my proposition.

Mr. WHYTE. But that defeats the next clause of the same section

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is arguing now that the judge ought to-

Mr. WHYTE. He has it under this bill.

Mr. HOAR. Then what harm is there in putting it in express terms? I do not so understand it.

Mr. WHYTE. Because it is there in express terms.
Mr. HOAR. Where?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERNAN. What has become of the amendment that I pro-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is still pending, but the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts goes to perfect the text.

Mr. KERNAN. Where is that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the twenty-third line, after the word "Columbia," to insert "may in the discretion of the court."

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts now explain what will become of the case when he gets to the next clause

And in case of refusal or inability to give such security they shall be confined

Mr. HOAR. Such security as the court in its discretion requires; and if it does not require any, of course that clause does not apply.

Mr. WHYTE. If the court is not to require security, how is the man to be punished?

Mr. HOAR. He is not to be punished then.

Mr. WHYTE. Then he is to be found guilty and yet allowed to go

Mr. HOAR. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland defends this bill. Here is a bill which requires security for good behavior from anybody who commits an involuntary trespass, or any child who chucks a stone over a fence, for every sort of trespass upon real estate, and he defends that bill which otherwise would be branded to his apprehension as it is to mine as monstrous by saying that the discretion of the court will take care of this person; it will not punish a man or make him give security in any improper case. I then move to put in a provision that this order shall be an order in the discretion of the court. The Senator resists that, as I understand him; I do not understand why, but he resists it.

Now, the Senator puts me another question. He says if that is adopted then does it not leave the party to be convicted without any adopted then does it not leave the party to be convicted without any possibility of rendering judgment against him? To which I answer, no, there will be no conviction in that case; in other words, where a statute says that if a person commits certain acts he may, on conviction thereof, be ordered to give security for his good behavior in the discretion of the court, when in the discretion of the court there is no conviction except for that one purpose and object; and therefore, when in the discretion of the court it is not a proper case to order the security, the judge declines to convict. That is the whole of it.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I may be very obtuse, but the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts strikes me as a most extraordinary one. He proposes to give discretion to a judge after conviction. It must be so; the language of the bill is this: after describing who are to be deemed and taken to be vagrants, it proceeds to say:

And upon conviction thereof, or any part thereof, in the police court, or in any court of competent jurisdiction, upon information filed in the name of the District of Columbia, be required to enter into security for their good behavior in a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars for a space of time not exceeding one year.

Now, the learned Senator from Massachusetts proposes to give a discretion to the judge to exact security or not. That is, after the conviction, after the man is convicted and the judgment is entered upon the docket, he is to be acquitted! That would be the effect of it, because the very next clause is:

And in case of refusal or inability to give such security they shall be confined for a term not exceeding one year in the workhouse of said District, unless such security be sooner given.

So that practically after conviction the judge acquits. Now, would it not be a great deal better to give the party the benefit of a release before conviction, and insert the word "willfully" in line 7 of that section, so as to read "all persons found willfully trespassing in the night-time?" &c. That would cover the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts, I think; but I confess—it may be very dull in me—I cannot understand how the Senator from Massachusetts can ask us to give a discretionary power to the judge to exact security after conviction, which practically means a pardon of the offense. That is the effect of it.

That is the effect of it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am very sorry to detain the Senate by so much discussion of so small a point; but, still it is a question of importance to the personal liberty and rights of a great many poor persons and children. The Senator from Maryland entirely abandons his other point, and he admits, or, if he does not admit in terms, he does not now deny, that it would be a great and an improper stretch of authority to sentence a child for every trespass committed on the premises of another. His point is that the conviction is still to be had under the amendment which I propose, and that the discretion is only given to the magistrate who tries the offense after conviction to order or not to order the security. But the answer to the Senator's proposition is a very simple one. Where a criminal statute enacts that on conviction of a certain offense, or act, which offense it creates, which act it for the first time makes criminal, a person conthat on conviction of a certain offense, or act, which offense it creates, which act it for the first time makes criminal, a person convicted may, in the discretion of the court, be required to give security; and that is the only result of the conviction, the conviction and the requiring of the giving of security are one thing, just as if we said, "On conviction, he may be sentenced so and so;" and if in the opinion of the magistrate it is not a case where in his discretion he would order security, he does not convict, the statute would authorize him not to convict, and he discharges the defendant. In other words, where the only judgment is discretionary upon conviction the conviction itself is discretionary also.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, under the section as it now stands, as reported from the committee, it is too clear to admit of doubt that the worst consequence that can come to the party convicted is to be the worst consequence that can come to the party convicted is to be required to give a bond for his good behavior in the sum of $300.

Mr. WHYTE. That is the outside.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the maximum limit to which the require-

Mr. HARRIS. That is the maximum limit to which the requirement can go; but it is within the discretion of the court to fix the amount of that bond at one cent. All the space between one cent and $300 is within the discretion of the court. Failing to give the bond required, then it is the duty of the court to commit the party to imprisonment in the workhouse for a period not exceeding one year. It cannot exceed that time; it may be, for it is within the discretion of the court to commit the party to the workhouse for one minute instead of one year. The court has discretion in the first case from one cent to $300; in the second case the court has discretion from one minute to our year. I had boned that extent of discretion would one minute to one year. I had hoped that extent of discretion would be sufficient to satisfy the demands of my friend from Massachusetts and all other Senators. Certainly a broader discretion than that is not necessary to answer any of the ends suggested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. In line 23 of section 1, page 4, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "may in the discretion of the

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I rise rather for the purpose of asking a question than of entering into this debate; and I beg the attention of the honorable Senator from Tennessee who just now took his seat. I should suppose, I will say before asking my question, that this amendment will have very little effect in view of two sections of the bill to which I beg the attention of the Senator from Tennessee. I observe:

Sec. 5. That any act of beggary or vagrancy by any person not a resident of the District of Columbia shall be evidence that the person committing the same is a vagrant within the meaning of this act.

Again, I observe:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Metropolitan police, and they are hereby required, to arrest any persons committing any offense described in this act, and take them before the police court for examination.

If a single act of beggary makes conclusive proof of guilt under this statute, first it seems to me that very little comes of the pending amendment; but I want especially to ask the Senator from Tennessee this question—
Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is in charge of this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I was not aware of that. My question relates to what the Senator from Tennessee has said. We all see this morn-ing, as we frequently see, little boys with brooms on the cross-walks ing, as we requently see, little boys with brooms on the cross-walks sweeping off the snow; and when the Senator from Tennessee passes along one of these little boys says to him, "Won't you give me a penny, sir." I inquire of the Senator whether under the sections I have read to him that would be an act of vagrancy for which the police would be in the language of the law required to arrest this boy and take him before the police court, and when he got there an act conclusive of the charge against him? That certainly must be a single set of beggarv act of beggary.

Mr. WHYTE. I suggest to the Senator from New York that that has been stricken out by the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. Not as I read it here. My copy of the bill says that it is reported "with an amendment, namely, 'Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italics,'" and I am reading to the Senator from "the part printed in italics." Am I not

Mr. WHYTE. I thought the Senator was reading from the original

Mr. CONKLING. I take the bill as it stands on its face, which is that all after the enacting clause is stricken out by the committee's report and all that appears in italics is inserted, and I am reading from the part in italics.

report and all that appears in italics is inserted, and I am reading from the part in italics.

Mr. KERNAN. My colleague is right. He has read part of the amendment reported as section 5.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, I observe in one section of this bill that blind persons and women are excepted from its operation.

Mr. CARPENTER, "Provided."

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, yes, the Senator is quite right. They are excepted if "upon examination" it "shall be found by the court" that they are "worthy objects of charity."

Mr. CARPENTER. Therefore, a man who is not blind, but is an object worthy of charity, must starve before he can beg.

Mr. CONKLING. That is rather a physiological inquiry I should think for a court to judge whether a particular person who stands with a broom on a cross-walk and asks a passer-by for a penny is a proper object of charity. I do not know exactly by what judicial process that could be ever certainly ascertained.

Mr. CARPENTER. Or by what rule of economy.

Mr. CONKLING. Or, as the Senator from Wisconsin helps me by saying, by what rule of economy. As an old story says, we must draw the line somewhere; and where the line would be drawn in such a case as this I do not know. However, if it be the purpose, among draw the line somewhere; and where the line would be drawn in such a case as this I do not know. However, if it be the purpose, among others, of this bill to subject to this punishment and these proceedings minors, small children, decrepit persons, a one-legged soldier who turns the crank of an organ and holds out his hat as some one passes by, it seems to me that the Senate should pause before entering on such a field of legislation. Customarily I think such things are regulated by the ordinances of a city. When you come to the graver proceeding of an act of Congress leveled at all the little urchins of both sexes that may propose to somebody who passes along to give them something, it is a different matter.

I should borrow the suggestion made by another Senator if I were

I should borrow the suggestion made by another Senator if I were to add to my remarks that if some person comes here, a stranger, and asks somebody else for a cigar, I do not know but for the light of a cigar, or for a pinch of snuff, if there should be anybody found present from the Senate or elsewhere who could afford the gratification of a snuff-box, I do not know but that under this proposed amend-ment that would be an act of vagrancy for which this stranger might not only be arrested but might find himself condemned by proof which under this statute would be conclusive.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should like to make an inquiry. What became of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is still pending. The motion of the Senator from New York was to strike out part of the section, and the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is to amend it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from New York and to the Senate. I do not remember precisely what the Senator's amendment was.

Mr. KERNAN. I will state it again. I originally moved to strike out from the word "support," in the fifth line, to the word "alms," in the seventh line. The Senator from Massachusetts has amended the text now by striking out the word "or" and by striking out the word "idle," in the third line, and inserting after the word "vicious" the words "willfully idle," and that is the way it stands now. So my amendment is now as to these words, beginning in the fifth line:

Who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Your amendment would be to strike out those words !

those words?

Mr. KERNAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I made that inquiry because I want to support that motion. With those words in we shall make almsgiving a crime. The begging business may be very annoying, but still I do not think it ought to be made a crime. Vagrancy proper ought to be.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I notice another remarkable provision on the third page of this bill:

All persons known to be pickpockets or thieves, either by their own confession or otherwise, or by their having been convicted of either of said offenses, found loitering around any steamboat landing, railroad depot, banking institution, place of public amusement, store, shop, crowded thoroughfare, car, or omnibus, or at any public gathering or assembly, shall be taken and deemed to be vagrants, and upon conviction thereof—

Of course such a man must be convicted if he is found stopping there a moment-or any part thereof, in the police court, or in any court of competent jurisdiction, upon information filed in the name of the District of Columbia, be required to enter into security for their good behavior in a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars for a space of time not exceeding one year.

It would seem from this bill that any man who has once been convicted of being a pickpocket or of stealing can never find rest for the sole of his foot hereafter. If he pauses at a depot before the train starts and before taking his seat, if he pauses in front of a car or a steamboat, if he pauses to hear our friends make a democratic speech anywhere in the District of Columbia, that is vagrancy, for which he can be arrested and treated as a criminal under this act. "Or at any public gathering." If he loiters there for a moment, even to hear the burning and touching words of one of our friends on the other side of the Chamber upon some great moral or political question, he is a vagrant under this act, and there is no possible hope for him. That man is worse than the Wandering Jew; he cannot rest anywhere; for of course the District of Columbia is all there is in this world of any consequence, and if he can never pause here to catch breath what will

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask, sir, whether the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] has been adopted or acted on in lines 5, 6, and 7

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been; it is pending.
Mr. BAYARD. It proposes, as I understand, to strike out from the penal operation of this bill persons "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms."

I concur with the Senator who moved that amendment, that this is attempting to make a criminal and highly penal offense out of a simple case of misfortune. It strikes me that the whole of this section is liable to that charge of severity, of narrowness, of inhumanity, which affected that whole code of strict and narrow laws known as the Blue Laws. Every one knows that to-day for all the offenses enumerated in this act there are remedies, and efficient remedies, in the discretion of a sensible, orderly police force. All of these classes of indefined offenses against society, resulting from what we call vagrancy, not having visible means of support or fixed habitation, are all to-day within the reasonable line of power and discretion of a sensible and orderly police court regulated by a wise magistracy.

Sir, upon the letter of many of the clauses of this bill few persons in misfortune would find themselves safe. It proposes to punish a in misfortune would find themselves safe. It proposes to punish a man, woman, or child, to imprison him or her for twelve months or require him or her to find security in such an amount as excludes the very poor and the helpless.

Mr. President, it has been often said that laws were made to restrain only the weak, not the strong. In this case you are certainly following that idea. Those classes of the community who most need protection and those who are least able to avail themselves of the protection of the statutes are those who are the peculiar objects of the penal features of this act. I believe to-day that all the evils complained of can be coped with and repressed by such a police as should exist here; and I do not say that it does not exist in this city. The exist here; and I do not say that It does not exist in this city. The members of that force as far as they can meet the eye of the passer-by are respectable and orderly men. I take it for granted the justices of the peace and other committing magistrates are men of fair character and benevolent disposition. There is not substantially a single evil which is proposed to be remedied by this bill that cannot to-day be dealt with by the existing powers of the police and the committing magistrates. Indictments could be drawn, charges could be preferred under the language of this act which would embrace hosts of unfortunate and impropert results. tunate and innocent people.

I do not believe in harsh legislation, I do not believe that respect for the law is increased by exhibiting cases in which injustice, palpable injustice, so recognized by the moral sense of the community, will follow the execution of the law. I think it will tend to bring it into disrespect; I think it will tend to multiply the cases of legal oppressions and for that reason I shall segret to the execution of the law. disrespect; I think it will tend to multiply the cases of legal oppres-sion; and for that reason I shall regret to see any act so sweeping in its provisions leveled against those classes of the community who are most helpless to resist it. Examine the language of the bill and are most helpiess to resist it. Examine the language of the bill and this particular phrase now before the Senate, which I understand a motion has been made to strike out by the Senator from New York, people "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms."

Mr. VANCE. Will the honorable Senator allow me to suggest to him that that is modified by the amendment which has already been accepted by the committee, to wit, "all willfully vicious and disorderly persons?"

derly persons?"

Mr. BAYARD. I was not an inattentive observer of that amendment; but it strikes me that it has simply given a definition to what would constitute a vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly person, by saying that persons who habitually go from door to door or occupy while places for the purpose of begging are of that class.

public places for the purpose of begging are of that class.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, and I ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed. The time for the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders has expired, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of its unfinished business. Before laying it before the Senate, the Chair will present some bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6451) to amend and re-enact sections 2517 and 2518 of the Revised Statutes and changing the boundaries of a customs district in the State of Maine was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes so as to authorize a charge for melting or refining bullion when at or above standard was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other pur-poses, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Kernan, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That Benjamin Holladay be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of any amount for which the United States are justly liable to him on account of any seizure or destruction by hostile Indians of property owned and used by him in performing his contract with the United States to transport the mails on what was known as the overland mail-route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, between the year 1860 and the 13th of November, 1866; also on account of any loss of property and expenses incurred in changing his route in carrying the mail in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, and also for any property owned by said Holladay and taken and used by United States troops; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to hear and determine said suit upon the merits, and render judgment therein in accordance with the rights of the parties.

SEC. 2. Either party shall have the right to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States at any time within sixty days after the rendition thereof.

SEC. 3. If the said Holladay shall not commence said action in the Court of Claims within six months from the passage of this act, and prosecute the same to effect, then the said claims hereinbefore mentioned shall be forever barred.

Mr. GARLAND. Listated to the Senate vesterday, when I grave way.

Mr. GARLAND. I stated to the Senate yesterday, when I gave way for a motion for an executive session, that some time ago at the request of the Senator from New York, who offered this amendment, I took the papers in the Holladay case and examined them with a view of drawing a bill to send it to the Court of Claims. My first impression was that that would be the proper action of the Senate in respect to a bill for Holladay's relief. I examined the case most carefully and critically, as much so as I am capable of examining any case; and instead of coming to the conclusion that it ought to go to the Court of Claims, I came to the conclusion that he ought to be paid this money as quickly as possible by order of the Congress of the United States. That position I shall undertake to give my reasons for to-day.

First, let us know just exactly what we are trying, because this is a trial at last by the Senate. A trial is nothing more nor less than the application of certain principles of law to a certain state of case. Here, to produce a result we must ascertain the law in reference to the claim of Holladay as developed by the facts, and we are to apply the law to the facts. So I will read to the Senate now the beginning of this claim, which brings about the trial that the Senate is now engaged in. On the 6th of March, 1872, nearly nine years ago, this claimant presented the following petition to the Senate:

gaged in. On the 6th of March, 1872, nearly nine years ago, this claimant presented the following petition to the Senate:

Your petitioner, Ben. Holladay, of the State of New York, and a citizen of the United States, represents that from the year A. D. 1860 until the 13th day of November, A. D. 1866, he was contractor for the transportation of the United States malls on what has heretofore been known as the Overland Mail-Route between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah; that in the performance of his service in the transportation of the United States mails, amounting during much of his time of service to more than diffy tons of mail matter per quarter, he employed 110 coaches, 1,750 horses and mules, and 450 men and upward; that at great expense he was compelled to erect buildings, houses, stables, stations, and shelters for the convenience and shelters and protection of its men and animals along said mail-route and its tributaries, and also to provide at great expense of cost and transportation large supplies of food, forage, and wood.

Your petitioner further says that while engaged in the discharge of his duties as such contractor, in the faithful performance of his contract with the Post-Office Department, his service was interfered with, impeded, and obstructed by large and numerous bands of Indians, who murdered his agents, servants, and employés; who captured and carried away his horses and mules; who burned his store houses, station-houses, barns, stables, large quantities of forage, provisions, wagons, harness, clothing, and other property which had been provided for properly conducting the business which your memorialist had contracted with the said Post-Office Department to conduct and which he was compelled to replace at enormons expense and with tedious delay and damage in order to enable him to perform the service which he had contracted to perform.

And your memorialist alleges that very frequently after he had erected his buildings heretofore mentioned, and secured h

The Senate will please observe this:

Your petitioner, as a reason for his delay in urging his claim of damages for his sees occasioned as aforesaid, says that his claims were presented to Congress in

A. D. 1866, and that on the 24th day of January of that year his petition for redress was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives—

Now fifteen years ago-

Now fifteen years ago—and that subsequently, by a disagreement of the two Houses of Congress as to the proper relief to be granted, the measures of relief failed by the adjournment of Congress. Your petitioner comes now with his proffers of proof of his losses, and asks such relief in the premises as in equity and good conscience he ought to have.
And, as in duty bound, your petitioner will ever pray, &c.
BEN. HOLLADAY.

We have now, Mr. President, the statement of the case made by the petitioner himself upon which he asks relief, and he shows on the face of the papers, and the fact is verified by the records of Congress, that he has been active, diligent, and energetic in pursuing the remedy to which he supposed he was entitled. He has been haunting Congress now a longer time than the siege of Troy took, a longer time than the revolution of our Colonies in establishing their independence, a longer time than it took to suppress what is called the rebellion of the Southern States. It is no fault of his that he has not been paid.

It is said this is a big claim. Mr. President, this man was engaged in a big enterprise. He was engaged in no small business when he made these contracts with the Post-Office Department. He was engaged in no small and no light business when he undertook to carry this mail through this unknown country almost at that time, which has since become an empire of power and an empire of weight in this country; and this upon the very best testimony is shown to have been the entering wedge to the great railroad, this old-fashioned mail-coach, which is always the best harbinger of civilization in the western country. I hold in my hand a short letter from the then Postmaster-General addressed to the committee on an inquiry as to this matter, which I beg in this connection to read to the Senate:

ter, which I beg in this connection to read to the Senate:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of the 7th, which has just been received, I have to say that I well recollect the fact that Mr. Benj. Holladay carried the overland mails during my term in the Post-Office Department. His name does not appear, because he was a sub-contractor.

It was during that time that the route was changed from the northern to the direct line, a matter of great political importance. Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Holladay for the energy and courage which he gave to this great work. I regarded it as one of the triumphs of the Administration with which I was connected that we put a daily mail across the continent, and this led the way to the railway communication which came quickly afterward. Mr. Holladay's part in this great achievement was second to that of no other individual. He hazarded his property and his life freely in the enterprise.

That letter is from Montromery Blair, the then Postmaster-General

That letter is from Montgomery Blair, the then Postmaster-General of the United States. For the change of that mail-route and for the destruction of his property in consequence of it, for the taking of his property by the military authorities and using it in behalf of the Gov-property by the military authorities and using it in behalf of the Government, and for the destruction of his property by Indians, after this long delay this claimant is before the Senate for relief.

What has been the progress of his claim in the mean time? We have seen that because of the doubt as to the remedy he was entitled to he failed in 1866 to get any relief. He failed because of a difference of opinion as to parliamentary law, I suppose. Sydney Smith speaks somewhere of some one living in a country that was misgoverned too much on account of too much dictionary. This claimant has failed because of too much parliamentary learning possibly, or for the want of a sufficient amount of parliamentary learning some has failed because of too much parliamentary learning possibly, or for the want of a sufficient amount of parliamentary learning somewhere. But when he came with his petition, in 1872, to the Senate, that was referred to the proper committee, and on the 26th day of November, 1877, over three years ago, the committee reported a bill to send him to the Court of Claims. Accompanying that report there were twenty-three exparte affidavits, together with letters of three or four military officers, General Craig, Colonel Chivington, and others, establishing the facts set forth in the petition of Mr. Holladay. But insample as that testimony was exparte the Committee day. But inasmuch as that testimony was ex parts the Committee on Claims thought it was best to make it the foundation of his suit and send him to the Court of Claims. The language of the committee is that the testimony is rather loose in that particular form to give him the amount direct by an act of Congress, but it is sufficient to make the basis of a claim in order that he may prosecute it before the Court of Claims; and they report a bill for that purpose. The present report, the Senate will bear in mind, adopts this first report that was made in 1877 except as to the recommendation to send him to the Court of Claims. to the Court of Claims.

On the 12th of March, 1878, this first report, with the bill, being under consideration, what was done? The Senate did not adopt the report of the committee, but what did they do? The very same effort now made by the Senator from New York was then made here, but the Senate did not see proper to adopt the report and send the claimant to the Court of Claims. What did they do on the 12th of March, 1878? On the following resolution introduced by Senator Mitchell the case was recommitted:

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (S. No. 346) referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims; and

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

Resolved. That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report to the Senate what amount, if any, is equitably due the claimant on account of his claim; and the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and take testimony.

That was on March 12, 1878, now nearly three years ago. The claim went back to the committee. The committee took, in addition to these twenty-odd affidavits that were first filed, the depositions in due form of thirteen witnesses; I leave out now the deposition of the claimant, Mr. Holladay, and say there were twelve depositions, an even dozen, because under the act of Congress Mr. Holladay could not be allowed to testify in the Court of Claims in this matter. So we pass over his deposition, and there are twelve depositions taken in due form in addition to the twenty-odd affidavits the committee had when they first made the report.

No action was had on the second report made on that reference.

The third committee now comes, headed by the Senator from Missouri, who is absent from his seat, [Mr. Cockrell,] and adopts these other two reports, says that Holladay is entitled to $526,000, and files with that all testimony it has taken, both the ex parte affidavits and the thirteen depositions, counting that of the claimant, and the letter. The third contact has a supervised the second of the claimant, and the letter. To this day there has never been a minority report filed in this case of Ben. Holladay, and if there is any objection on the part of one of the committee to any of these reports, it can only be arrived at by implication. It has not been developed by anything that has been said or done here. The Senator from Missouri, on the 15th of June last, when the consideration of this case was pressed, did not say that he opposed the bill; he did not say that he opposed the claimant being paid anything, but he said that he expected to make a speech on it when it came before the Senate. That is his language as contained in the RECOED.

Now, Mr. President, we have these three reports by three committees of nine members each; three times nine are twenty-seven; and to-day the Senator from New York is not willing to pay this claim on their authority, and would refer it to five men who are no wiser than they, for all we know, to settle the claim of this man after all this time. It is a reflection on the committees; it is a reflection on twenty-seven Senators; it is a reflection on the Court of Claims, for in point of fact the law is settled in the case. Not even the Senator from New York himself has ventured to say that this party is not entitled to something. No one has ventured to say that this man has not established his right to a recovery; we get at the spirit and meaning of a law always by construing the letter of it; and the spirit and meaning of the resolution that was passed on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, Mr. Mitchell, was that the committee should find out what was equitably due the party. We believed he was entitled to something, and we sent the case to the committee to ascertain what that something was. It is now, then, before us simply as it would be before a court in the nature of a writ of inquiry to assess damages. There is by direct action a judgment by the court that this man ought to recover, and you stand now upon three reports of your committees, three different committees, to simply pass upon twenty-seven Senators; it is a reflection on the Court of Claims, for of your committees, three different committees, to simply pass upon this writ of inquiry and assess the damages of this man. That is all there is in this case.

Is there any allegation of fraud? I have heard none. If there be fraud in the case, why has it not been shown after this long time and these several different investigations. Certainly there has been time and opportunity enough; and the committees of the Senate in their examinations represent the Government and protect, in the eyes of the law, its interests as well as those of the claimant. They have examined and recevamined and cross-examined and every time they examined, and re-examined, and cross-examined, and every time they have reported for the claimant.

The amendment offered by the Senator from New York, in the face of all this, after three years of time since the recommittal with in-structions to take testimony and report the amount due, after three years' reflection since the testimony was brought in, sends this party to the Court of Claims without the right to use this testimony which has been taken in due form; when we know, or have every reason to believe if we do not know, that many of his witnesses cannot be reached, that some of them have passed beyond the reach of human process and human voice. It is not even proposed to send him into the Court of Claims with this labor of sixteen years that he has performed to get the reached but to each him there was to hear in the reached. the Court of Claims with this labor of sixteen years that he has performed to get his remedy, but to send him there now to begin de novo when I happen to know he cannot get a hearing under the most favorable circumstances for three years. Then he has to take an appeal or the United States to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court, we all know in our legislative capacity, is three years behind time. Thus you would send this man around from post to pillar six years more, under the benign proposition of the Senator from New York, after he has been here sixteen years already. years already.

This makes it criminal in effect for a man to have a claim against the United States. It is a large claim, and therefore it is bad and fraudulent; or it is small, and therefore it is too insignificant! Its very parvitude (if I may use an obsolete word) inhibits any investigation of it. Therefore Congress should pass some law fixing just exactly the amount of the claim a man must have before he can have it investigated.

Let us face this now; we have three reports of three committees; Let us sace this now; we have three reports of three committees; and let us see if we cannot settle it upon the facts of the case, because the law is clear; or if it is not, it is proved and established by the precedents cited in these three reports that the United States has always come forward and paid for property taken under the circumstances under which this was appropriated. It is not worth while for me to go over that part of the reports. When we should have sent him to the Court of Claims when the bill was reported in 1878, if we were going to send him at all, we failed to do it, and we ordered a committee of our own to settle the question and take testimony. They have taken that testimony in due form and upon notice and upon examination and cross-examination. While of course there is a good deal of testimony which is not entirely exact as to all the details of values, the amount due is not difficult of ascertainment by any person who can add up and subtract figures.

Look at the speech of the Senator from New York and his amendment, and what do they amount to? There is a dispute between Mr. Pease and Mr. Murdock as to thirty-four mules in one of the bills of Pease and Mr. Murdock as to thirty-four mules in one of the bills of particulars affixed to the report. Pease was trustee for this company, and it was his duty te know what property he had and what property he did not have. But suppose in point of fact now that Pease is mistaken and that Murdock is correct, what then? Murdock I will show presently only testifies to as far as he knew, and he says that six mules were taken, and those were all he knows of, as the report in the Record this morning says. Six from 34 leaves 28. The mules are estimated at $200 apiece. Twenty-eight times 200 make $5,600 that this man after sixteen years' toil and labor here is to be sent to the Court of Claims for! Then to make the amendment applicable it should read something like this:

"That whereas after sixteen years' labor on the part of Benjamin Holladay to get his bill through Congress to secure a remedy, and the report of three committees in favor of the same, there is some doubt whether he should have pay for twenty-eight mules, amounting to $5,600, therefore the whole case be sent to the Court of Claims for their determination and adjudication."

That is all there is in the benign and merciful proposition of the

That is all there is in the benign and merciful proposition of the Senator from New York! Rather than higgle about it and make the claimant go through five or six years more litigation, I suppose that Mr. Holladay might come in and enter a remittitur for that $5,600, and I trust that will conciliate and satisfy the Senator from New York.

and I trust that will conciliate and satisfy the Senator from New York.

But, Mr. President, Murdock says those mules were not taken so far as he knew. There is positive testimony on the other side that they were taken. Then the committee did just what juries have very often to do, resonciled the testimony, and they preferred to believe Pease.
The Senate, I think, will believe him because he had responsibility, and he was aware of the weight of that responsibility. They would be correctled to do it whether they wanted to a very resonable to all. and he was aware of the weight of that responsibility. They would be compelled to do it whether they wanted to or not according to almost the very first principle of law in the books of evidence, a principle that is almost prehistoric, pre-Adamite in law, that where one man testifies positively to a fact and another one only negatively, the positive testimony must be received and preference given to it always. There is a case recorded where two men testified in reference to the striking of a clock; one said positively that he heard the clock strike, and the other said he was in the room but did not hear it, and the court held that the testimony of the man who testified that he the court held that the testimony of the man who testified that he did hear it must be received. The committee did that here; they took the testimony of Pease in preference to the testimony of the man who said that as far as he knew only six mules were lost. It is to settle this overwhelming fact that this case is now asked to be sent to the Court of Claims. It is not respectful to the Senate, it is not respectful to the committee's report; I mean no disrespect to the Senator from New York when I say this.

That is the history, in short, of this case. Omitting the testimony of Holladay himself, take the depositions of the other twelve persons who were examined by the committee. They are not insignificant persons, persons that are unknown. Take the testimony of Colonel Eaton; take the testimony of Mr. Hughes, who I believe ran once for governor of Colorado, and some people said he was elected; I do not know how that was.

Mr. TELLER. He was not elected; we elected the other man.

Mr. GARLAND. He ought to have been elected, the Senator from

Mr. GARLAND. He ought to have been elected, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] says.

Mr. President, such is the character of the witnesses who establish this claim. I will not annoy the Senate by reading over the testimony, but take Mr. Hughes now, whose deposition is the last. He was called on the part of the claimant; he was sworn and examined by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Cameron.] He says:

That he resides in Denver, Colorado; that in the year 1861 he became connected with the business of Ben. Holladay as his attorney and general agent for the Overland Stage Line, owned by said Holladay; that from March, 1862, to March, 1863, he had intimate knowledge of the affairs of said line, the contracts and purchases of and for the same coming under his supervision during that year.

He is in a position to know of what he speaks. He goes on, then, to speak of the prices of horses and mules ranging from $175 to $250, oxen from $175 to $200 a yoke, and then as to hay, corn, and all those things. There is no dispute in the world that these are enormous prices. That is true; but there was an abnormal condition of affairs there that made everything dear, according to the testimony of every witness; and when we speak of the value of property taken or the value of property destroyed, it is the value of it when and where it was taken or destroyed. Horses and mules would not have cost so much here, would not have cost so much, possibly, in other States; but the fact that these prices were such as charged is established, not only by Mr. Hughes, but by every witness who testified.

When you examine the statement of accounts made by the committee you will find that not in half the cases do they take the maximum prices the testimony would have justified. In many items they take the minimum price, and in some they take the average price. It is a familiar principle in the practice of the law that in the assessments of damage before juries, where the testimony as to value ranges from one sum to another, leaving a large margin, the jury is at lib-erty to estimate anywhere within that margin and no injustice is done, and no verdict is set aside because of its being excessive on that account. What did this committee do? This committee took their testimony and examined it, and they settled upon the sum that is reported by them when they might very well have settled on the sum of $700,000 easily enough as any gentleman will see who undertakes to cipher it out, or they might have taken the minimum of $350,000 just as well. They did what we ordinarily say a jury does, they split They are nearer the minimum amount than they are the maximum that could be allowed under this testimony.

You may take this testimony as reported by the committee and possibly every Senator will take it and nearly every Senator would differ with his brother Senators in stating the account as a master in chancery or as an auditor appointed to settle this account. Each one would name a different amount, governed by his habits of business, by his habits of thought, by his impressions of law; but the committee were within the range of the law. In any state of the case they are within the full meaning and spirit of any law on the subject when they settle within the margin anywhere. They have settled within the margin, and settled nearer the minimum than the maximum. No injustice is done the Government. No count would undertake to set the margin, and settled nearer the minimum than the maximum. No injustice is done the Government. No court would undertake to set aside the verdict of a jury so found because of excessive damages. What I mean is that this testimony would well support a finding of a much higher amount than the committee propose; and it might be very well to support a finding for a smaller amount. Now, if the Senator from New York, who is a lawyer, who has framed a proposition to send the case to the Court of Claims, thinks this is too much—and that is all he really said in his speech on this bill—let him estimate what is fairly due to this person, and possibly the Senate may agree with him that that amount is due and not the sum of $526,000 named in the bill. The whole difficulty arises from the fact that the first impression made on the Senators is that these are large sums to pay. They were large sums to pay, and they were large sums that pay. They were large sums to pay, and they were large sums that Holladay had to pay to get these provisions, these mules, these horses, these wagons, and these oxen. The committee have settled it, as I contend, as favorably to the Government as it could be settled by any tribunal.

This application has been here a long time in a good many different forms. Something was said heretofore, I do not recollect by whom, that we should not pay this sum because it is an estimate upon greenback prices at the time the losses occurred. Very well; take it upon that basis. If Senators will take the pains to examine the relative that basis. If Senators will take the pains to examine the relative prices of gold and greenbacks during the years from 1861 to 1866, they will find that 40 per cent. off would be about a fair discount. Take that off now, if you please, from $526,000, and you will have $312,000 due Mr. Holladay at that time upon a gold basis.

Mr. McPherson. Why take off 40 per cent. *

Mr. Garland. I am arguing upon the objection which has been made. Of course when the Government says to Mr. Holladay, "You must do justice in this case," certainly Mr. Holladay has but to reply, "The Government must do justice also." Very well. The equitable principle is that when a man goes into a court of equity he must give equity; not that he must be a moral man particularly and give the other party everything he wants, but he must give everything the party is entitled to in the particular case. Very well, let us try it on that hypothesis. Mr. Holladay was entitled to $312,000 at that time, because the payment was due when the damage occurred, under the laws of all countries. Mr. Helladay has waited now over fourteen years, nearly fifteen years, for his pay. He has lain out of the use of laws of all countries. Mr. Helladay has waited now over fourteen years, nearly fifteen years, for his pay. He has lain out of the use of that money that length of time—that $312,000 computed on that basis. The Government exacts justice from Mr. Holladay and the Government must do justice to Mr. Holladay; that is, it should give him all he is entitled to in this case, and he gives the Government all it is entitled to. Now he has reduced his claim to $312,000 on a gold basis; then as he did not get his money at that time, he should be allowed a little interest; he is entitled to it. Of course as against an individual there would not be a second's controversy on the point, for at last it gives exactly the damage done and the man because he did not a little interest; he is entitled to it. Or course as against an individual there would not be a second's controversy on the point, for at last it gives exactly the damage done, and the man, because he did not have the use of his money, is entitled to interest. Put it at 5 per cent., which is a very small interest. I have given my note very often to pay money, and I have never been so fortunate as to get it at 4 or 5 per cent. Put it at 5 per cent. even, and you carry the sum to $530,000 due to Mr. Holladay at the present moment, leaving out the odd numbers. Mr. Holladay should be allowed to settle upon principles of equity, I take it; and if so you carry it over $4,000 more than the committee award him simply by the Government doing that justice she exacts of Mr. Holladay.

That is all there is, Senators, in this case. Take it upon either horn of the dilemma; take it upon the weight of the testimony, and he is entitled to his $526,000; and it is made so plain that I venture the assertion that no master in chancery in the country would surcharge the Government with less; and, on the other theory, that you remit him to the gold basis at that time, you should give him $312,000 as of that day; and then, if you give him a fair, decent, and respectable interest, he overreaches the report of the committee by nearly five thousand dollars.

Accompanying the report is an appendix, referring to the testimony in brief of the different witnesses.

which that testimony bears, as to the mules and horses at every station and corral destroyed, the wagons, and so on. I will not detain the Senate by reading it. I say, with some experience in these matters in the courts and in the Senate, that the case is made out more completely than nine-tenths of the cases are made out that come completely than nine-tenths of the cases are made out that come before any tribunal. If you are going to differ about the testimony, take it and settle it upon some basis of law and justice. All that has been pointed out to us now for nearly fifteen years shows that he is entitled to $526,000. I could, examining this case, satisfy my conscience, as I said before, with a less amount, or I could satisfy it with a greater amount. The books are full of just such findings as this. There are many cases going to a conclusion of this sort—a sulliting of the difference.

But, Mr. President, in the face of the reports of three committees, I prefer to give the benefit of the doubt to the committee of my own making in part. I prefer to give the benefit of that doubt to the claimant whose right to recover something is not denied and who has sought these chambers and the chambers of the other House for has sought these chambers and the chambers of the other House for the purpose of establishing his claim face to face with the Government. If I have a doubt on the question I will support the committee. Will the Senate stop to look for a moment at the personnel of the committee? Take the present chairman of the committee the Senater from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] and the chairman that preceded him, the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMillan.] Where, I ask, at least since I have been here, has anything been suffered to pass against this Government without the most absolute, the most thorough, the most perfect and searching inquiry initiated by these Senators? My honorable friend from Missouri is so noted for his economy—and I was glad to see this morning that he will have no opposition to coming back to the Senate—that he has been called the great objector in this body. It has passed the ordeal of the most the great objector in this body. It has passed the ordeal of the most severe scrutiny that any claim has ever passed yet. As I could very well give a verdict for either a smaller or a larger amount, I will give it for the committee that has reported this three times over, and we all know that there is a charm about the third time.

I know little or nothing about Mr. Holladay, and when I examined these papers first I had never laid eyes on the man; but I have said, and I repeat it, that I think the first great duty of this Government is to do justice to its citizens and not to keep them here asking for is to do justice to its citizens and not to keep them here asking for compensation, and send them first to one court and then to another. There must be nice pastime in this to some persons; but certainly it cannot be to the claimant. He came here year after year with that "hope deferred" which "maketh the heart sick," and sometimes almost killeth. In 1866 when I came to this city looking for my pardon, which I was very auxious to secure at that time, I met here a man named Ray, from Arkonsas, who had a claim for $2,500 for the destruction of a steamboat on the Lower Red River in the time of the war, and he told me if I would wait a few days he would get his money and would go home with me. He had to go through Little Rock. I waited on him, but I left him here. Six years after that I came back and here was Ray still at the Departments working away for his $2,500. I came here to attend the Supreme Court. By that for his $2,500. I came here to attend the Supreme Court. By that time I had got the pardon, and under the terms of my pardon it seems I was better than I was before I committed the offense, so the law I was better than I was before I committed the offense, so the law said, and I undertook to help Mr. Ray some. I thought his claim was just. Well, he got in sight of it he thought and his claim was certain in a few days, and if I would wait then he would go home with me sure. I would not wait the second time. I bade him goodbye at Willard's Hotel, standing against one of those posts. Six years from that time I was sent to the Senate; I came here, walked into Willard's Hotel, and there stood Ray not three feet from where I had left him six years before. [Laughter.] Said I, "How are you, Ray; have you got the claim?" Said he, "No, but I think I will get it in a few days. [Laughter.] I would like you to assist me; you are a Senator now." "No," said I, "you must excuse me; I cannot do anything." It went on about two years and Ray did get his claim, and when he paid up his lawyer's fees and hotel bills he had $300 left. That is an absolute fact to my own knowledge. This man discounts That is an absolute fact to my own knowledge. This man discounts that by a good deal. He has been here now before both Houses for lo! these many years, and out of mercy to him do not send him to the Court of Claims. He had better sign a release to the Government and go home at once.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, yesterday when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] spoke about the bankruptcy of this claimant, I really thought I had some right to suggest the number of millions that had been paid to him on the part of the United States. When he asked for justice for the claimant, I thought I was justified in asking for justice for the United States; but it seemed that I was out of order. Of course I do not pretend that it is right to discuss in asking for justice for the United States; but it seemed that I was out of order. Of course I do not pretend that it is right to discouss the merits of a question upon a motion to take up a bill, nor shall I at this time say a single word derogatory of the claimant. I have no doubt that he is an enterprising man, a large-hearted man, and if he secures this claim, I have just as little doubt that he will spend the money generously and liberally; he will not be a mean man about it. But, Mr. President, I do not understand that because he is a large-hearted man and an enterprising man that fact gives him any valid title to put his hand into the Treasury of the United States and take out half a million of dollars.

So far as I have been able to read and understand this question, I

So far as I have been able to read and understand this question, I do not believe the claimant is entitled to a single dollar. If there can be shown a single instance where a mail carrier has received compensation for damages inflicted by the depredations of Indians, why has not this committee shown it? I know of no such instance. The only instances that they pretend to exhibit here are some claims that occurred in Kentucky. We know there were no Indians there, that occurred in Kentucky. We know there were no Indians there, and those damages arose simply in consequence of the country being in a state of civil war. I do not know by which party the damages were inflicted, but those mail carriers, I understand by the report, were compensated.

The other case that they cite was not that of a mail carrier, but of some party in Oregon that had some of his property taken and destroyed, and a claim was presented here by the Senator from Oregon, and it was very light in character as to the amount claimed for the mules and the horses; but when that claim was adjudicated by the Senate, instead of allowing $30,000 it was cut down to $7,600.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I understand the law, parties who take contracts for carrying the mails are not entitled to recover any damages in consequence of any depredations that may be committed upon them by the Indian tribes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Before the Senator from Vermont passes from the point that he is now upon will he allow me to call his attention to a portion of the report which he has probably overlooked? The Senator from Vermont stated that no instance had been cited-

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I had observed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. So far as he observed. I call the Senator's attention to page 5 of the report. I read from the report upon that page, near the top of the page:

Acts of indemnity by the Government for losses by private citizens, and by citizens engaged in the Government service, by depredations of hostile Indians have been very frequent. In the case of Magraw, mail contractor from July, A. D. 1854, to August, 1856, on route from Independence, Missouri, to Salt Lake, (almost this identical route,) the Government gave him, by special enactment, $17,750, for losses in stock, stations, and supplies through Indian depredations during the two years he was engaged in transporting the United States mails on said route. As early as A. D. 1836, Saltmarsh, Avery & Co., mail contractors in Georgia and Alabama, lost their property by the Creek Indians. The Government, by special enactment, paid them for their losses $9,779. (See Statutes at Large, volume 6, page 882.)

These are two mail contractors that received indemnity.

These are two mail contractors that received indemnity.

Mr. MORRILL. But they were very inconsiderable in amount, and I know nothing at all about the circumstances.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The amount is inconsiderable, it is true; but their losses were inconsiderable in comparison to the losses of this man.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that I know of a large-hearted and Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that I know of a large-hearted and enterprising man from my own State who was carrying the mails from Texas into Arizona and New Mexico, and during the late war he had his stock destroyed and became a bankrupt. I allude to Mahlon Cotterill, certainly one of the most enterprising men of our State, and so far as I know he never while living made any claim for reimbursement on the part of the United States, nor have his heirs since. I do not think it is generally understood that mail contractors have any title to reimbursement for such losses. title to reimbursement for such losses.

But, Mr. President, if it were to be conceded that something should be done in relation to these cases, I call attention to the character of this measure. In the first place, this bill was originally introduced and the exact sum put in it in March, 1879, two years ago, copied from some report from the House, by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I would say that it was not reported by me. I introduced it on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin, whose committee reported it.

Mr. MORRILL. The caption of the printed bill says "Mr. Teller asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to bring in the following bill."

Mr. TELLER. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he said I

mr. Hellet. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he said I reported the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir. It was subsequently reported by the committee, and after it was presumed to have had special investigation; yet they report dollar for dollar precisely the sum indicated in the bill as originally introduced.

This bill is footbod like the state of the said of the

This bill is founded almost entirely upon ex parte evidence, upon ex parte affidavits, the poorest and leanest of all sorts of evidence, without undergoing the slightest cross-examination, and the parties testifying were, nearly every one of them, in the employment of the claimant at the time they gave their testimony. It is a sort of machine testimony, given very much as many petitions that are presented here, in due form. If any gentleman will take the trouble to look over this testimony he will see that it goes on, page after page, like this:

Affiant further states that on or about the last day of March, 1862, the Indians at the said station of Split Rock took from said line seven head of mules and eight set of harness, and that the mules were the value of $300 per head, and the harness $20 per set, making for said mules $1,400, and for said harness $160.

And so it goes on, giving the exact date and exact amount of the worth and the various stations where it was utterly impossible that these affiants could have been present and known all about it, going through statement after statement here without being subject to the slightest cross-examination; and yet the committee take the case upon this kind of testimony and report it without deducting one single picayane from the amount claimed by the claimant. Many of these witnesses testify to losses and yet do not testify to the amount and value of the same, and that, I suppose, has been put in by somebody; it does not seem to be by anybody under oath, I presume by the claimant, giving the amount of value of these horses and mules, $200 and $225 apiece. There is no deduction for old mules or for young ones; they were all of exactly the same value, old or young, young ones; they were all of exactly the same value, old or young, and whether they had been long in service or only a short time.

Mr. President, under such circumstances I undertake to say that if this testimony had been subjected to the scrutiny of even an ordinary lawyer, there is not a single affidavit in the printed testimony of these employés of the claimant that could have withstood an hour's cross-examination; it would have been torn all to pieces. Look at the difference between that testimony and the two little witnesses brought in on the part of the United States. They were subjected to a very severe cross-examination, such an examination as I think they ought to have been protected from. Yet the committee report that the preponderance of the testimony is against these witnesses, and throw out the testimony of these men because they testified that the mules were not worth so much; that they were worth $125 or $150 instead of $200, and that the stations instead of being worth one or two thousand, or $2,500, were not worth more than $300 or $600. Under such circumstances as these I think that the Senate cannot be justified in voting to pay half a million dollars to this claimant.

Again, how do we know that this party is the sole claimant for these damages? The report of the Postmaster-General does not show that he was the contractor; he appears to have been a sub-contractor in a large part of these heavy contracts; and the report from the Postmaster-General only shows a very small part of them. If we go on and give this man the amount that he claims for damages, how do we know that some other party may not come up and claim for a much larger sum or a lesser sum?

I ask that the Secretary read a letter received by me from the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 4, 1880.

Washington, May 4, 1880.

Sin: In reply to your verbal request I have the honor to inform you that the service from Saint Joseph, Missouri, to Placerville, California, from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1864, was performed by the Overland Mail Company, at a compensation of $1,000,000 per annum, the sum of three millions having been paid them for this service. The same company also performed this service from July 1 to September 30, 1864, for which it was paid $210,000, or at the rate of $840,000 per annum. On the 1st day of October, 1864, Ben. Holladay, as contractor, began performance of service from Saint Joseph, Missouri, to Salt Lake City, Utah, supplying Denver City, Colorado, at the rate of $365,000 per annum, which rate of pay was paid to him up to June 14, 1868, when his contract pay was reduced to $347,648.

Respectfully,

Hon. J. S. MORRILI, United States Senate. Mr. MORRILL. It seems a little singular that this claimant who took out this contract and ranit should have been willing to take it at a lesser rate when the contract expires. If he was not making money why did he choose to continue the contract at a lesser price? There can be no doubt that a high and a very enormous sum was agreed to be paid on the part of the United States on account of the extraordinary risk. A million a year for a single contract! Does not that involve something of risk? Of course on the very face of it it is evident that that must be so.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

tion? Do I understand from the report he has just had read that upon this contract the Department paid $3,000,000?

Mr. MORRILL. They paid a million a year, and afterward it was taken for $800,000.

Mr. TELLER. A million each year.
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. As the Senator from Vermont is about to conclude, I should like to ask him a question for information.
Mr. MORRILL. I will answer it if I can; I do not know that I

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am, as at present advised, very strongly inclined to concur with what the Senator has said as to the right of a mail contractor to recover for depredations committed by Indians. The rule of law, as I understand it, is that, the contract for the service having been entered into with a knowledge of those risks, with a having been entered into with a knowledge of those risks, with a knowledge that those depredations might occur, the presumption is that they were estimated for in fixing the amount to be allowed for the service. Conceding that, and agreeing, therefore, as I am inclined to agree, as I said, as at present advised, with the Senator on that question, I call his attention to the fact that this is not the only ground upon which the claimant claims damages. He says that in addition to the depredations committed by the Indians he was, secondly, required by an early of the covernment. quired by an order of the military authorities of the Government to change his route from that which was fixed by the contract, and that change his route from that which was fixed by the contract, and that that change involved a large expense; and he states a third ground of complaint, the first being the one stated by the Senator, the depredations of the Indians, the second being the change of the route. The third, he says, is that a large amount of supplies belonging to him was taken by the Government for the troops, and for that he asks compensation. I want to know if the evidence sustains those two last charges, that he was required to change his route and that a large portion of his supplies was taken by the Government to feed the troops, ought he not to be paid for those items; and if so, how much do they amount to; and if he ought not to be paid for those items, why not?

Mr. MORRILL. The only possible doubt about this case is the one suggested by the Senator from Georgia; but I call his attention to the fact that this claimant could at any time have surrendered his contract if he had chosen so to do. So far as the order of the military was concerned, I understand that the committee have allowed for damages in the Chivington case $50,000. This change is something that perhaps is worthy of consideration; and yet the evidence that the United States troops took any considerable amount of his property I think is very vague and indefinite. I do not find that there is anything very satisfactory on that point in the testimony thus far submitted. But why should the claimant have concealed his claim and never made any pretension of having a claim so long his claim and never made any pretension of having a claim so long as he was able to get a contract from the Government from 1862 to

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, the claimant did not conceal his claim. It appears from the evidence that as early as 1862 he came to Washington, after his property had been destroyed by the Indians, and had an interview with the President, President Lincoln, and with the then Postmaster-General, Montgomery Blair. He said to them that unless they would assure him that he would have protection in transporting the mails over the routes he would be compelled to abandon his contract. They assured him that he should have full and ample protection, and the Government, so far as it was able, I think, did furnish protection, but it was not able to furnish complete protection.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, the President told him that he would give him all the protection in his power, and undoubtedly he did so. If him all the protection in his power, and undoubtedly he did so. If he agreed to vary and change the contract, why did he not submit some written evidence that it was changed at that time? Even the Postmaster-General does not pretend to say that he gave him any assurance of any compensation for these damages.

Let me call attention to the character of some of the evidence upon which this claim is based. Here is the affidavit of Sol Riddle, the division agent of the claimant. He says:

At Platte Station we abandoned two hundred and fifty sacks of corn and teatons of hay; at Diamond Springs, two hundred and fifty sacks of corn and fifteen tons of hay; at Sand Hill, two hundred and fifty sacks of corn and fifteen tons of hay; at Alkali, two hundred and fifty sacks of corn and twenty tons of hay; at Alkali, two hundred and fifty sacks of corn and twenty tons of hay, &c.

Does anybody believe that that witness knew anything about the facts upon which he was testifying, that there were exactly two hundred and fifty sacks of corn at either of these places, no more and no dred and fifty sacks of corn at either of these places, no more and no-less? Two hundred and fifty sacks of corn was a six-months' sup-ply; they only received it once in six months, according to the testi-mony in other parts of this report; and yet this witness swears that at all these stations there were in round numbers just two hundred and fifty sacks of corn, and then there were in round numbers ex-actly ten tons of hay, or fifteen tons of hay. There is nothing small about any of these witnesses, either as to the number of sacks of corn or the number of mules or the prince propuration they are sackingted.

or the number of mules or the price upon which they are estimated.

Mr. President, I do not want any injustice done to this claimant or any other; God forbid; but I do think that if this claimant had had a valid claim against the Government of the United States for half a million dollars he should not have let it rest from 1862 to 1866, even, without presenting it to Congress, taking his testimony—of his own employés, mind you, all the time—dated in 1862, many of them concealed from the Government, which knew nothing about any such concealed from the Government, which knew nothing about any such testimony being taken, and of course it was not prepared to have any rebutting testimony, and then waiting from 1866 six years more, until 1872, before the case is presented again. I should very much like, if it were possible, to have had an inventory of this gentleman's business. Let us know whether he made or lost in pursuing this business. I have very little doubt that he made it a handsome business while he was in the employment of the Government. I do not understand that he became a bankrupt while he was a mail carrier of the Government, but it was only since arising perhaps (and I do not Government, but it was only since, arising, perhaps, (and I do not know anything about it,) from other investments, from other speculations, if he is a bankrupt; and I hope he is not. It strikes me that it is extremely strange that a claim of this kind should have been allowed to slumber for eighteen or nineteen years, or even fifteen ears, or ten years, without the claimant coming forward here and years, or ten years, without the claimant coming forward here and letting us know something more precise about it.

I wish to say, in addition to what I have said, one thing more, that if we pass this claim as it is presented here I think it will go far to justify the public judgment that Congress is a good place for a large claim but a bad place for a small one. I have no question but that if we establish this as a precedent, instead of having $500,000 to pay we shall have five or ten million dollars to pay within the next five or ten years for similar claims that will sprout out and come forth here with all of the appeals to justice that this has had or has seemed to have had in the arguments of gentlemen who have sustained it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making any extended remarks upon this bill, from the fact that I had not looked at the testimony or any of the papers in the case until this not looked at the testimony or any of the papers in the case until this morning; but the debate has exposed some facts in relation to it upon which I should like to be advised. I find that the petitioner himself in his memorial to Congress states certain facts:

That in the performance of his service in the transportation of the United States mails, amounting during much of said time to more than fifty tons of mail matter per quarter, he employed 110 coaches, 1,750 horses and mules, and upward of 450-

Will the Senator who has charge of this bill upon the floor, the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] or some member of the committee, please inform me why, in the transportation of fifty tons of mail matter, it was necessary to have so many coaches and horses and mules. Of course the mail was carried between the different stations along the route, not all of it throughout the whole extent of the route, but portions of it from station to station along the line. From one given station to another, thirty miles distant, there might be ten tons of mail matter or two tons, while to the next station less than one. For such a service why was it necessary to employ 1,750 horses exposed to all the perils of transportation through the Indian country, through which the Government had never contracted with the gentheman to give him anything more than the usual protection? Why did he want to expose that amount of property to hazard?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me to make a remark right there, I shall detain him but a single moment. The Senator stated that the amount of mail transported between two stations might be ten tons and between the next two stations not more than one or two tons. The fact is that nearly all the mail matter transported was through-mail matter. It went from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, and so on, to California.

There was very little local matter.

Mr. McPHERSON. But there were some intermediate stations, of course

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There were intermediate stations, but very few persons at those stations and very little local mail mat-

Mr. McPHERSON. The answer is perfectly satisfactory.
Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from New Jersey that between Saint Joseph, where the mail started, and Denver, six hundred miles, there was nobody, you may say. Of course the men around the station might occasionally have received a letter by mail, but after you passed a short distance beyond Saint Jo you passed beyond the settlement, and there were no farmers, no traders, nobody until you reached Denver, a distance of over six hundred miles. Then from there to Salt Lake it was an absolute waste, so far as people were concerned, and so it was after you passed Salt Lake until you got through to California.

Mr. McPHERSON. The answer is very satisfactory indeed. However, it has but very little effect upon the argument that I propose to make upon that point. We shall find, I guess, when we come to examine this matter minutely that instead of using 1,750 horses, 110 coaches, and the number of men here stated, for the transportation of the state of of the mail, they were employed in the transportation of passengers over the plains, for which the claimant received a very large compensation; and now he comes to the Senate of the United States and asks to put his hand in the public Treasury and take out of the public Treasury a compensation for services that he was performing for the general public, and for which the Government never agreed to reimburse him in the least particular.

The contract made between the two contracting parties, to wit, the Government on the one hand and the petitioner on the other, does not contain a single provision of any nature or character that he is to receive more than the usual protection from the different military stations established along the route which is usually given in those cases. But notwithstanding all that, he persisted in exposing to the perils of an Indian country an amount of property far in excess of that needed in the conveyance of the United States mails. Let us read the contract. The contract itself is a full answer to his whole demand. The contract was

First. To carry said mail within the times fixed in the annexed schedule of departures and arrivals, and so carry until said schedule is altered by the authority of the Postmaster-General of the United States, as hereinafter provided, and then to carry according to said altered schedule. 2. To carry said mail in a safe and secure manner, free from wet or other injury, in steam-vessels, and in a separate and convenient apartment.

This is with respect to the contract for carrying the mail on steamboats. Now turn to another contract. On page 4 you will find the contract for $186,000 per annum:

First. To carry said mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using therefor such means as may be necessary to transport the whole of said mail, whatever may be its size or weight or increase, during the term of this contract and within the times fixed in the annexed schedule of departures and arrivals.

Second. To carry said mail in a safe and secure manner, free from wet or other injury, under a sufficient oilcloth or bearskin if carried on horse, and in a boot under the driver's seat if carried in a coach or other vehicle, and in preference to passengers and to their entire exclusion if its weight and bulk require it.

It is not only implied in the contract but absolutely expressed in terms that the mails should be carried in any way he pleased, either upon horseback or in any other mode. Now, he says he has carried fifty tons of mail matter within three months. Does any Senator on this floor believe for one single moment that those fifty tons of mail matter, covering a period of three months in their delivery, could matter, covering a period of three months in their delivery, could not have been carried upon horseback or in wagons or coaches of some kind without the use of 1,750 horses and mules and 110 coaches to do it? The proposition upon its face is simply absurd.

I do not criticise the report of the committee in this matter, because I think upon the testimony adduced they believed that the claimant was entitled to compensation; but I think this is a phase of the question that the committee have failed really to investigate.

Let me go further. I suppose it is usual in making a statement of a case, particularly on the part of the party who expects to receive the benefit, to make it in such a manner that it will really appear plausible. Taking the report of the committee as we find it, (and, by the way, this is a full answer to the Senator from Georgia,) on page 9 the way, this is a full answer to the senator from Georgia,) on page 9 it appears that a claim has been made for removing stations from one line to the other, for which he claimed, I suppose, $77,000; at all events, the committee have awarded him $77,000. We will consider, then, the matter to be settled, that he has distinctly specified that $77,000 is due him for that service, and the committee have allowed it. We find on the same page that the memorialist claimed for the removal of the line under the Chivington order, for which the committee believe he is entitled to $50,000, and they report and recommend that $50,000 be is entitled to $50,000, and they report and recommend that $50,000 be given. We find, then, a very strange condition of things, not with respect to the report of the committee, but with respect to the action of the memorialist himself. We find a claim here for property said to have been taken by the Government itself for the support of the troops. For this he claimed $30,000, and the committee have awarded $30,000. I wish to know whether the petitioner had a claim against the Government for $30,000 that he could support by testimony that was convincing to the Department where during the set to the claim. was convincing to the Department whose duty it was to pay a claim of that kind. I say if he could have supported it by testimony that would have been satisfactory and sufficient to make it plain to the Department it would have paid a claim of $30,000 for provisions furnished to troops on the line.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Does it say "furnished?"

Mr. MCPHERSON. Yes. This claim is $30,000, and it is all that is awarded. Let me say that the memorialist himself magnifies the importance of this thing in the memorial. Even the smaller matters are mentioned as though they were matters of a great deal of importance, and the major ones are almost eclipsed.

Going further we find a complete answer to the inquiry of the Sena-tor from Georgia, and we find it in the report of the committee on tor from Georgia, and we find it in the report of the committee on the same page, page 9, to which I have referred.

Mr. MORRILL. May I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the language of the report on page 9? The committee say in relation to the $50,000 that the damage suffered was in the neighborhood of $50,000, and then very explicitly say in relation to this $30,000 that it was in the neighborhood of $30,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) Does the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. I yield.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That report was submitted by the committee to the Senate before the resolution was adopted in 1878 directing the committee to take testimony. In that report the committee recommended that the matter be sent to the Court of Claims for trial and adjustment.

Mr. McPHERSON. The committee very properly, on page 2 of the report, speak of the testimony as "being in the form of ex parte affidavits," and say that it—is, to a great extent, unsatisfactory; and your committee, although satisfied that a large amount of valuable property belonging to memorialist was so taken, do not feel justified in attempting to determine with any degree of accuracy the amount or value thereof.

I think it is due to the committee to say—
Mr. TELLER. That is the old report.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the first report.
Mr. TELLER. That is the first report made to the Senate, when we asked the Senate to send the case to the Court of Claims before the testimony was taken.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have in my hands the report of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin.

Mr. TELLER. That is the old report. It was recommitted to the committee.

committee.

Mr. MORRILL. But this report was readopted and rereported.
Mr. TELLER. It may have been left in.
Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to make a statement? This case was sent to the Committee on Claims. They reported that the petitioner had been a large loser; that they had not before them the means of determining accurately the amount that he had lost, in the neighborhood of thirty thousand dollars for one thing, in the neighborhood of fifty thousand dollars for another, &c. They recommended that the case be sent to the Court of Claims with anthority to take testimony and determine accurately all these with authority to take testimony and determine accurately all these things. Thereupon the Senate sent the case back to the committee directing them to take testimony themselves, to hear witnesses, allowing the United States to cross-examine the witnesses, if it saw fit. They did it. In making their second report, in which they state what they have ascertained upon evidence taken, and taken with great patience and thoroughness by the Senator from Wisconsin, they insert in it the first report; that is, they give the Senate the whole history of the thing. It is from that first report that the Senator from New Jersey is now reading.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is all incorporated in this report and forms

a part of it.

Mr. HOAR. I understand it; but, in other words, in the present report the Senator from Wisconsin says, "I have examined and ascertained these values, but I also produce for the information of the Senate, that they may have the whole history before them, an old report in which the committee reported that the man was a loser, said they had not examined the value, and recommended the Court of Claims to do it." Now, the Senator makes his point as if the present final report contained a statement that the committee had not exactly

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me say to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that if in reading as I now do from the report incorporated in the new report and becoming a part of the same I read a statement from the same committee and reaching a conclusion which in dollars and cents amounts to the identical sum, I certainly can not be very far wrong in my statement. Therefore I will proceed to read it. I find on page 9 a complete answer to the inquiry made by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Hill:]

Your committee further report that the evidence tends strongly to show that the damages sustained by the memorialist, Holladay, while carrying the mail of the United States, by reason directly of depredations and hostilities of the Indians along his route, was $369,739.

Of the amount that the petitioner now asks, three hundred and sixty-nine thousand and odd dollars, the major part of the whole sum is asked for depredations by the Indians. Upon what? Upon property that, under his contract with the Government, he had no right to expose to such peril. If so, it was at his own peril and at his own

I confess I would have more sympathy (I have sympathy now) with the petitioner if he had simply employed in the transportation of this property exactly such material as was necessary to carry out his contract with the Government, and if he had suffered and sustained a loss thereby I should have been more than willing to have seen him reimbursed, even if there was no such thing as a precedent for it upon the books.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he is not aware that it has been the policy of the Government to have the mails carried, not on horseback, but by coaches, and if that is not for the purpose of settling and developing the country? The Government would not have consented at that time to his carrying the mail on horseback.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know but that it has been the policy of the Government to do so. I think it would be very good policy if they would adopt if they would adopt it.

Mr. TELLER. It has been adopted.
Mr. McPHERSON. But at the same time there are circumstances attendant upon almost every case which require that case to stand alone. If the Indians were committing depredations through the country along the route traversed by these stage-coaches, the probability is that he would have but few passengers to carry. But the petitioner made a proposal to the Government to carry the mails for a certain period of time with the full knowledge that upon that route were hostile bands of Indians; knowing full well that he must confront them some time during the period that he had contracted with the Government to carry the mails, and still he employed an amount of property, according to the statement of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. Garland,] approximating a million dollars, when no more than one hundred thousand dollars was necessary to perform the service, and put it at the mercy of bands of hostile Indians, and then comes to the Government and asks it to reimburse him. Why did he do it? Simply that he might profit out of the proceeds of the country along the route traversed by these stage-coaches, the proba-did he do it? Simply that he might profit out of the proceeds of the passenger travel across the plains at extraordinary rates.

Mr. President, there is another fact to which I wish to call attention. I will say nothing of the witnesses, because I know no reason why the testimony of an honest stage-driver is not as competent as that of any other man, whatever may be his position in life. But there is one most significant fact attached to this whole case. There cannot be found one particle of testimony that does not emanate from some man in the employ and in the pay of the petitioner.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin The Senator from New Jersey states that a little stronger than the fact.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I withdraw it, because I state again I have not read all the testimony.

Mr. MORRILL. There are two or three witnesses besides.
Mr. MCPHERSON. The major part of the testimony, then, is of that character. I will correct my statement.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator must see that the persons who had knowledge of these facts were persons engaged in the business.

Mr. CARPENTER. It must in the nature of things have been so. Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It must have been so in the nature of things. Therefore it is not at all surprising that the witnesses called to substantiate this claim are persons who were employed by Mr. Holladay, and who consequently were acquainted with the facts. Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; I stand corrected upon that remark and ask to withdraw it. I stated that all the testimony was of that character. I will now say the major part of it is. I confess that the Senator from Wisconsin is quite right in saying that it was impossible for the petitioner to produce any testimony other than the kind he has produced, to wit, the testimony of those people who were in his employ, because I suppose no other testimony was attainable.

I am not a lawyer, and I know but little of the rules of evidence, but I profess to have something of a practical knowledge of men and things. I read in the testimony, for instance, with regard to values placed upon certain commodities which appear in the bill of particulars filed by the petitioner. I find in almost every instance so many tons of hay, $50 per ton; ten tons of hay, $50 per ton; fifteen tons of hay, $50 per ton.

I read also in the testimony that it became necessary to transport I read also in the testimony that it became necessary to transport this hay long distances. Let it be remembered that these are specified sums. For instance, at Liberty Town so many tons of hay, $50; at Valley Station so many tons of hay, $50. I see in the testimony that it became necessary to transport this hay at times a long distance, and that the cost which appears in this bill of particulars was made up largely of the expense of transportation. It does seem to me as though there might have been found a certain amount of hay nearer some of those stations. The experience that the people of this country have had with respect to that section since that mailroute was run is that there are some places along that line where grass does grow. It would seem that it should not have been necessary to pay the same amount at each station. I can readily conceive that the Government had at that time very extensive plains covered that the Government had at that time very extensive plains covered with grass, where the petitioner was at perfect liberty to go at any moment with the immense force of four hundred and fifty men whom he had employed to cut grass and cure it and store it for his own use. I can readily conceive that where hay had to be transported for a distance there was an increased price, and if it was stolen by the Indians perhaps he was quite right if he was going to make out a bill at all to make out a fair one; but at the same time it does seem to me, the sums ranging from $30 to $50 a ton, as though the evidence to me, the sums ranging from $30 to $50 a ton, as though the evidence and petition together meant to make out a case as favorable as possible to the petitioner. In other words, with all due deference to the committee, I for one, had I been a member of the committee, would have refused to accept that kind of testimony as conclusive.

Mr. President, I might go further, as there are a great many things involved in this bill that do not commend themselves, at least to my judgment. Certainly if the petitioner had not had seventeen hundred and fifty horses and mules to feed he would not have had three hundred and sixty-nine thousand dollars' worth of feed to sell the Government at $50 per ton for hay, much of which I suppose never cost him more than one, and corn to sell the Government at $5 per sack. In other words, he would not have suffered in his pocket to the extent In other words, he would not have suffered in his pocket to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars if he had simply devoted his energies and money to carrying out his contract with the Govern-ment, and not the additional contract that he saw fit to make for the transportation of passengers.

If I could be informed more fully with respect to the points that I have raised, I should like very much to receive the information.

Mr. TELLER. I think I can inform the Senator as to some of those points, if he is really anxious to know the truth. If he has raised points, if he is really auxious to know the truth. If he has raised these objections simply as a method of fortifying himself in his opposition to the bill, I do not suppose that anything I shall say will make very much impression upon him.

During all the time that these troubles existed and these damages occurred, I was a resident of that immediate section of country. I have had some personal observation about this person and about this route. I never knew the claimant until I came here as a member of the Senate. I may have seen him and probably have been introduced to him, but certainly I did not know him by sight when he first met me here at the Capitol; but I have known the stage line, I have gone over it again and again, not only between the river and Denver but much farther, more than a thousand miles beyond Denver, over this particular line, and I have passed over it during the time that these troubles existed. I have ridden on his stage carrying my rifle on my arm day and night to protect myself and my family and my fellow-passengers. I have known something of the difficulties of carrying the mail through such a country, and I believe to-day that the amount reported by the committee is not anything like the damage that this man sustained and that the Government ought to damage that this man sustained and that the Government ought to pay. I believe the Government ought to pay it, in the first place, because I believe it to be the highest obligation of the Government to carry mail matter to its citizens in every part of the country. do not care how much it costs. I am not one of the men who have ever believed that the postal service should be a paying service any more than the Army; and I believe it would be better to expend $40,000,000 a year for postal service than $40,000,000 a year for the

I believe it was the duty of the Government to carry this mail across the continent. There were at Denver and in the country suracross the continent. There were at Denver and in the country surrounding it 25,000 people, citizens of these United States, who had gone there in pursuance of a right given them under the laws to make their homes in that country and to build up a new commonwealth. They were entitled to the mail, not to be carried on a pony express, but to be carried in a coach, so that when they saw fit to come and go back and forth they might have the ordinary conveyance adapted to civilized communities and to civilized life.

This man carried the mail under a contract. the part of the Government that he would furnish these facilities. I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that he could not have carried it any cheaper. If he had taken seventeen hundred or any other number of horses and put a mail-rider on every one, it would have cost him as much as to run the coaches. He could not have cheapened this method of transportation.

The trouble seems to be the price. That is one objection. Another is that the character of the men who have testified is not quite as exalted, at least their occupation was not quite as exalted, as that of some of us who are present here to-day. I believe that I have seen a great many men on the frontiers who drove stages, and whotended the stock at the stations, whose word would go as far with me and with every other man who knew them as that of any man I ever knew, no matter what might have been his position and no matter what might have been his pretensions. Because these men drove stage, because they were superintendents of a mail division, because they were the men who curried and dressed the horses in the stables, it cannot be said with any degree of decency that they are not it cannot be said with any degree of decency that they are not entitled to credit.

But in this testimony we are not left to those men. There is the testimony here of General Mitchell, who testifies that the hay was worth $80 a ton. There is the testimony of Mr. A. S. Hughes, a respected citizen of Denver, an acquaintance of a number of Senators on this floor; an honorable gentleman, whose word would go anywhere where he was known as quick as that of any other man in the land. There is the testimony of Bela M. Hughes, who was the democratic candidate for governor in our State four years are a man land. There is the testimony of Bela M. Hugnes, who was the democratic candidate for governor in our State four years ago—a man against whom in all the excitement of politics no one dared to say a word derogatory of his general character; one who every man in the State of Colorado is proud to own as his friend. He testifies as to the value of these articles, as to the loss of some of them, and as to the general character of the claim. As to the testimony of Mr. Hooker, an experienced stage man living in Iowa having no earthly connection with this claim. tion with this claim, I would appeal to the Senators from Iowa if his tion with this claim, I would appeal to the Senators from Iowa if his word in a court of justice in Iowa would not be as good as that of any other man in the State. I venture that they will respond in the affirmative. He testifies to higher prices for horses and higher prices for harness than have been allowed by the committee.

Senators here seem to be disposed to deal with this case as if it belonged to the Atlantic coast. They insist upon applying to it the rule as to prices which would prevail in New England or New York. The proof here is that the Government paid at Leavenworth $175 for horses, and could get none for less. No horse could be bought on that stage line for $200. Not a horse that was fit to run could be purchased anywhere in that community for $200. In Colorado, which is only a third of the way across this stage line, mules sold, to my personal knowledge, all the way from $250 to $500, and three, four, and five hundred dollars were paid for horses. Senators should remember that that was a far-distant land then. There were no railroads west of the Missouri River. Horses were being bought up by the Government for its use in the South. The Government was a great purchaser of horses at that time, commencing with almost the by the Government for its use in the South. The Government was a great purchaser of horses at that time, commencing with almost the first movement of this stage company in 1861.

The honorable Senator said that there were places where they could cut hay along the line of the road. Undoubtedly there were some places and undoubtedly they did cut hay in some places; yet General Mitchell swears here, not in an affidavit but before the committee, that the Government offered $80 for hay and could not get it. All the testimony shows that hay was worth more money than is allowed by the committee. I have seen hay sold in the town in which I live. by the committee. I have seen hay sold in the town in which I live, much nearer the hay fields than the great portion of this route, for $120 a ton by the ton; I have seen it sold in smaller quantities for from three to four hundred dollars a ton; and there are other Senators here who have seen the same thing in the West. The wood that was burned at these stations was worth $40 and $50 a cord. Every board in the buildings that were put up was worth from one Every board in the buildings that were put up was worth from one to five hundred dollars a thousand. Lumber was sold during that time in the community in which I live for more than $100 a thousand, and then it had to be transported three or four hundred miles to these places down the Platte River. In some sections of course the lumber was comparatively cheap. Take the Black Hills. When you passed beyond the arid hills into the timber region you could buy timber at a moderate sum; that is to say, you could buy the logs and build in that way; boards could not be had at all. If Senators would just stop a moment and think of the difference between that country then and this country or even between that country then country then and this country, or even between that country then and that country now, they would see that these prices are not extortionate, that they are not unreasonable.

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill.,] who has read us a homily upon this question, says it is astounding that this man should have allowed fifteen years to go by and not make a claim; and that, too, when the evidence stands upon the records of the Senate and upon when the evidence stands upon the records of the Senate and upon the records of the other House that he made these claims in 1862 and has pressed them ever since. He has haunted the Senate like a ghost, asking that he might have this bill presented to the Senate and passed on, and the Senator from Vermont has never been ready that it should be voted on yet, and he is not ready to-day. There has not been any disposition to dispose of this case and come to a conclusion whether the Government did owe this debt or not. We are met here by the the Government did owe this debt or not. We are met here by the very astonishing argument, if it can be dignified by calling it an argument, by the statement, that if we pay this claim we may pay $10,000,000 more. If we owe $10,000,000 more weought to pay it. I have an idea that there are some people in the United States who are entitled to be paid who have never been paid and never will be paid. There are claims for millions of dollars presented by the citizens of Colorado, of Kansas, of Utah, of Montana, and Idaho for depredations committed by the Indians on their persons and on their property. I believe they ought to be paid. I believe it is a debt that the Government owes, and it is a debt for a great many years that the Government of the state of the state ment recognized and the Government paid. But I do not see that this case will make any precedent. I do not see that this will form a precedent that will compel us to pay those claims. The Senate is a law unto itself, and precedent never bound it anyway, but it ought to be bound to pay the honest obligations that the Government owes. The Senator from Vermont says that the contractor, Mr. Holladay, could have abandoned the contract. Grant it; nobody denies it; nobody doubts it. War would have released him from the contract. What did he do? He came here and the President of the United States and the Postmaster-General said, "You must not abandon your contract; you must carry the mails, and for whatever you suffer financially the Government will make whole." I expect to hear the Senator from Vermont rise and say that the President and Postmaster-General were not the agents to make such a contract and that they tor from Vermont rise and say that the President and Postmaster-General were not the agents to make such a contract and that they had not any authority to do it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator a question upon that point, for with me it is a very important point. Where is the evidence that the President and the Postmaster-General entered into that obligation?

Mr. MORRILL. The claimant says so. Does the Senator from Georgia want any higher evidence than the word of the claimant?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I did not ask for that. I want the evidence; I want to know what the evidence is, without passing upon its character first. I want to know first what it is.

Mr. TELLER. The evidence is the sworn testimony of Mr. Holladay, and Mr. Otis, who is a reputable gentleman residing in the city day, and Mr. Otis, who is a reputable gentleman residing in the otig of New York—reputable so far as I know, except that he has some connection with this claim, and that, I suppose, will be enough for the Senator from Vermont to destroy his character. It is not denied, it is not disputed by anybody, that such a contract was made. The necessity for keeping up that communication with those people everybody ought to admit. When 25,000 men had assembled around the foot of Pike's Peak to make a home and develop that region and the foot of Pike's Peak to make a home and develop that region and who sent one-fourth of all the people who were there into the service of the United States, who furnished a greater quota to the Army in proportion to their population than any other section of the Union, should the Government leave these men there without any mails to save a few paltry dollars? The fifty or sixty thousand people assembled in the Salt Lake Basin, although they might be Mormons, were citizens of the United States, and were entitled to their mail, and it was a duty of the President and the Postmaster-General to see that these men had an encortunity of receiving that mail no matter what these men had an opportunity of receiving that mail, no matter what it might cost. The Senator says that the claimant did not present his claim. It is apparent from an examination of the evidence that immediately when these losses occurred he took the testimony, filed the affidavits, and presented the claim as well as it could be presented. It has been here ever since, and he has been ever since appealing to Congress to make good the promise of the President of the United States and the Postmaster-General to pay him for the losses he sustained.

Mr. President, I do not propose to testify about this matter. I have seen the burnt ranches of this man. I never went before the committee, neither have I given my testimony to the committee, but I have seen the dismantled stations, and I have seen the dead stock. I have walked on foot after these coaches because there was no stock to carry the coach, it was destroyed by the Indians, carrying my rifle on my shoulder as I marched. That is what we underwent in the on my shoulder as I marched. That is what we underwent in the West. This man kept up the mail as best he could, at great expense, sometimes a week and sometimes two weeks intervening, and at one time six weeks, when the people of Colorado had no connection what-ever with the East, and that, too, in the most exciting condition of public affairs in 1864.

Let me say one thing suggested by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Carpenter.] In the beginning when this contractor came here there was anxiety as to what was to be the condition of California with reference to the public disturbances. Everybody knew that there was a vast number of people in California who sympathized with the rebellion, and it was a question whether California was going to remain in the Union or whether she would attempt It was a necessity that communication should be kept up, to go out. It was a necessity that communication should be kept up, and the Government felt the necessity of keeping up its communication not only with California but with Colorado and with Utah, and for the purpose of keeping those Territories in close connection with the Government of the United States it authorized the raising of troops through that section of the country. We are told that $500,000, which is the expense of having kept up the mails during the three years, in addition to what the Government has paid is an enormous sum and that the Government ought not to pay it.

Mr. President, since I have been a member of the Senate I have noticed with pain that every time a proposition comes to vote money for the benefit of the section that I in part represent it meets the sturdy opposition of some Senators living in another section of the country. I regret it; and when you talk about sectionalism much of it arises from the fact that there is in the Senate, and there has been ever since I have been here, a disposition not to do entire justice to the section of the country called the West. This claim comes from the West; perforce it must be a fraud, and perforce, I suppose, every man who defends it here must be in collusion with the claimant, because I hear it stated that if this claim passes, if the bill becomes a law, cause I hear it stated that if this claim passes, if the bill becomes a law, the public will understand that it is a great deal easier to get a big claim through than a little one. What does the Senator mean? Does he mean that because this is a big claim the claimant proposes to he mean that because this is a big claim the claimant proposes to divide, and that Senators are supporting it on that ground? If he does not mean that, then there is not any point at all in the remark that he made. I do not suppose he will admit that he meant that; I do not suppose that anybody will admit that; but that kind of language has been repeated day after day in the Senate to my disgust, and I think to the discredit of the Senate. I think it ill befits the honorable Senator from Vermont to come here and present that kind of an argument to the Senate of the United States. It is beneath the dignity of this holds. nity of this body.

Mr. President, I have the same interest in this claim that every other man has—an interest to see the Government of the United States deal justly with its citizens. It has become a by-word all over the country that a man who has a claim here might as well let it go as to attempt to get it. We may occasionally allow a claim that ought not to pass, but we had better allow a million dollars every session than deprive the citizens of the United States who have just claims at our hands of their right to redress. If now and then a claim slips through that ought not to have passed, I would rather it should go through and that the people who have honest claims should be paid than that they should fail.

I do not believe the opposition to this bill has been very anxious to arrive at the facts. One Senator tells us that he has not read the testimony, and yet he proceeds to attack it on the ground that it is not true. Another tells us that the testimony comes from a class of not true. Another tells us that the testimony comes from a class of men that must be received with suspicion, overlooking the character of the men whom I have named and overlooking the fact that a man's business has nothing to do with his veracity. Mr. President, you may go into the cultured regions of New England and you will find as many men who will dodge the truth as you will find in the rough and uncouth regions of the West. It does not make any difference where a man was born or where he lives or what he follows in determining the question of his veracity. It is a question that depends upon his moral character and his moral standing. I say there is not a thing in this testimony that would lead a fair-minded man to doubt the accuracy of these statements. There is the testimony of Robert J. Spottswood. He is a stage man, and I will venture to say that there is not a court in Colorado that would not receive Spottswood's testimony with as much favor and as much credit, as that of wood's testimony with as much favor and as much credit as that of any other living man, no matter how high he may be in social life or social position.

I believe the claim is an honest one and I believe it ought to be

I believe the claim is an honest one and I believe it ought to be paid. The Government has left this man knocking here year after year and I believe has done him great injustice; I am willing to vote for the payment of the claim, and I am not to be frightened by the suggestion that somebody will think that there is a job in it, nor by the suggestion that there will rise up numerous claimants presenting claims of this character and therefore we shall establish a bad precedent by passing this bill.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, this is a large claim, and one that is sustained mainly by ex parte testimony. A generation has passed since the claim had its origin, and it behooves us to closely scan the testimony upon which it is based, to look at the history of the claim, to examine it in all its bearings, to see whether the United States justly and equitably owe this $526,000, and if so to pay it. If they owe a part of it, that should be paid, but that fact and the amount should be first judicially ascertained. Where are we most likely to find light on the subject of the correctness and equity of this claim? Is it here and now, after a generation has passed, or is it in the Congress light on the subject of the correctness and equity of this claim? Is it here and now, after a generation has passed, or is it in the Congress that was in existence when the work was done and the claim had its inception? I have turned to the record, and I find that in the Thirty-ninth Congress, on January 24, 1866, for the first time there came to the House of Representatives a petition by the claimant for relief for injury done him by Indian depredations. I have been unable to find the original or a copy of it. This petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was reported back in the form of a joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) by the now Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM 1. The form of that joint resolution is as follows: The form of that joint resolution is as follows:

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holladay as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

That joint resolution was passed by the House in the words I have ven. In it we find no word about Indian depredations, not a sylgiven. In it we find no word about Indian depredations, not a syllable. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Claims, of which I believe Mr. Clark, of New Hampshire, was chairman. It was reported back with an amendment, and on the 17th of May, on motion of Mr. Nesmith, was taken up and passed by the Senate, first adopting the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims. What was that amendment? It was to strike out the matter that is made most potential here now as an argument in support of the claim.

The amendment thus reported and adopted by the Senate—all of the original joint resolution that relates to damages for change of route by military order—that provision was stricken out of the resolution, and the claim stood only upon the justice of the demand for property taken by the military authority. I refer Senators to the Thirtyninth Congress, first session, page 2636, Congressional Globe, May 17, 1866, for the data I thus give. In the debate that followed Mr. Pomeroy resisted the striking out. Mr. Clark, however, insisted that it should be stricken out. He (Mr. Clark) said:

should be stricken out. He (Mr. Clark) said:

This is a joint resolution from the House of Representatives. As it came to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and read in this way: "That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holladay as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment." The Committee on Claims came to the conclusion to recommend to the Senate to strike out that part of the claim which was for damages for change of route, and to let the other part of the claim for property alleged to be taken by military orders go to the Court of Claims, and no more; and we think that is a better tribunal than the Committee on Claims and the Senate.

Mr. POMEBOY. I do not wish to contest the amendment, but I have this to say: Benjamin Holladay, who had the overland contract, made his stations every fifteen miles on a given route, and bnilt houses. The military authorities.

Mr. McRHEPSON. May Leek the Senator from Penyselvanie to

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to please state in this connection what sum of money of the whole amount claimed could have gone to the Court of Claims under this report? Thirty thousand dollars only of the $526,000, I think.

Mr. WALLACE. Permit me to finish Mr. Pomeroy's remarks.

The military authorities told him to abandon all those and to go to another line, because they could protect him from the Indians on that other line. It is a question of equity whether he ought not to have some compensation for the abandoned houses and stations that he had built at great expense.

Now hear the chairman of the Committee on Claims in answer to Mr. Pomeroy on Indian depredations:

Mr. CLARK. I ought to say that the Committee on Claims examined the claim so far as to see precisely what it was. I doubt very much whether he can set up any military order in the case; but we concluded to let the whole matter go for adjudication to the Court of Claims.

When the resolution went back with this amendment put on by the Senate Committee on Claims and adopted by the Senate the House refused to concur, and so informed the Senate, and a committee of conference was asked and was appointed by the Senate. The House also appointed a committee of conference, and there the matter dropped. We hear no more of it in that Congress. What follows? Is this claimant a prompt and eager claimant for equity and right? His claim is not heard of in the next or Fortieth Congress, except that in that Congress leave was granted to Mr. Holladay, on December 5, 1867, to withdraw his papers from the files. That is all we hear of Mr. Holladay then. In the Forty-first Congress no word about his claim is found in the Journal.

During the Forty-second Congress, on March 25, 1872, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] presented the memorial of Mr. Holladay which has been alluded to to-day. It was referred to the Comladay which has been alluded to to-day. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that committee was discharged, and it was, April 22, 1872, referred to the Committee on Claims. No more is heard of it in the Senate in that Congress, and it is unheard of in the House. On the 15th of December, 1873, in the Forty-third Congress, Hon. Benjamin F. Butler presented Mr. Holladay's petition for relief. That is all we hear of it in the House during the Forty-third Congress. On the 13th of January following, in the Forty-third Congress, Mr. Hitchcock presented the memorial of Mr. Holladay in the Senate, praying to be indemnified for losses sustained by Indian depredations: it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and we hear redations; it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and we hear no more of it in that Congress.

Then we come to the Forty-fourth Congress. In the Senate, on the 8th of December, 1876, Mr. Mitchell moved to refer the papers on file to the Committee on Claims. They were thus referred, and that Senator early in 1877 reported a bill to send the claim to the Court of Claims, and accompanied it with a report No. 583. It was not Senator early in 1877 reported a bill to send the claim to the Court of Claims, and accompanied it with a report, No. 583. It was not reached during that Congress, and no action was had in the House. In the Forty-fifth Congress Mr. Mitchell, chairman of the Committee on Claims, on October 16, 1877, again moved to refer the papers to his committee, and on the 26th of November, 1877, a bill was again reported back referring the case to the Court of Claims. What occurred then? The bill and report of the Committee on Claims came up for consideration March 11, 1878, and it was discussed at length. The language of the bill did not suit the lawyers on this floor, and the ex-Senator from Michigan, Mr. Christiancy, and others so criticized the language used as to the character of the testimony to go to the court that he satisfied the Senate that the word "competent" ought to be placed before the word "testimony," in order that the Court of Claims should have other knowledge of the facts on which the claim was based than ex parte proof, so that the court might be the claim was based than ex parte proof, so that the court might be able to scrutinize it carefully. The Senate sustained this view and thus amended the bill, so that when the case came before the Court of Claims it was to be adjudicated there upon competent testimony. What followed? The chairman of the Committee on Claims, Mr. Mitchell, moved to recommit the bill to his committee with instructions and it was so recommitted and it was constituted.

tions, and it was so recommitted, and it was recommitted to do what? To take up the case and examine it ex parte, to take up the case and investigate it upon the testimony before it by the committee itself, and to report back what was equitable and just. From the beginning until this time there had been no willingness, no consent to have the claim judicially examined, carefully scrutinized, but ex parte testimony only was the basis of the claim. It went again to the Committee on Claims, under instructions to send for persons or papers and report what was equitably due. They examined it mainly on the ex parte testimony and they have reported back this bill, and now they resist again our desire that it may go to the Court of Claims and be examined there.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am certain the Senator from Pennsylvania does not desire to misstate any fact.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator has stated that the Committee on Claims, after its recommittal to that committee, as I understood him, examined it upon the ex parte testimony alone

Mr. WALLACE. I said mainly upon ex parte testimony. I know that other witnesses were called.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I thought the Senator overlooked that fact.

Mr. WALLACE. No; I know that fact; but it was mainly upon

Mr. WALLACE. No; I know that fact; but it was mainly upon the ex parte testimony which had been in existence long before.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I doubt if it was mainly on that; but that is a question of opinion.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the statement I make will be borne out by the record of the testimony. However, the bill comes back, not to send the case to the Court of Claims, but to give this claimant what he is equitably entitled to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania observe the resolution under which the claim was recommitted to the committee?

Mr. WALLACE. I do. Mr. Mitchell moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report what amount, if any, is equitably due to the claimant.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The committee was not at liberty under the order of the Senate—

Mr. CARPENTER. Not with a view to send it to the Court of

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That was the remark I intended to make. The committee was not at liberty under the order of the Senate to report a bill sending the case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WALLACE. I suppose not under the peculiar wording of the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Under the wording of it, without "peculiar." The wording is not peculiar at all.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me just a moment, I will say a word. Of course the record shows that I am no advocate of this bill, but I want to say here that I took considerable part in the discussion before as to whether this case should be sent to the Court of Claims or not, and I think it is but just and fair to state that from my recollection of what occurred it would be very unfair now to send this case to the Court of Claims. The point was that the proposition was made to send the case to the Court of Claims with what we regarded as instructions to the Court The point was that the proposition was made to send the case to the Court of Claims with what we regarded as instructions to the Court of Claims to accept certain affidavits as evidence under order of Congress. The late Senator from Michigan and myself both made motions and speeches objecting to sending the case to the Court of Claims with instructions to consider that as evidence which was not evidence under the ordinary rules of law. If we sent the case to the Court of Claims at all, he and I said we ought to send it under the regularly established rules of evidence, competent evidence under the law. The reply to that was, (as you will see if you examine the RECORD; I remember it well,) that this testimony could not be legally taken, a large portion of it, because in consequence of the delay some of the witnesses had died; Mr. Holladay had been unable to perpetuate the testimony in the forms of law; that it was not his fault, and that there were witnesses who could not be got at, and to send the case back to the Court of Claims authorizing them to consider only competent testimony would amount to a denial of his right. We said then (and you will find this in the debate; I remember making the point myself) that if that was the case, that owing to circumstances for which he was not responsible this testimony could not be considered by the Court of Claims, it would be proper for Congress, instead of sending it to the Court of Claims, to adjadge the merits, because there was no rule of law which restrained this body from considering evidence which technically might not be competent evidence before a court; that we could consider all the evidence; that if the case was in such condition that the court could not consider all the evidence is an adjust to retain the case and adjudy. if the case was in such condition that the court could not consider all the evidence, it was but fair and right to retain the case and adjudicate it on the merits here.

Mr. CARPENTER. That was why it was sent back to the com-

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. For that reason, as I understand, it was sent back to the committee; and I will state that when Mr. Mitchell's resolution was prepared my recollection is it was prepared with the approval of the senior Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] and that the Senator from Ohio, who had opposed the bill, who had fought the measure, expressed the hope that the resolution offered by Senator Mitchell would be adopted. That resolution of Senator Mitchell instructed the committee to take testimony and send for persons and papers and to report the amount that they should find due Mr. Holpapers, and to report the amount that they should find due Mr. Holladay and the amount they should find equitably due; and that was passed, as I understand it, by the unanimous consent of the Senate. So I think it is but fair and just now to say that this case went back to the committee by the consent of the whole Senate, by the agreement of those who opposed the bill, including myself, and in opposition to the wishes of the friends of the measure.

Mr. KERNAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. We changed the bill, I admit; there was a proviso. But I say it was a sort of compromise by which it was agreed on all hands.

Mr. CONKLING. What proviso does the Senator refer to?
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am not speaking of any proviso.
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator said that those who favored the claim wanted to refer it to the court with a proviso. What proamdavits.

Mr. TELLER. That affidavits should be received in the same way depositions would be. That was all. They were not conclusive.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That was the proviso I referred to. We considered that not to be competent testimony. The friends of Mr. Holladay were willing to send it to the Court of Claims with that proviso. We were opposed to the proviso, and opposed to sending it to the Court of Claims with that proviso.

Mr. CARPENTER. Provision, not "proviso."
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. "Provision" is a better word. In that condition of things, I repeat, as I understood it, we agreed all around to the resolution of Mr. Mitchell and it was passed without opposition, I think by unanimous consent, that the Committee on Claims should investigate this case on the merits, take the testimony and report the amount equitably due, and under these circumstances I must say for one that I think it would be unfair to Mr. Holladay now to send the case back to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has, have no doubt, correctly stated what occurred in 1878 when the bill was sent back to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report, but I said that it was done on motion of a gentleman who had reported the bill favorably.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. My recollection is, and I think if you will examine the RECORD you will find that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] stated before Mr. Mitchell offered his resolution that he would offer it, and expressed the hope that it would pass, that we would offer it, and expressed the hope that it would pass, that we would all agree to it.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, it got back to the Committee on Claims and they have made their report, and now the question presents itself again whether it ought to be passed by the Senate or go to the Court of Claims. The points to which I wanted to call the attention of the Senate was, first, that this ease when considered by the Thirty-ninth Congress which knew what it was, the men who were here and who understood what was going on in regard to this mail-route and these Indian depredations, negatived positively all claim therefor by Holladay, and refused to send to the Court of Claims any claim for Indian depredations. The second point is that the Committee on Claims of this body, and the Senate itself, by a clear, decided vote negatived the proposition to send to the Court of Claims that which relates to damages for change of mail-route by military orders. Here relates to damages for change of mail-route by military orders. Here are two plain, clear, and distinct propositions made and settled, the one by a committee of this body and the Senate, and the other by the joint resolution adopted in the House within two years after the occurrence of these events, when men were living who knew what had transpired, and when the law was being administered as it was had transpired, and when the law was being administered as it was understood to apply to this character of cases.

Besides this, Mr. Holladay himself folds his hands and sits quietly under this action. When a committee of conference is appointed to take up and act upon his bill there is no movement by him. The committee of conference does not meet; the bill drops in silence; he withdraws his papers, and for three Congresses we hear no more of the case until now, when "distance lends enchantment to the view," we hear of it, and we find in it the most even lot of claims, $50 per ton for hay, and two hundred and fifty sacks of corn at every station—everything exactly the same everywhere in regard to these losses, and a statement thereof that rises up in magnificent proportions to appal us.

losses, and a statement thereof that rises up in magnificent proportions to appal us.

I ask the Senate to scan this claim carefully. If the Committee on Claims has judicially determined it on competent testimony and Holladay is equitably or justly entitled to this large sum of money, then it ought to be given to him. I cannot concur with this finding of the committee, and the bill cannot have my vote.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President—

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to occupy the time of the Senate about five minutes in answer to the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller.] I see with great regret that a distinguished Senator from a Western State, the State of Kansas, upon the border, who apparently from the discussion of this question in 1878 had been conversant with all the facts in relation to it, is not in his seat; and inasmuch as statements made then on the floor of the Senate seem to be so fitting an answer to the Senator from Indiana made then on the floor of the Senate seem to be so litting an answer to the Senator from Colorado, I would like the Senator from Indiana to indulge me a few moments that I may present the case.

Mr. McDONALD. I understood the Senator desired to occupy but a brief time in explanation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senators will give way, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive brainess.

business

Mr. McDONALD. I do not propose to take up much time, but I will give way to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 6, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CUSTOMS DISTRICT IN MAINE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the bill which was yesterday passed by unanimous consent, on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] during the morning call of committees, was, according to the record, on the Calendar. The Chair at the time was under the impression that the gentleman from Ohio was reporting it from the Committee on Commerce. The House had better agree that the record shall show that the bill was taken from the Calendar for consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never allows the record of the proceedings to be touched without the consent of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I beg to state that the matter was a mistake on my part—a misapprehension. The bill was placed in my hands by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Beale.] I was not aware that the bill was on the Calendar. The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the bill which

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not intend to reflect in the least on the gentleman from Ohio. On the contrary he knew that the bill was brought up by the request of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Beale.] If there be no objection, the record in regard to the bill will be made up in the form which the Chair has suggested.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. In what shape will that leave the bill? The SPEAKER. It will leave it passed, so far as the House is concerned. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs, Senate bill No. 616 to promote the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. BELFORD, Mr. MILLS, and others, called for the regular

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to dispense with the call of committees for to-day, my object being to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the funding bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Inasmuch as the sense of the House was taken upon the funding bill in antagonism to the bill which we had up yester-the Labout feel that I would be justified in opposing the proposiday, I do not feel that I would be justified in opposing the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole on the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair under the rules must recognize the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker.] The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] could not reach his bill until after the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. Perhaps the Chair misunderstood my remark. observed that inasmuch as the sense of the House had previously been taken between these two bills, I would not antagonize the purpose of the Committee on Ways and Means to take up the funding bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Tucker] yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded; and the gentleman from Virginia has not the right to yield.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the gentleman to ask to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order was made by the gentleman from Colorado, and others.

Mr. BURROWS. Pending which the gentleman from Virginia moved to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a report.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Chair recognizes under the rules the motion of the gentleman from Virginia; and while holding the floor upon that motion the gentleman cannot yield to other members unless the call for the regular order be withdrawn.

The question being taken on the motion to dispense with the call of committees, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

mittee of the Whole on the state of the Union with the view of taking up the funding bill.

Mr. FRYE. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole, I would like to inquire, as the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, is absent, what arrangement, if any, was made touching the length of general debate and the division of time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read an extract from the Journal of the proceedings of December 22, 1880.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Fernando Wood, by manimous consent, moved that when the House next resumes in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the consideration of the bill of the House No. 4592 to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, all general debate thereon shall be limited to one day; the time to be equally divided between the supporters and opponents of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether or not gentlemen have signified to the chairman of the committee their desire to occupy this time. I do not understand that any arrangement has been made touching the occupation of the time. I simply desire that gentlemen who are in favor of a funding bill may know that half the time of to-day's debate is appropriated to those who that hair the time of to-day's debate is appropriated to those whofavor such a measure, and no names of gentlemen who desire to occupy the time have been given to the chairman of the committee. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Chittenden] desires half an hour to follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] who opens the debate this morning against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] both desire to speak, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to state that there was an agreement between

Mr. MILLS. I desire to state that there was an agreement between the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] and myself that he should parcel out the time among those who are supporting his bill, and (the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Kelley, not being his bill, and (the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Kelley, not being then present) that I should parcel out the time among the opponents of the bill.

A MEMBER. Judge Kelley is here.

Mr. MILLS. I know that; but he was not here at the time I speak of. He and I understand each other in reference to this matter. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] also wishes to speak. The SPEAKER. This is a matter which is always regulated by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir; and members of the committee that reported the bill will have precedence in the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is speaking of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that; but the chairman of the Committee of the Whole will defer to the Committee on Ways and Means in regard to the course of the discussion.

in regard to the course of the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never undertakes to rule in the House as to what should be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COVERT. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Maine, I desire to state that a number of gentlemen have spoken to me desiring to speak on this question, among them the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND,] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] whom I do not now see in his seat.

Mr. BLAND. I have an amendment to the bill which I desire to discuss.

I claim that the Committee on Ways and Means ought

Mr. MILLS. I claim that the Committee on Ways and Means ought to be entitled first to discuss the question before other gentlemen.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Texas states he has charge of the time against the bill and that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means reserved to himself the charge of the time for the bill. The chairman of the committee will not be here to take charge of the time for the bill, and I do not propose to take it and allot the time even if I could. Therefore I simply desire to give notice to those who are friendly to the bill and desire to speak that there will be a chairman in his place in a few minutes who undoubtedly will have control of it, and those gentlemen may signify to him, without reference to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, what time they desire. I do not propose to undertake to allot the time.

Mr. Tucker's motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Covert in the chair.

resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and resumes, as the first business in order, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. When the committee rose the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] had twenty-five minutes of his time remaining, which the Chair understands he now yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] who is therefore entitled to the floor.

Mr. Kelley. I do not understand myself as speaking in limited time or by the courtesy of another gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he has twenty-five minutes of the time of the gentleman from Iowa and, in addition, one hour in his own right.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have seen it stated in the course

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have seen it stated in the course of the discussion of this bill that the simple question is whether the Mr. TUCKER. I now move that the House resolve itself in Commembers of this Congress have the sagacity and honesty to borrow money at 3 per cent. with which to pay bonds which are carrying 6 or 5 per cent. Never, sir, was a more misleading statement than this made to the people of a country or to a deliberative body. It excludes all the pregnant questions involved. Were the United States burdened with a perpetual debt, as are Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, Spain, and all other European nations, it might be a question whether we had the sagacity and honesty to reduce the rate of interest when opportunity offered. But, sir, it is among the proudest traditions of our country, and the one which should be most cherished, that a national debt is not an American institution; that our people regard it as an evil that war or other great exigency may inflict people regard it as an evil that war or other great exigency may inflict upon us, an evil which sends the tax-collector into every house to gather the money with which to pay the annual interest, and an evil to be gotten rid of as soon as the resources of the country will permit. It is our proud boast that we alone among the nations have twice paid off our debt. It is our present and prouder boast that, having come out of an intestine war which statesmen of every country be-lieved would destroy us burdened with a debt of nearly three thouneved would destroy us burdened with a debt of nearly three thousand million dollars, we have proceeded year by year, through prosperity and adversity, to pay, between August, 1865, and November, 1879, an average of more than $57,000,000 a year. In 1865 the South was almost without resources. In 1865 we were disbanding, North and South, 2,000,000 of men used to war, hoping that they would, but fearing they might not, find and accept employment profitable to themselves and advantageous to the Government. Since then sir about fifteen they might not, find and accept employment prohiable to themselves and advantageous to the Government. Since then, sir, about fifteen millions of tax-payers have been added to our population, and our resources have increased in greater ratio, and now the South shares to a very high degree the general prosperity of the country.

One of the questions which must be met in this discussion is, Can we without borrowing pay the 6 per cent. and the 5 per cent. bonds shortly to mature? In reply to it let me say that a constant payers of $60,000,000,000 are for the prescript when them that for $60.000.000 are for the prescript when there is the form.

shortly to mature? In reply to it let me say that a constant payment of $60,000,000 a year for ten years will pay them; that for fifteen years we have paid an average of within $3,000,000 of $60,000,000; that in the year just closed we paid nearly $74,000,000, and that in the first half of the present fiscal year, as appears by the last debt statement of the Secretary, we have paid $42,990,559 of the debt, showing an ability to pay more than $85,000,000 in the current fiscal year. Mr. Chairman, in further response to this question, let me ask for evidence which will show that we are in a position which requires us to borrow money? Is our financial condition such as to require us to mortgage the land and labor of the American people for fifteen, twenty, or forty the land and labor of the American people for fifteen, twenty, or forty years, as is proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee on Ways and Means, in order to pay $637,000,000? That is the question, and not the one stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Chittenden,] as to whether we have the sagacity and the honesty to borrow money at a lower rate than we have hitherto

A farmer or business man who was rapidly extinguishing his obligations by the application of his current profits would not be deemed wise if because somebody offered to loan him money at a reduced rate of interest until succeeding generations should own his farm, factory, or store, he should accept the loan and mortgage his estate for fifty years. He would not act wisely in making such a long and irredeemable mortgage in consideration of the fact that he should pay a lower rate for two or three years. The consideration would not be sufficient to justify him in binding his children and grandchildren to take all the contingencies of a long future. That is the position of our all the contingencies of a long future. That is the position of our country to-day. It has the current income with which to pay these bonds, and should pay them.

Mr. Chairman, a delusion has been industriously spread among the people that these bonds are payable on the 1st day of July next. They are not. Whoever makes that statement deliberately, after due inquiry, makes a deliberately false statement. The debt matures on that day, but is payable at the option of the Government. No dishonor can attach to the Government for declining to pay a debt, the holders of which do not wish their money, and which the Government is not bound by law, equity, or usage to pay. This false theory is promulgated for the purpose of making the people believe that the Government is embarrassed and must issue new and long bonds to save its credit. But, sir, the Government is not embarrassed; nor is there anything in the situation to endanger its credit. The truth is we are in a position in which, by exercising the option belonging to us by the express terms of the bonds to pay them at our convenience, to hold the loans while extinguishing them gradually and at what time will determine to be a lower rate of interest than that proposed by will determine to be a lower rate of interest than that proposed by any bill before the House, even my own substitute. Sir, one of the wisest elements of Mr. Chase's management of our national finances was the value he attached to the retention by the Government of an option. In the course of his annual report of 1863

The object of future controllability has also had a prominent place in the regards of the Secretary. Under the conditions which existed at the outbreak of the rebellion he acquiesced in the necessity which seemed to dictate the negotiation of bonds apayable after twenty years; but he acquiesced with reluctance, and as soon as permitted by circumstances, recommended the enactment of laws authorizing the issue of bonds payable after shorter periods as well as the creation of temporary debt in other forms. In harmony with these views, Congress provided for the issue of the bonds known as the five-twenties, and also for the issue of Treasury notes payable three years from date; for certificates of indebtedness payable in one year, and for temporary loans by deposits reimbursable after ten days' notice. At the last session Congress repealed some embarrassing restrictions of former acts, and authorized the issue of bonds payable after ten years and of Treasury notes payable at pleasure or three years from date. These Treasury notes were made legal-tenders for face value or convertible, for amount and interest, into United States

The Secretary availed himself of this legislation by placing with the people as large an amount as possible of 5-20 bonds and by using the other powers so as to put the whole debt, except the long loans first negotiated, in such a shape that prompt advantage can be taken of favorable circumstances to diminish the burdens it imposes on industry. Whenever the constitutional supremacy of the nation shall be re-established over all its parts it will be completely within the power of Congress and the Secretary to fund the whole or any part of the temporary debt in bonds bearing a very moderate interest and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after very brief periods, or perhaps at any time after their issue. Nothing further seems desirable on the score of controllability.

Did not the Congress of that day accept his suggestions? Yes, sir; and it is to this sagacious forecast that we owe our ability to refund our high-rate bonds as we have done.

I have here Gibbon's Debt of the United States, in which he recites the character of the various issues of bonds. He speaks of fivetwenties payable at the option of the Government in five years; again, of five-twenties payable at option after a period of ten years; again, of the debt of 1847, at option; again, the loan of 1861, and so on, running on until he shows that the Government retained to itself an option on eleven issues of its bonds, believing that the controllability of the debt in that way was more economical than a low rate of interest on a long bond.

Sir, as illustrating the wisdom of Secretary Chase in saving to the Government an optional control of its debt and of the extravagant ex-Government an optional control of its debt and of the extravagant expenditure of the people's resources contemplated by the committee's bill, which proposes to convert into long bonds a debt which we are not bound by law to pay in the next ten years, or within any fixed period, let me invite attention to the following facts: By reference to page xi of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury you will find that of the $637,000,000 it is proposed to refund, $520,904,707 must, if we are to maintain the sinking fund, be paid in the next ten years. This sum we are bound by express law to pay, and we can pay it and more from our current revenue. From August, 1865, to November, 1880, we paid an annual average of $57,760,388. Last year we paid $73,652,900, and have paid in the first half of this year $42,990,559. In view of these facts shall this House say that we cannot maintain the sinking fund? Shall we in their inspiring presence surrender the optional control of $637,000,000 of our public debt? Let me show, Mr. Chairman, what such a surrender has cost in the last year. In order to pay with current surplus revenue bonds which have since matured—matured on the first of this year, and others have since matured—matured on the first of this year, and others which will mature on the 1st of May and 30th of June respectively—bonds having from less than a year to fifteen or eighteen months to run, what did we pay in premium? I have here the Treasurer's statement, and find by reference to it that the total amount of months to run, what did we pay in premium? I have here the Treasurer's statement, and find by reference to it that the total amount of net premium paid on the bonds purchased since the 1st of November, 1879, was $3,786,520. (See page 32 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1880.) Now we have the right to call in those bonds at par and pay them without any premium.

Mr. PRICE. Not to-day.

Mr. KELLEY. We will have it on the five percents after May 1, and on the six percents after July 1, when they become payable at the option of the Government. But to pay one of either class to-day we must buy it at a premium, because we have no optional control of it. We sold the rights of the people and of the Government to the bondholders and retained no option; and therefore if to-day we want to pay a 5 or 6 per cent. bond that matures on the 1st of May or July we must pay for the privilege what the bondholder sees fit to ask—the average bondholder of the market.

It is to this surrender of the control of its debt by the Government will retain its option and make an economical bargain. Hence I propose, and shall at the proper time ask a vote upon, a substitute authorizing temporary loans redeemable after one or two years at the option of the Government. I propose these short obligations as a temporary measure to supply deficiencies, should any occur in the current revenues, a thing of which I have no apprehension.

But, sir, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] who proposes to reply to me, will say, Will you pay 6 per cent. when you can borrow for three? To this I reply 3 per cent. for fifty years, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means proposed, is 150 per cent. on your borrowing; 3 per cent. for forty years, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means proposed, is 150 per cent. on your borrowing; 3 per cent. I wonder whether those who propose or defend these long loans are aware of the fact that the British people pay in interest three and a half times the amount of their g

The British debt originated a little before the year 1700. Seventeen years of peace, ending with the year 1739, reduced it about forty-two millions of dollars. Nine years of war followed, adding nearly one hundred and sixty millions of dollars to it. At a subsequent period there was paid off in seven years of peace less than thirty million; but seven years of war followed and increased the debt nearly four hundred million of dollars.

The peace expenditures of modern times include the preparations for war—forts, the manufacture of war implements, the building of shot-proof vessels, areenals, machinery, &c. The fable of the wild boar sharpening his tusks just after making a treaty of permanent peace with the other animals is a close type of the present policy of nations.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what economy invites us to do and what we may do if it has not been predetermined by a majority of this House that we must refund, must fall into the wake of European nations and adopt the worst of their characteristics, the creation of great national debts; if we are not unwilling that foreign statesmen shall continue to hold us up, as the writers of England, Germany, and France are doing, as a people so prosperous that, while we invite millions of immigrants from every other country, we proceed year by year to pay our debt and are thus enabled to reduce the rate of interest on the constantly diminishing balance of our debt.

ions of immigrants from every other country, we proceed year by year to pay our debt and are thus enabled to reduce the rate of interest on the constantly diminishing balance of our debt.

Of the six hundred and thirty-seven millions which are to be provided for—and as the Secretary has paid forty-two millions in the first part of this year, when the 1st of July comes round it will be found that much, if not all, of the thirty-seven millions will have disappeared—but if the account should then stand as it does now, there would be two hundred millions of six per-cents. They would be paid in a little over three years, and the interest on those two hundred millions would be less than 5 per cent. for the period of payment; not 150 per cent., or 120 per cent., as proposed.

But gentlemen say, we will buy in the long bonds we propose to issue and save the interest. Why issue them if you can so soon pay them? At what rate of premium will you buy them? If you have paid nearly four millions in one year to buy maturing bonds, what will be the premium on bonds having fifteen, twenty, or forty years to run? Who can say? Look where your 4 per cent. bonds stand to-day. At 113. Why? Because they are long bonds, though bearing a low rate of interest. You can buy the maturing sixes at 2½ or thereabouts; but go to buy a long four and you pay 13. And it is proposed to get rid of the optional control of this debt in order to enjoy the privilege of paying the premium that may be demanded when the Government shall go into the market to bid against itself for the purchase of its bonds. Who that advocates such theories as these may talk of sagacity or honesty without feeling the reproach of hypocrisy every time he applies the innuendo to those who oppose so extravagant a scheme? Admit, sir, that it will take something over three years to pay the six per-cents: here is a calculation to which I invite attention: I ask

Admit, sir, that it will take something over three years to pay the six per-cents; here is a calculation to which I invite attention: I ask gentlemen to mark that I deduct the interest only at the end of the year. The Secretary calls matured bonds by the week or the month, and when they are paid interest on them stops, and the interest thus liberated increases the purchasing power of the Government. But as I could not obtain the data on which to calculate all that, I thus throw at least ten millions into the account against myself by making throw at least ten millions into the account against myself by making the interest payable only once a year, and that at the end of the year. Assuming that there will be on the 1st of July two hundred millions of six per-cents, which there cannot be; with the first payment in July, 1862, the interest will be $12,000,000; with the second payment, in 1883, the interest will be $8,400,000; with the third payment, in 1884, the interest will be $4,800,000. The fourth payment, which would include forty millions of five per-cents, after paying the whole of the sixes, $180,000,000, in three years, and $20,000,000 in the fourth, will be $1,200,000, or a total interest account of twenty-six millions. So much for the sixes. That part of our debt would then be paid. We would not thereafter have to offer premiums to anybody to permit us to pay it. The interest account would have been wiped out by the payment of the principal. The twelve millions a year it had originally amounted to would remain in our coffers, earning money and compounding interest for the people instead of for bondholders. And mark you, sir, the amount of interest that you would pay in thus extinguishing the debt calculated upon the whole sum would be greatly reduced. The whole sum at the start, say twelve millions per annum, would be six millions at 3 per cent., and would continue six millions so long as your bonds were outstanding. But under the system I propose both principal and interest will have disappeared in less than four years.

What is to be said on the subject of the fives? The interest on the ss than four years

What is to be said on the subject of the fives? The interest on the whole body of fives, $437,000,000, would have run during the three years and ten months required to pay the sixes, and therefore we will charge it up at $83,825,532. We start in this account with $437,000,000, less $40,000,000 paid in the fourth year, leaving $397,350,600 as the balance due May 1, 1885.

At the fifth payment of $60,000,000 May 1, 1886, the interest will halance due May 1, 1885.

At the fifth payment of $60,000,000, May 1, 1886, the interest will be $19,867,520. At the sixth payment the interest will be $18,867,520. At the next payment the interest will be $13,867,520. At the next payment the interest will be $13,867,520. The payment in 1890 will show an interest charge of $10,867,520. The payment of 1891 will show an interest charge of $7,867,520, and in 1892 but $48,000,000 would be required to pay the last bond, and the interest for that year would be $1,867,520.

The interest on the sixes would be $26,400,000, and that on the fives while the annual payments were going on would be $76,072,000 and for the period required to pay the six per-cents would, as I have said, be $83,825,000, giving a total of interest during the whole process of payment of $186,298,062.

By this process we would have paid every bondholder that was entitled to 6 per cent. his full interest, and every one entitled to 5 per titled to 6 per cent. his full interest, and every one entitled to 5 per cent. his full interest; yet we would have paid interest on the whole debt for but one-half of the period, for we would have been paying it regularly along and extinguishing the debt in ten years, so that the total interest paid would be precisely five years' full interest. It would be an interest rate during the period of gradual payment of from 2.60 to 2.65 per cent. Two hundred million dollars carry 6 per cent. and $437,000,000 carry 5 per cent. He who will add the total of interest on these two sums for ten years and divide it by two will ascertain the annual rate of interest we will have paid, and find that it will have been lower than that proposed by any bill.

No bill proposes to pay less than 3 per cent. Therefore they all propose to pay for the privilege of surrendering the option we are soon to possess. They propose to pay for the privilege of extending a debt which we may pay year by year out of our current surplus at a lower rate of annual interest than is proposed in any bill, and to extend it by the scheme of the Secretary of the Treasury for fifteen years, with a possibility of forty years, and by that of the Committee of Ways and Means for twenty years, with a possibility of forty years.

In the name of the nation that stands as an exemplar to the oppressed people of the world I appeal to gentlemen to do no wanton act which shall lead them to believe that the American people regard a national debt as a national blessing and are willing to pay for the a national debt as a national blessing and are willing to pay for the $500,000,000 to run the full ten years and notes for $137,000,000 more bearing the same rate, as is also proposed, the interest on the $500,000,000 for ten years will be $150,000,000, and that on the notes $41,205, 180, making a total interest of $191,205,180. That is the amount of interest we will pay if we borrow but for ten years and not for the longer time proposed by the committee's bill.

To meet the principal and the interest at the end of ten years will require $228,555,780.

My throat, Mr. Chairman, is so much affected that I shall have to omit much I would have been glad to say; but I must add that I find by the figures before me that while the cost of the payment of the sixes and the fives, assuming that the whole shall remain unabated sixes and the fives, assuming that the whole shall remain unabated by payments during the current half year, would, as I have already said, be $828,555,780; but allowing only for annual payments of interest at the end of each year, allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to hoard the surplus revenue until the end of the year, instead of reducing noard the surplus revenue until the end of the year, instead of reducing interest by making weekly or monthly payments, as he has been doing, and which it is certain he will continue to do, the total cost would be not much over eight hundred and twenty millions of dollars, showing a saving by paying the debt, even with the allowance of all sums that will be paid between now and the 1st of July next, and with the allowance for the annual payment of interest only, a saving as against the 3 per cent. ten-year bonds, of within $93 of five millions

By paying these bonds in this way we would have no syndicate to market new bonds; we would pay no commission of one-half of 1 per cent. to such syndicate; we would cause no disturbance of the financial market of our own or other nations. The people would know that each month the surplus revenue was being applied to the reduction of our interest account by the calling in at par of bonds on which the Government had an option.

Sir, I had hoped to say many things which I feel might be useful to some members on this floor. I find, however, that in view of the condition of my throat I must omit them, but not without recurring briefly to the question, Can we pay these bonds and thus reduce the

Are we not more in numbers than we were between August, 1865, and August, 1870? Are we not more prosperous than we were between 1873 and 1878? Is not the South a section of our country from which we now gather large revenues; and was she not a tax upon us in the autumn and early winter of 1865? Are not immigrants flowing in upon us in unparalleled numbers, and are not those immigrants drawn from classes of people who have heretofore come to us rarely and in but small numbers? Do not these immigrants bring with them cap-ital, skill in agriculture and varied branches of industry? Do they ital, skill in agriculture and varied branches of industry? Do they not come to increase our tax-bearing power—to share our taxes and all our other burdens? Are we so craven, have we so lost confidence in the energy and integrity of the American people, as to believe that fifty millions in the height of abounding prosperity can not do what thirty-seven millions did when emerging from a desolating war or living through a panic that suspended the trade of the world? From 1865 to 1880 our average annual payment upon our debt was more than fifty-seven millions; and I reiterate the statement that our payment last year was nearly seventy-four millions. ment that our payment last year was nearly seventy-four millions, and that in the first six months of the current fiscal year we paid nearly forty-three million dollars. Our revenue steadily increases. Without reflecting upon the motives of any one, I will say that were I to seek a motive that would induce me to surrender an optional right to pay these bonds out of our current income, I would find it (my mind may be peculiar) only in the fact that I might desire to give some of my banking friends the privilege to become members of a syndicate and to share the commissions and profits to be derived from mortgaging the lands, labor, and enterprise of the American people for terms ranging from fifteen through twenty to forty years.

I must say a few words more, let come what may come. Let me show what has happened to the nations of Europe from familiarity with making loans. Let us see how insidiously but overwhelmingly national debts grow. Here is an article in which it is said:

The United States is the only nation that provides for the exigencies of the future by relieving its land and labor from this unappeasable demand—

Speaking of annual interest-and is consequently the only one of the great nations of the world whose debt is not found to have increased when measured by any term of years that will probably involve a war. That of Great Britain is sometimes temporarily reduced, but soon expands again, and is now about as heavy as it was at the beginning of the long reign of Queen Victoria. A carefully prepared paper in a recent number of the Frankfurter Zeitung says:

"The total debts of the States of Europe have since 1865—

This, it is worthy of remark, refers to the period from 1865 to 1880, during which we paid over eight hundred and sixty-six millions of "The total debts of the States of Europe have since 1865 risen from $13,130,000,000

"The total debts of the States of Europe have since 1865 risen from $13,130,000,000 to $21,620,000,000."

It is the facility with which national debts are perpetuated that enables the States of Europe to maintain their constantly expanding armies, and its effect upon taxation is thus illustrated by the Zeitung:

"In 1865 the German budget was $155,000,000; but she now finds it no easy task to supply the public needs with $300,000,000. Russia then required half as much as now. Her budget then amounted to but $255,000,000, and now involves $595,000,000." It is the interest upon the debts of these countries that oppresses the people, and consumes not only the first fruits of their industries and enterprise, but, so far as the laboring classes are concerned, leaves them at best but a poor subsistence with which no class of American citizens would be content, or upon which any of them should be supposed to exist.

Mr. MILLS. I have no such feeling. I hope the gentleman will go on.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well. I do not wish to deprive any gentleman of the right to discuss this measure.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to allude to a fact not mentioned by Mr. Chairman, I would like to allude to a fact not mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] concerning these bonds. About $200,000,000 of the amount to be refunded are not made payable by the express terms of the bonds in coin. They are payable in lawful money of the United States. They are thus payable by the terms of the bonds themselves, notwithstanding "the act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869.

That act by its express terms provides that the obligations of the United States shall be paid in "coin or its equivalent." It will be conceded by all that Treasury notes are now the equivalent of coin.

conceded by all that Treasury notes are now the equivalent of coin. Some deed by all that Treasury notes are now the equivalent or coin. Now, if these $200,000,000 are to be funded into the new bonds provided for by this bill, not only will the Government surrender the option of paying the bonds when it pleases, but we will also surrender the option to pay lawful money, in Treasury notes, if you please, possessing legal-tender qualities. That is a right I am not willing to see surrendered on the part of the Government. We should not only retain the option to pay the debt but the right to pay it in any lawful money that may accumulate in the Treasury during the life-time of the bond.

Indeed, sir, no portion of this debt should be refunded into new bonds which will take from the Government the right to pay. The only pretext for refunding the bonds is the reduction of the interest. It has been ably demonstrated by the learned gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] that we will pay more interest on a 3 per cent. bond than we shall have to pay if the present bonds are allowed to run until the Government can pay them with the accumulations of surplus revenue.

Another point, Mr. Chairman. By the terms of the act of 1870, under which over four hundred million dollars of these bonds were issued, we have the right to pay in coin and are not restricted to gold; but if this act is allowed to pass in the face of the fact that we have now in the Treasury of the United States $50,000,000 of standard silver dollars of 412½ grains, if this bill authorizes the refunding of the bonds in the face of that fact it is tantamount to a legislative construction that the bonds cannot be properly paid in silver dollars. I shall vote for no refunding bill nor any substitute that takes from the Government the right to pay the bonds in lawful money where the present contract permits it, or that will deprive the people of the right to pay in silver where coin is the money of the contract.

Since the passage of the funding bill of 1870, two of the prominent nations of the earth, following the lead of England, have demonetized silver, the German Empire and our own Government. We have never fully reinstated silver to the position it occupied prior to the passage of the acts of 1873 and 1874. What has been done was done in the face of the opposition of the administration and the Chief of the Treasury Department, and the execution of the law remonetizing silver has been in unfriendly hands from that moment until the present.

It is now claimed by the President in his message and by the Secretary in his report that silver for the past year has only been worth 88½ cents; that the bullion value of the silver dollar has been but 88½ cents. It is therefore urged that it is not honest to pay the pub-

But, Mr. Chairman, did we ever agree to pay the public creditor a gold dollar's worth of silver bullion? Not at all. The contract was to pay the public creditor a silver dollar of specific weight and fine-It was the creditor who insisted the money should be weighed ness. It was the creditor who insisted the money should be weighed to him. It is a nice thing in a republic of fifty million of people to have a class, and a very small class, of men who insist the coin of the realm shall be weighed to them instead of being counted to them as to other citizens. It was their own law, passed at their own request. It should be weighed to them in coin of 412½ grains.

The Government never guaranteed that a silver dollar should remain of equal value with gold. The Government has the option of paying in either gold or silver, and so far as $200,000,000,000 of these bonds are concerned, in gold, silver, or greenbacks.

are concerned, in gold, silver, or greenbacks.

The act of 1878 remonetizing silver was passed with a view to the payment of the public debt in silver dollars. I will ask the Clerk to read an extract, page 564, volume 7, part 1, Congressional Record, second session Forty-fifth Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act stapplementary to the act entitled 'An act testablishing a Mint and regulating the coins of the United States," to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the resolution just read was the concurrent resolution adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives, and known as the Stanley Matthews resolution. It passed the Senate on the 25th of January, 1878, by a vote of 42 yeas to 20 nays. It was taken up in the House three days thereafter, on the motion of the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EWING,] and passed the House under a suspension of the rules on the 28th day of January, by a vote of 189 yeas to 79 nays, 110 majority in this House expressly declaring that the option should remain in the Government to pay every Government obligation in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains. That resolution was cotemporaneous with the passage of what was known as the Bland silver bill, and is an interpretation of it, declaring the right of the Government to pay in silver dollars, and that the option—and I call particular attention to that language—that the "option" to pay in standard silver dollars should remain with the Government.

I now wish to read from a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury after the passage of that law and the concurrent resolution, directed to Thomas M. Nichol, president of the so-called Honest Money League at Chicago, dated January 8, 1879. In this letter which I hold in my hand the Secretary states that "while it is the duty of the Government to coin different kinds of money, a public policy dictates it should be within the power of the citizen, at his option, to demand either form of lawful money." The will of the people as declared through the law-making power expressly places the option in the Government, but the Secretary defies the people and the law.

Now, what is the practical effect of that policy? Manifestly to set the public creditor, the citizen, above the law and to give to the public creditor an absolute veto over the acts of Congress, a veto as absolute as that of the British monarch in his realm.

Conscious that the sentiment prevails among the people that the administration of this law has been in unfriendly hands, the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report undertakes to answer that charge. He puts it in the following language on page 18 of his late annual report:

Since the passage of that act the Department has issued numerous circulars and notices to the public, in which it has offered every inducement which it could under the law to facilitate the general distribution and circulation of these coins.

It has offered to place the silver in the hands of the people throughout the United States without expense for transportation, &c.

Now, the object of the law was not that the Secretary of the Treasury might hoard the silver in the Treasury, but that he should pay it out as available funds for the liquidation of the public debt—not that he should exchange the silver for United States notes, and then hoard the notes and take them out of circulation. That was not the hoard the notes and take them out of circulation. That was not the intent of the law. It was not to be made an instrument to contract the circulation of United States notes. The silver was to be paid out and treated like any other money of the Government. But it is urged that it speedily finds its way back into the Treasury again. Very well, so does other money. When it comes back, pay it out again.

Mr. Chairman, no sooner had the law and the concurrent resolution passed than a howl came up from every part of the country from the money kings and the banking corporations that the law must be repealed and that it must be circumvented by the business men of the country. In this connection I read from page 168 of the Finance country. In this connection I read from page 168 of the Finance Report for 1878 and 1879, detailing the action of the clearing-house in New York, that great institution for swapping promises, concerning the silver dollar, which establishes the fact that the Treasury Department is a party to the conspiracy of that association to discredit the silver dollar and to drive it from circulation. This will appear from the following:

First. Hereafter drafts drawn upon any bank represented in the clearing-house association in the city of New York, received by the assistant treasurer in that city, may be presented to such bank at the clearing-house for payment. Second. Hereafter drafts drawn upon the assistant treasurer at New York may be adjusted by him at the clearing-house, and the balance due from the United States may be paid at his office in United States notes or clearing-house certificates.

Fourth. Receive silver dollars upon deposit only under special contract to withdraw the same in kind.

Fifth. Prohibit payments of balances at clearing bouse in silver certificates or in silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coin in small sums, say under $10.

In silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coin in small sums, say under $10.

Now, sir, that agreement between the Treasury Department and the clearing-house association takes from the Government of the United States the right to pay any balance found due in silver dollars, and thus we have the head of the Department, the Government itself, a party to a contract unfriendly to the circulation of silver. But, sir, the demand is made on the part of the business men, the bullion owners, that the value of a dollar shall not depend upon the stamp of the Government, but upon the bullion contained in the coin. Now, that is in direct violation of the spirit of the Constitution, which declares that "Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof." I do not deny that Congress in fixing the value of our coin may take into consideration its bullion value; but that they are to be exclusively controlled by the market value; but that they are to be exclusively controlled by the market value of the bullion I deny. That would take from the Congress of the United States the power granted by the Constitution and relegate the whole matter to commerce, the bullion brokers, and to the syndicates of the country.

It is a nice scheme, Mr. Chairman. The Constitution, in broad and comprehensive language, declares that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations." Money and transportation are the great agents of commerce, without which it cannot exist. What have we here in this Republic? The national banks, by regulating the volume of the currency, regulate its value instead of Congress, as provided in the Constitution, and on the other hand the railroads control the other great agent of commerce by fixing, absolutely, the rates of transportation. Thus the Government has abdicated and surrendered its control over both money and transportation.

But here is the third demand made on behalf of the money power that Congress shall now surrender its power to regulate the value of our coin, expressly conferred by the Constitution, retaining solely the right to be the mouthpiece of gold gamblers and bullion brokers. In the name of the American people and of labor I protest against this threefold crime—against this abdication of power on the part of the Government—against this trinity in humiliation.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a greater?

a question?
Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.
Mr. WHITE. The gentleman is discussing the funding bill as we find it on our desks?
Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.
Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the gentleman to say there is anything in that bill that prevents the payment of the bonds proposed

Mr. WEAVER. There is nothing in express terms, but there has been nothing in the law to prevent the payment of interest on bonds in silver since the passage of the silver bill. And yet it is true that not one dollar of silver has been paid on the bonds. It is the administration of the passage of the silver bill.

istration of the law I am finding fault with.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman inform the House how much gold has been paid for these bonds that have been redeemed?

Mr. WEAVER. There have been none redeemed; some have been

Mr. WHITE. What have they been purchased with?

Mr. WEAVER. They have been purchased under the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury, who says he will allow the public creditor to demand either form of money.

Mr. WHITE. I speak of facts, not expressions of Departments.
Mr. WEAVER. All I know is that the Secretary has laid it down as a rule by which the Government will be guided to allow the public creditor to demand either form of money, and of course to reject

Mr. WHITE. Is it not the fact that the bulk of the interest on

Mr. WHITE. Is it not the fact that the bulk of the interest on the bonds is paid in paper?

Mr. WEAVER. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. WHITE. The reports of the Department show it.

Mr. WEAVER. But it is only paid as a matter of convenience. The Government does not claim the right to do it. The public creditor claims the power to step up to the Treasury and say, "You shall pay me either in greenbacks or silver or gold as I may dictate." This completely nullifies the law.

Mr. WHITE. So it is not a question of any practical account because the creditor prefers to take it in greenbacks instead of coin, whether gold or silver.

cause the creditor prefers to take it in greenbacks instead of coin, whether gold or silver.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it not a question of practical account whether the Government will compel its creditors to take any lawful money? whether we shall have a class of men in this country who openly declare themselves to be above the law? Is there nothing practical in that? Under the rule laid down by the Secretary of the Treasury, if there was not a dollar of gold in the Treasury and a bond should become due the bondholder could demand gold, and his bond would continue to run and draw interest at the expense of the people when there are millions of silver dollars in the vaults of the Treasury. That is the truth about it. The gentleman knows very well that the position of his party and of all men who oppose continuing the coinage of this silver dollar is that it is not an honest dollar, that it has not in it a gold dollar's worth of bullion, and that it is dishonest on age of this silver dollar is that it is not an honest dollar, that it has not in it a gold dollar's worth of bullion, and that it is dishonest on the part of the Government to pay the debt in this silver dollar.

Mr. WHITE. I asked the gentleman about the law, not about the administration of it. I voted for the Stanley Matthews resolution.

Mr. WEAVER. The law has always been better than the administration of it. If your party would administer the law as it is on the statute-book there would not be half so much complaint. But you violate the law; you spit upon the law. When the law-making power says that the option shall remain with the Government, with the people, you declare through the head of the Treasury Department.

power says that the option shall remain with the Government, with the people, you declare through the head of the Treasury Department that it shall remain with the bondholder.

Mr. WHITE. If the Secretary of the Treasury has violated the law, you have your remedy; why not impeach him?

Mr. WEAVER. There never was a law that a bad man could not drive a coach and four through if he wanted to without making himself technically liable to impeachment. I do impeach him before the bar of public opinion.

Since the passage of the act of 1869 every declaration on the part of the party having control of the Government has been to the effect that that act meant gold coin and did not include silver. There was a very stout opposition to the passage of the Stanley Matthews resolution. The gentleman says he voted for that resolution. So he did. But he has never opened his mouth since that time to see that the resolution was enforced in good faith.

Mr. WHITE. I have no evidence that it is not.

Mr. WEAVER. You have the fact that there are about fifty millions of silver dollars now in the Treasury. You have the further fact that the Secretary of the Treasury says he will not enforce that law, but will allow the bondholder the option to demand other form of money. You have that statement coming from the head of the money. You have that statement coming from the head of the Treasury Department. What evidence does the gentleman want? "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." Mr. WHITE. How much of that silver belongs to the United

Mr. WEAVER. Almost all of it.

Mr. WHITE. Efforts have been made to put it into circulation. Mr. WEAVER. Only to enable the Secretary to hoard the greenbacks.

Mr. FORT. About nineteen million dollars is represented by certificates

Mr. WHITE. And about twenty-five million dollars are in circu-

Mr. WEAVER. And the remainder, about thirty million dollars, is idle in the Treasury and can be paid with all future coinage on these

Let me ask the gentleman if he will vote for an amendment to this bill which will compel the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out silver coin in payment of these bonds?

Mr. WHITE. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] I will say that I never cross a stream until I come to it. I will be prepared for that question when it comes up. I believe that under the act of 1870 there is no violation of the contract if we pay the bonds in silver. I will take the law as I find it. And, furthermore, I am conscious of the fact that we have now outstanding 4\frac{1}{2} and 4 per cent. bonds without any privilege of that kind. I do not want any amendment offered in regard to these bonds which will cripple the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate them.

Mr. WEAVER. Are not the 4\frac{1}{2} and 4 per cent. bonds payable in silver coin?

Mr. WEAVER. Are not the 4½ and 4 per cent. bonds payable in silver coin?

Mr. WHITE. They are under the same rule.

Mr. WHITE. I would have no discrimination against these bonds; I would have them on the same footing with the others.

Mr. WHITE. I say this, that the 4½ and 4 per cent. bonds are issued and negotiated under the act of 1870. Many people think they are payable either in gold or silver, as the Government may see fit; the gentleman so says. It is now proposed to issue bonds at 3 per cent. to take up these maturing bonds. I do not want to put a badge upon these bonds which will depreciate them in the market.

Mr. MCLANE. And make it impossible to sell them.

Mr. WHITE. And make it impossible to sell them.

Mr. WHITE. I will answer it.

Mr. WEAVER. My question is whether this Government has not the option to pay these bonds after the 1st of July, and whether the gentleman is in favor of exhausting the hoard of silver on hand in their payment before we proceed to fund any of them?

Mr. WHITE. I want the Treasury Department to exhaust all the surplus funds it has over current expenses to meet any obligations of

Mr. WHITE. I want the Treasury Department to exhaust all the surplus funds it has over current expenses to meet any obligations of the Government in gold or silver or paper.

Mr. WEAVER. Including the silver dollar?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. I am very glad my friend has taken square ground on that proposition, but it is not the doctrine of his party. Without an amendment to this bill, specifically requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out silver on the bonds falling due this year, it will not be done; for we have the public declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury that he will allow the holder of public securities to demand either form of lawful money. That is equivalent to saying that the silver shall remain in the Treasury.

Now, in the face of that declaration and in the face of the fact that

Now, in the face of that declaration and in the face of the fact that Now, in the face of that declaration and in the face of the fact that this silver is hoarded and is not accounted a part of the money available for the payment of the public debt, if we pass this bill without a specific declaration that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay out the silver, it will not be done. At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer an amendment providing that nothing in this bill shall be construed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to retain in the Treasury the surplus standard silver coin, but that he shall exhaust it in payment of the bonds falling due in common with all other leaving money. I shall offer that amendment and if possi-all other lawful money. I shall offer that amendment, and, if possible, get a vote upon it by yeas and nays.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I have said all that I desire to say until we reach the five-minute rule.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish, in the first place, to ask unanimous consent to present, have read, and printed in the RECORD an amendment which I believe to be an essential condition of a proper funding bill, and which at a proper time I hope to see

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have read at this time and printed in the RECORD the amendment which he sends to the Clerk's desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"And all acts and parts of acts imposing taxation upon the capital and deposits of savings-banks, national banks, State banks, and private bankers are hereby repealed; and the tax upon the circulating notes of the national banks issued upon the bonds authorized by this act shall not exceed one-half of 1 per cent. per annum: And provided further. That the total amount of silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy authorized under the act of February 28, 1878, an act to authorize the coinage of the old standard silver dollars and to restore its legal-tender character, shall not exceed $100,000,000."

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve all points of order on that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. It is not offered yet.
Mr. SPRINGER. I understood that unanimous consent was asked to offer it at the proper time. If consent were now given that it should be offered, it would not be subject to a point of order unless should be offered, it would not be subject to a point of order unless points of order were reserved.

A MEMBER. The amendment has only been read to be printed.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am taken entirely by surprise by the course of this debate to-day. I spent more than an hour yesterday in trying to find out its probable course and my chance of an opportunity to speak. The most encouragement I obtained pointed to a possible permission to speak for five minutes during the time of three telepropers as considerable for the most encouragement. three other members at some indefinite stage of the debate, under the five-minute rule. Before leaving my house this morning I was informed that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was ill and that this funding bill would not come up to-day. Hence I left at home the few meager notes which I had prepared for my three speeches of five minutes each, and I happen to have nothing three speeches of five minutes each, and I happen to have nothing with me now but a small memorandum pointing to the doctrines for which I speak here to-day and which have been uttered on this floor by our late associate, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, the President-elect of the United States. Fortunately for me, I have these texts to fall back upon.

A single word personal to myself and then I will state my doctrine and then I will state my doctrine upon this question. If there be a man of this body who is in a position to be judicially impartial, absolutely unbiased by any selfish or political consideration in discussing this subject, I am such a man. I do not own a Government bond; I do not own a share of nationalbank stock; I have not a shilling deposited subject to any such influ-name or force.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read an extract from a speech made by General Garfield on the 13th of July, 1876, which is a better answer than I can give to those who insist upon paying the national debt in silver.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It is claimed that, by the terms of the act of 1869, it would be lawful for us to pay the public debt in silver dollars such as might have been coined under the law as it stood in 1861.

Now I desire to recall to the mind of the House the letter and the spirit of that law. After all the doubt and the turbulent excitement about what the actual obligation of the nation was in regard to the public debt, the first act of the Congress approved by President Grant made a solemn declaration designed to put all those doubts to rest. It was declared by Congress that—

"The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment"—

In what? Not in silver, not in gold, not in eoin, but—

"in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligations has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver."

The declaration there was that the payment of all these national obligations not specifically currency obligations was to be in "coin or its equivalent." Now, what did Congress mean? What were our laws before 1861? Why, Mr. Speaker, since 1834 we have had one standard, a dollar; and we have by law embodied it in two metals, gold and silver. Eut all the time, in order to have one standard, not two, we have sought to make the coins of the two metals conform to the one standard; keeping the amount of metal in one so adjusted to the amount of metal in the other that a dollar of gold should be equivalent to a dollar of silver. Every hour that we have a dollar of gold should be equivalent to a dollar of silver. Every hour that we have a gold and silver dollar and the gold dollar have varied from each other in value Congress has undertaken to equalize them by increasing the amount of metal in one or decreasing the amount of metal in the other. We al

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow the Clerk to read in this connection the Stanley Matthews resolution? I have it here.
Mr. CHITTENDEN. I cannot yield.
Mr. BLAND. I would like the gentleman to state what change was ever made in the silver dollar. The gold dollar was changed, but never the silver dollar.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I will myself read from the same authority touching a question which lies to-day at the foundation of our currency system, and which foreshadows, if persisted in, serious disasters to the commerce of this country. Mr. Garfield on the 16th of November, 1877, uttered these words:

I want it remembered in the outset that the greenback currency was, and is so known in the courts, and so known everywhere, a forced loan—a forced loan by the Government upon its Army and upon its other creditors, to meet the great emergencies of the war; and the primary fact connected with every greenback is that it is a promise to pay. Those who believe in resumption intend some time or other the nation shall make good the promise.

Once more, Mr. Chairman, and this, so far as I have looked, is an utterance of the President-elect on his very last appearance in this House. At any rate, it was so pointed and good, so just and honest, so true and grand as the exponent of the principles of the first man of the nation, that I look no farther. It is an utterance of General Garfield here on the 5th of April, 1880, in respect to this very question now under consideration. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Now the third point in this resolution is that there shall be no refunding of the $780,000,000 to fall due this year and next, but all that shall be paid. How f Out of the resources of the nation f Yes; but the money to be manufactured at the Treasury is to be called part of these resources. Print it to death—that is the way to dispose of the public debt, says this resolution.

I have only to say that these three make the triple-headed monster of centralization, inflation, and repudiation combined. This monster is to be let loose on the country as the last spawn of the dying party that thought it had a little life in it a year ago. It is put out at this moment to test the courage of the two political parties; it is offered at this moment when the roar of the presidential contest comes to us from all quarters of the country. In a few moments we shall see what the political parties will do with this beast. All I have to say for one is, meet it and throttle it; in the name of thosety, in the name of the public peace and prosperity, in the name of the rights of individual citizens of this country against centralism, worse than we ever dreamed of, meet it and fight it like men. Let both parties show their courage by meeting boldly and putting an end to its power for mischief.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sincerely in favor of the passage of this funding bill with such amendments as are essential to make it practical. I shall not stop for one moment to deal with the image which the gentleman from Pennsylvania set up here and then knocked down again. I do not know of a single man, not one—not one intelligent man who believes or ever believed the bonds which mature this year, 1881, require to be paid. Every word the gentleman from Pennsylvania said on that point was a waste of his voice. The Government has the option to pay them and the question is simply whether it will accept that option, borrowing money at about 3 per cent, at the worst to pay bonds that draw 5 and 6 per cent, inter-3 per cent. at the worst to pay bonds that draw 5 and 6 per cent. interest. That is the simple business question that Congress is called upon to determine.

Well, now, where is the money to pay these bonds without a refunding bill? It is not found in the Treasury. No man can point to it. These gentlemen from Iowa talk about the silver dollars, but what it. These gentlemen from Iowa talk about the silver dollars, but what they mean is silver certificates or anything else manufactured having the sign of the Government in which to pay off these bonds.

The procrastinating doctrine, the argument to let this thing run, however sincerely held, tends, in my judgment, to support the devices of those who seek in the end to get something that costs nothing to pay the bondholders with.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said just now in reference to the legal-tender matter that the condition of the currency, after all our boasting, is absolutely threatening and sure to bring disaster. And I think I can prove this if I can get the candid hearing of gentlemen on both sides of this House. sides of this House.

what is our available paper money at the present time? What have been our resources for necessary paper money during the last ninety days? Those of you who took the trouble to read the report of the Treasurer on the 1st of January will see that we have $45,500,000, or nearly ten million dollars more of silver certificates floating about than had been issued when I spoke accidentally on this subject on the 14th of December last. What are these silver certificates? How came they to be issued? By what law do they exist? Not by any law that contemplated the process by which they are largely issued. Certainly not. They are in their legal status only issuable upon the deposit of silver dollars. Nobody would take the silver dollars in bulk unless forced to do it, and there was no way of getting out the silver certificates by that process. How have they got out? To a large extent they have been put out by a sort of jugglery which would disgrace my friend from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] if he were president of a bank and were to practice it in the village where he resides. Here is a man in New York with a hundred thousand dollars of gold. He wants some paper money. The banks cannot afford to circulate it, a man in New York with a hundred thousand dollars of gold. He wants some paper money. The banks cannot afford to circulate it, under existing circumstances, equal to the demands of trade. He says, "What shall I do?" The heavy charge of transporting his gold to Chicago or Omaha stands before him. He says, "How shall I get silver certificates?" They tell him, "Take your gold to the sub-treasury and exchange it for silver dollars. That is lawful. Then deposit the silver dollars and get silver certificates." He sends these silver certificates to Chicago or Omaha and buys pork. His pork is shipped to Europe; he is paid in gold and the merchant is safe. But how long shall the issue of silver certificates go on in this way? What shall be the end? It cannot extend beyond the amount of silver dollars in the Treasury, which on the 3d of January, 1881, was $48,190,000 and will soon be limited to $2,000,000 per month. At that point, sooner or later, the Government will have gathered into its hoard gold for a large proportion of the silver certificates afloat. For what purpose? Not for the redemption of such certificates, for they are payable in silver, but practically to redeem legal-tender greenbacks when gold is wanted to send to Europe. When? Just as soon as Europe has long crops and we have short crops.

wanted to send to Europe. When I Just as soon as Europe has long crops and we have short crops.

It is apparent from the small stock of dollars now on hand in excess of certificates that without unlimited coinage we have no silver resources at the present moment for paying bonds. With unlimited coinage how long before the silver will have driven every dollar of gold out of circulation?

Now, I ask what would be thought of the fact if my friend's bank in Iowa were to inveigle a man into its office who had $5,000 in gold and get him to exchange it for silver in order that he might get his bank's silver certificates into circulation? I say, Mr. Chairman, that that operation performed by any private banker, by any State banker, or by any national banker in this country would be regarded as contrary to common honesty, as an imposture, and the man that did it would be posted as a public enemy. I believe, moreover, that my friend, if he were to start a bank upon that principle, would see the day when the people of his State would drive him out of it and not permit him to live among them and conduct business there on such a principle. Well, now, is it more honorable for the Government, for a great government like the United States, or for a Congress representing fifty millions of people which will be sixty-five millions ten years hence—I say, is it honorable for us to sleep here upon our knowledge of law, upon our knowledge of reason, upon our knowledge of common honesty, upon a legal-tender currency which has already brought us to this position, when there is no flexible currency available by the laws of trade but only silver certificates by a juggle? I say, for one, that when I look over this House, on both sides of it, and see the number of lawyers here, men who know what the law is, and see that every man who had any reputation or any expectations, without reference to party in 1860, when the Government was out of money, that every man, every statesman in the land resorted to the legalthat every man, every statesman in the land resorted to the legal-tender currency as a mere expedient, a mere necessity when the Gov-ernment had no money and must have something to keep its armies and to pay them; when I go back to the records of these debates and read the just, discriminating, and truthful arguments against the qual-ity of this legal-tender money, I am amazed that party politics, per-sonal ambition, and a want of courage have so long combined to con-ceal from the public that which is as sure as the foundations of our Government are sound.

I realize in some sense what we have before us. We are the representatives of a nation such as has never yet lived on earth. Within sentatives of a nation such as has never yet lived on earth. Within ten years nearly 33\(^1\) per cent. of our population has grown up, and we are rushing along to-day in a spirit of aggrandizement, and I am sorry to say in a wild spirit of speculation which warrants the prediction that we may have an early repetition of the disasters which always come from wrong-doing.

In respect to this currency question I hold that the statement I have made in regard to the process by which silver certificates have been issued to the extent of \(^1\)45,500,000 in the great exigencies that occurred during the last three months, is a conclusive argument against the soundness of our present currency system. The silver certificates clearly and seriously complicate the currency problem; but the legal-tender greenback is the fundamental evil of it. The certificates have some real money back of them, while the greenbacks certificates have some real money back of them, while the greenbacks have nothing but the "flat" of Congress and the hope of good crops.

A word in respect to the amendment which I have offered and which

A word in respect to the amendment which I have offered and which I hope to see adopted. The real point of that amendment is this, that it reduces the taxes on the circulation issued on the 3 per cent. bonds one-half from its present rates. The present tax upon the circulation of bank-notes is 1 per cent. The tax which my amendment proposes is one-half of 1 per cent. This is, I believe, after careful inquiry, an essential and necessary condition of the success of a 3 per cent. funding bill. There is really no 3 per cent. money in this country. Unless the banks can be encouraged to buy these bonds by a prospect of issuing currency thereon, there is nobody to buy these six or seven hundreds of millions of Government bonds, and in saying that I am not saying that our credit is not the best in the world. It is, as it deserves to be, the best absolutely in the world. There are no 3 per cent. Government bonds in the world at the present time that will sell at par.

The Government 3 per cent. consols of England are, I believe, will sell at par.

The Government 3 per cent. consols of England are, I believe, 98½ to-day. The French rentes are about 85 or 86. Now, then, if we assume, as I do, that our pride, our self-respect, our conscious power requires us to insist upon the lowest rate of interest, we still have to recognize the fact that there is no 3 per cent. money in the world seeking the very best investments; and it is proved true that at the present prices of the 4 per cent. bonds the banks will not buy them for the purpose of circulating their notes. I therefore say, after careful inquiry of those who know as much as any know on the subject, I am thoroughly convinced that a 3 per cent. funding bill without relieving the tax rates which are now burdensome will utterly fail. It has no chance whatever. It has no chance whatever.

Well, now, as to letting these bonds remain. Everybody agrees that Well, now, as to letting these bonds remain. Everybody agrees that there is no necessity for paying them. But we must pay the interest, and is it nothing that by a little honest business arrangement we can save nearly half the interest. The average rate on those six hundred millions now being paid is over 5 per cent. And I ask members of this House if they are prepared in a free and easy way to leave six hundred millions of the Government credit floating about at 5 and 6 per cent. interest when they can place it at 3 per cent. by a little common sense and practical judgment. I do not know but the party who believe in hours money would be prepared to do so. I do not know believe in bogus money would be prepared to do so. I do not know but the party who believe—but let us see what General Garfield calls that party. I would like to read it again, it is so much better than anything I can say:

Now, the third point in this resolution is that there shall be no refunding of the $750,000,000 to fall due this year and next, but all that shall be paid. How? Out of the resources of the nation? Yes; but the money to be manufactured at the Money to be manufactured at the Treasuryis to be called part of these resources. Print it to death-

So says the President-electthat is the way to dispose of the public debt, says this resolution.

Yes, print it to death. That is the tendency of the gentlemen who argue as the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania argued for leaving this thing alone, subject to possible payment by an income and resources known to be insufficient.

Mr. GILLETTE. May I ask the gentleman from New York a ques-

Mr. CHITTENDEN. No, sir; not now. I may yield to the gentleman after I read this. It is very interesting. [Laughter.]

I have only to say that these three make the triple-headed monster of centraliza-tion, inflation, and repudiation combined.

I should like to ask some of my democratic friends to consider that in view of the great many speeches I have heard here about frightful centralization in the last few years. If there is anything about it of a dangerous character, General Garfield has touched it here:

This menster is to be let loose on the country as the last spawn of the dying party that thought it had a little life in it a year ago. It is put out at this moment to test the courage of the two political parties; it is offered at this moment when the roar of the presidential contest comes to us from all quarters of the country. In a few months we will see what the political parties will do with this beast. All I have to say for one is, meet it and throttle it.

Thank God for that! "Meet it and throttle it," says the President-

In the name of honesty, in the name of the public peace and prosperity, in the name of the rights of individual citizens of this country against centralism, worse than we ever dreamed of, meetit and fight it like men. Let both parties show their courage by meeting boldly and putting an end to its power for mischief.

And that is my hope for my country, that both parties will have the honest manhood to take this question from the political arena and decide it upon its merits, decide it with absolute independence from all self-seeking members of Congress who fancy they must have plenty of greenbacks or have the silver dollar in order to be re-elected.

plenty of greenbacks or have the silver dollar in order to be re-elected.

My friend from Iowa, [Mr. GILLETTE,] proposing to address to me a question wants, I judge, to ask if a greenbacker is not elected to succeed me in the next Congress. While I have not been disposed to say anything about that, I will indulge him, though knowing nothing about it. I have got the card that defeated me here in my pocket, and will give it to the Record, [having taken out and opened a pocket-book.] I do not know the gentleman who is to succeed me. I never saw him. He lives in my city and in the district that I represent. In that respect he has the advantage of me. I have been a carpet-bagger here among you for nearly seven years. [Laughter.] I lived in the district I represent some twenty years, but after that some political trimmer wanted to fix it a little differently, and he cut me off two hundred feet. So I live over the line. But the gentleman who is coming in my place lives in the district. He is a Baptist minister. It was known that I was a reluctant candidate. I was ill; confined to my house. I did not go out in the canvass and refused to engage with anybody in respect to it. I simply accepted the nomination. All I know of Mr. Smith's politics is that in one of his Sunday sermons he protested against making hats in the State prisons of the State of New York. This I got from my newspaper.

And there seems to have been an association of hatters, [laughter,] two hundred strong, in the end of the district where he preaches, who nominated him for Congress. I believe he himself thought it was a two hundred strong, in the end of the district where he preaches, who nominated him for Congress. I believe he himself thought it was a joke when it first happened. But things went on, and a regular democratic candidate was nominated, who seemed to be a little weak, and some of his friends came to me to know if I would help to support some of his friends came to me to know if I would help to support him. Now, I have understood that a great many of you here know how to run a third candidate in your districts where it seems to be necessary for success, and it seems to be the right thing to do in the minds of many. [Laughter.] But I said to these gentlemen, "I will not give you a half dollar to keep your democratic candidate in the field. If the people want Mr. Smith to represent them, I hope they will elect him, and that he will prove to be a better man than I am. I can afford to be defeated, but I cannot afford to go back upon the principles which have governed me for years as a candidate for office and as the occupant of an honorable office." They said, "Well, then, he will be withdrawn." Said I, "Withdraw him;" and they did withdraw him. [Laughter.] draw him. [Laughter.]

Let me say again I was sick and confined to my house. On the Friday prior to the election on Tuesday, a newspaper in the district charged me with being a free-trader. [Great laughter.] It said explicitly, "Mr. CHITTENDEN is a free-trader, and he voted"—I must read now:

On the 26th of March, 1878, S. B. CHITTENDEN voted, with one hundred and twenty-two democrats, in favor of the Wood tariff bill.

There, now, you see what a man gets when he votes with the democrats in opposition to brother Conger. [Laughter.] I told the editor of that paper that I opposed the Wood tariff bill, and I voted to get it up for a chance to oppose it on the floor. [Laughter.] I had written every correspondent in my district who had alluded to it that it was an utterly impracticable bill, and I wanted to get a chance at it as quickly as possible. at it as quickly as possible.

But I was not the only republican who voted for taking it up. Here is my friend, Mr. HISCOCK; he is a copper-fastened protectionist, and he voted with me on that occasion, as did eight or ten other New York straight republicans. [Laughter.]

I wrote a note to that editor stating that if he would refer to my record he would see that I simply voted to fix a day for the consideration of a revenue measure reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and he might as honestly have charged me with having shot Abraham Lincoln as with being in favor of that bill and with voting for it. I wrote him that I left it to him to correct the statement or not as he pleased; to let it stand unless he had manhood enough to correct it without intimating that I had called his attention to it. And he never has corrected it, so far as I know. He certainly did not reply to my note. [Renewed laughter.]

I believe I will read the rest of this card.

One hundred and four republicans and ten democrats voted against it. Were the one hundred and four republicans wrong and Mr. CHITTENDEN right? Mr. CHITTENDEN stands with the democracy of the South upon the tariff question as he did when he voted against the civil-rights bill.

Now, do any of you remember that? I did vote against the civilrights bill when I first came here, and I have always been glad that I did so. I believed then and believe now that it was impolitic and unwise, if not unconstitutional, and I have been thanked by many able colored men for the vote I gave on that occasion. But that was only stuck in here; it had nothing to do with the matter.

The "solid South"-

Only think of it!

The "solid South" approves his vote upon the civil-rights bill, and Great Britain applands his speeches and votes upon the tariff question. Let us send to Congress a man who all his life has done manful service in the cause of human rights, and who represents the American doctrine of protection to American interests.

Then this paper winds up "That man is," in very small type, "J. Hyatt Smith," in very large type.

Allow me to say that in two wards of my district alone I ran 4,496 votes behind General Garfield, where this paper was persistently and carefully circulated among the laboring people on the day prior to the election and on the morning of the election. None of my friends knew anything about it until after the election. I call attention to the ingenious form of this paper:

Chittenden and the Tariff.

On the 26th of March, 1878, S. B. CHITTENDEN voted with 122 DEMOCRATS in favor of the WOOD TARIFF BILL.

104 REPUBLICANS AND 10 DEMO-CRATS voted against it.

Were the 104 REPUBLICANS wrong and Mr. Chittenden right?

Mr. Chittenden stands with the DEMOCRA-CY OF THE SOUTH upon the TARIFF QUESTION as he did when he voted against the CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

The "SOLID SOUTH" approves his vote upon the Civil Rights Bill, and GREAT BRITAIN applauds his speeches and votes upon the TAR-IFF QUESTION.

LET US SEND TO CONGRESS a man who all his life has done manful service in the CAUSE OF HUMAN RIGHTS, and who represents the AMERICAN DOCTRINE of PROTECTION TO AMERICAN INTER-ESTS. That man is

J. Hyatt Smith.

Mr. Chairman, the merriment of the House has brought my serious speech to rather a ridiculous conclusion. But there is a moral in the fun after all. The responsible author of that card is an uncommon ingrate, hypocrite, and idiot. The card is a lie, as inexcusable, mean, and immoral as the forged Garfield letter. But it has done—can dome no harm. I hope its reverend and honorable beneficiary will enjoy the distinction it brings him, and that he will prove to be a more useful representative of the people than I have been. He has been in the habit of standing in the pulpit, all his own, and preaching fifty times a year at home. He says that hereafter Congress will be a part of his pulpit; be said that the other day, according to the newspapers. I hope you will listen to him, [laughter,] and that he will use this part of his pulpit to the best possible advantage.

In the mean while, in respect to this funding bill, with an earnest and honest belief that it has much to do with the economical welfare, the real prosperity, and the honor of this great nation, which to-day is a spectacle to all mankind and promises in the near future, within the life-time of many who are standing about me, to be absolutely the monarch of the world, I say to the representatives of the people, in the interest of such a nation, brush away your selfish, partisan, political purposes, and allow reason to have sway. Come up to this question as fearless, honest, worthy representatives of the Mr. Chairman, the merriment of the House has brought my serious greatest people on the earth, and revise our vicious currency system'

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. McLANE obtained the floor.
Mr. GILLETTE. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me a moment?

Mr. McLANE. I have agreed to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Morrison] for a moment.

Mr. Morrison] for a moment.

Mr. CHITTENDEN] has been giving us the views of the President-elect upon the subject of our national currency and the silver dollar. I would be glad to have read, in justice to the President-elect, his last public expression upon that subject. It is contained in a short extract from his letter of acceptance.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Our paper currency is now as national as the flag, and resumption has not only made it everywhere equal to coin, but has brought into use our store of gold and silver. The circulating medium is more abundant than ever before; and we need enly maintain the quality of all our dollars to insure to labor and capital a measure of value from the use of which no one can suffer loss. The great prosperity which the country is now enjoying should not be endangered by any violent changes or doubtful financial experiments.

Mr. GILLETTE: Will the particular of the March 1997.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me to put a question to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDER?]

Mr. McLANE. I do not yield to the gentleman from Iowa. I am sure that the gentleman from New York has disposed of all his personality as well as his argument. Nor would I trespass at all upon the attention of the committee if I were not persuaded that there is no necessity at all for any further funding of the public debt. Although I have no responsibility as to the mode in which this debt was issued, I feel the fullest responsibility for every effort that we can make to discharge it, and to discharge it with the least possible burden to the people of the country. I am persuaded that the maintenance of the public credit has been of more value to the country than any other legislation that has been effected since the close of the war. I think I am within bounds when I say that the maintenance of the credit of this country has saved the people more than forty millions of dollars per annum in taxation since the war, and it is for this reason that I would set my face against the gentleman is for this reason that I would set my face against the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] when he would endeavor to use either of our standards, gold or silver, to destroy the credit of the country. I am as much in favor as he is of the double standard; but while I maintain the right of the country to maintain these two standards which were in existence when we contracted the debt, I would think it in the last degree unwise to stipulate that we should pay the debt in one of those standards at a time when that standard had by the course of commerce become debased.

It is a notorious fact to-day that silver, as compared with gold at their relative values as now fixed, is at a depreciation, and although we may hold it in our Treasury and hold it in our banks as other great countries that have a double standard do, I would not consent to enforce payment in it at the moment when it was thus depreciated. I force payment in it at the moment when it was thus depreciated. I would consider that by such an amendment to this bill I did more harm to the credit of the country than by a failure to pay the debt at all. A failure to pay the debt would only leave the Government responsible to pay current interest on it until it was finally paid—

Mr. GILLETTE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McLANE. I beg the gentleman from Iowa to let me pursue my remarks. I would yield to any gentleman if any remark that I had made required of him an explanation. But I do not recognize that any individual of this House is responsible for the silver theory any more than for the gold theory. I am stating for myself that while I believe in the double standard, yet I believe that an amendment to this bill requiring this debt due in 1881 to be paid in silver would be a vital injury to the public credit; and I believe the public credit to be of vital interest to the people of this country.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield to be corrected? I wish to correct a misunderstanding.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield to be corrected? I wish to correct a misunderstanding.

Mr. McLANE. If the gentleman wishes to correct anything that he has said, I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to correct what you have said.

Mr. McLANE. I do not want the gentleman from Iowa to correct what January in the said was a said.

what I have said.

Mr. WEAVER. I merely wish—

Mr. McLANE. I decline to yield. I do not want the gentleman from Iowa to correct what I have said. If he rises to correct what he has said, I will yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. WEAVER. Will not the gentleman yield to let me suggest that he has missurderstood me.

that he has misunderstood me?

Mr. McLANE. I cannot misunderstand the gentleman, for he stated, if he did not read, the amendment that he proposed. Now I have commented upon that, and it is all I have to say upon that point.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman did misunderstand me.
Mr. McLANE. I believe that the maintenance of the public credit is of vital importance to this country; and the only question in my judgment that we have to consider is how we shall maintain that surplus money without funding it at all, or, if funding it, then limiting the period to the time that our current revenue will meet it.

I am in favor of paying off that debt with our surplus money. I believe that the funded debt of four percents due in 1906 and the funded debt of four-and-a-half percents due in 1891 are the only funded debts which this country ought ever to know in the future, I stand here to-day to support the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I would not alter a line of it, except as to the rate of interest, and I have no objection to leaving that rate of interest discretionary. The Secretary of the Treasury states that after paying out the surplus revenue of the year which expires on July 1, 1881, there will then be $637,350,600 of indebtedness to be provided for. And he then makes an estimate of our current revenues and our current he then makes an estimate of our current revenues and our current penses and shows we must have a surplus of from eighty to ninety million dollars

Now, Mr. Chairman, any gentleman in this House who will follow the statistics accompanying that report will find that every year and every half year our revenue increases over the preceding year and half year, and for the very obvious reason that our revenue is derived from articles of consumption, and as our population increases our consumption increases. And if there was no other reason but that rom articles of consumption, and as our population increases our consumption increases. And if there was no other reason but that one it would make it a sure thing that our revenue will increase. And when the Secretary of the Treasury estimates $90,000,000, if the present condition of prosperity in the country continues, his $90,000,000 will become $100,000,000 and $120,000,000 before these ten years have expired. This House will run no risk at all in giving him the authority he asks to pay off $520,904,707.58, which is the aggregate amount of the money due the sinking fund in these ten years. He proposes to limit these yearly payments to that amount.

But, Mr. Chairman, why should he limit it to that amount? By his own figures, liberally considered, he will have nearly twice that amount in those ten years. I am quite willing, and I hope this House will give the Secretary precisely the authority he asks—$400,000,000 in Treasury notes of a denomination not less than ten dollars, he says, at 4 per cent. But he states in that connection he has no doubt at all he can negotiate that $400,000,000 at 3 per cent. Why should we hesitate, therefore, to give him authority to negotiate that $400,000,000 at 3 per cent., and, if need be, at 4 per cent.? For one I should not have the least hesitation in giving him that discretion at 3½ or 4 per cent. Is it to be supposed when he is required by law to sell these bonds in the open market and at not less than par he will sell them bearing 4 per cent. if he can get par at 3 per cent.? We who are bearing 4 per cent. if he can get par at 3 per cent. We who are legislating for the people, believing as I do their best interest is in paying off this debt at the earliest possible moment—why should we hamper him in his negotiating those $400,000,000 of bonds? He says, expressly for the encouragement of the country and of this Hous that he can negotiate them in his opinion at 3 per cent., but in order that he may not be put at disadvantage he asks for the authority to that he may not be put at disadvantage he asks for the authority to negotiate at four.

Then he proceeds, and asks for authority to negotiate $400,000,000 in short bonds. And that is a very proper authority to give him, because although we stand to-day in the face of this prosperity and plenty, and although we can count to-day, if we continue as we are, that we will have ninety or one hundred millions of dollars surplus, yet by a disaster to-morrow, by a failure of our own crops or by greater abundance of crops in Europe, we might not have this prosperity so far as imports and exports are concerned, and therefore this surplus of ninety or a hundred or a hundred and ten millions might not exist. And in case it does not exist, then it would be necessary for him to fund these debts rather than to pay them off in Treasury notes. Give him the discretion to do that which is best for the people of this country, to negotiate a bond bearing 3 per cent. interest, or 4 per cent. interest, if that be the figure—I am coming to the figure directly—the discretion to do that or to issue his Treasury notes in directly—the discretion to do that or to issue his Treasury notes in sums not less than ten dollars.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Treasury not only would be able in the ten years that these bonds have to run, that is to say, before in the ten years that these bonds have to run, that is to say, before we come to 1891, when the four and one-half percents are due, he would not only be able to take up these short Treasury notes, or pay off this short loan—and I suggest here that loan ought not to go beyond that year, 1891—he would not only have money enough to pay off this poor little $637,000,000, but he would have more than enough in the Treasury to pay off the four and one-half percents due in 1891. And if we continue as we are now—I ask only the present condition of commerce; that the present industries of the country shall remain undisturbed by disaster—then our income in these ten years will exceed the present debt of $637,000,000, and the debt due in 1891 of $250,000,000, and even adding to that the debt of about $100,000,000 which falls due in 1895, the bonds issued to the Pacific Railroad. There is, in my judgment, within our reach to-day a solution of this debt question which will save to the people in taxation $12,000,000.

We could not to-day, if we entered upon the question of revenue reform, with any satisfaction to ourselves, in the present condition of the country politically, effect a reduction as satisfactory as that. And I for one do not desire to disturb the country. I believe that it

Judgment that we have to consider is now we shall maintain that the desired we shall maintain it by passing a bill such as has been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, which funds the debt due in 1881, and makes it payable twenty or forty years hence, or whether we shall endeavor to pay off that debt with our current will be our duty in the future, as an opposition, to enforce upon the Government that policy, that they shall not reduce revenue but that they shall reduce taxation. I have no doubt at all, sir, that in that way we have a political future not only honorable to ourselves but way we have a political future not only honorable to ourselves but in the best interests of the people of this country.

I understand very well that there are two extremes to this question. I understand perfectly well that the capitalists of this country, or of any country, whether they have banks or not, like these long bonded loans. They have even in their very length of time a feature of value. They find in the length of time that they have to run a value so material that it will be a question as between seventy years and forty years of nearly or quite 5 per cent. on the bond. So we have the other extreme of gentlemen who would pay off this debt in fiat money. That I regard as the other extreme. I hope, Mr. Chairman, as a Representative to stand perfectly independent of either extreme. I would be sorry to advocate a policy that was in the interest of any single class in this country. I would be sorry if any act of mine here in reference to the payment of the public debt should have that for its result; so, also, I would be sorry if any error of mine would induce me to vote for silver or for any other currency which was depreciated or any paper which had no value in payment of a debt of the United States which by law is made payable in coin.

Mr. GILLETTE. Is there any such proposition before the House?

Mr. McLANE. It is not material that either proposition is before the House, but I do know perfectly well that both ideas are represented in the House.

Now sir a word more and I have done. There are two bills pendsented in the House.

Now, sir, a word more and I have done. There are two bills pending, the bill of the committee and the bill or substitute of the gentleing, the bill of the committee and the bill or substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, I hope the bill of the committee will be so amended as to embody these two features. The bill is a valuable bill. Its first section provides that all the existing laws which have reference to funding shall be applied to these two debts which are to be funded, and that those laws and stipulations which are valuable to the proposed system of funding shall be continued in force and applied to the funding of these two debts.

Then it withdraws from the Secretary the authority to act under the law of 1870 and 1871 under the operations of which there are the other, or whether we shall make both $400,000,000 as recommended by the Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the debt due in 1891, as I said before, that is a debt of only $250,000,000, while if we are right in this view that the surplus revenue of the country will pay off in five years, and not in ten, this entire debt of $637,000,000, then there will be in the accruing revenue in the remaining five years more than enough to provide for the debt falling due in 1891; and I have no doubt at all that by this legislation we will not only relieve the country of the debt due in 1891 and therefore by this action to-day we will relieve the country of all debt excepting the 4 per cent.

Thus we rid ourselves entirely of these—I will not call them intrigues, though they are perfectly well characterized by this term—we will relieve ourselves of the intrigues of those who are already in the possession of the funded debt, and who do not want the debt funded at all, while on the other hand we relieve ourselves of those who would keep the whole debt of the country at 3 or 3½ per cent. for seventy keep the whole debt of the country at 3 or 31 per cent. for seventy

We have now a sinking fund which will provide for the 4½ percent. bonds as well as the four percents. So that thus it is not extravagant at all to say that when we pass this bill to-day, which provides for the debt due in 1881, we know there is provision for the payment of the entire debt of the United States. No further legislation will have to be adopted. None will be required. If reasonable prosperity continues we will have a surplus long before 1907. In my own humble opinion I think that surplus will justify the reduction of taxation in 1885. So that this bill will enable all surplus revenues after paying the sixes and five percents to be applied to the payment of any debt whatever in addition to the sinking fund specially provided by law.

Now, I believe firmly that if we stand together in defense and in support of the national credit, if we on both sides of the House show a spirit of accommodation and meet the Secretary of the Treasury in a fair and a liberal spirit, we will pass a bill that will relieve this country from all public debt, and have it in our power to reduce taxation fifty millions a year after 1885. I understand very well that this picture may be highly colored. I understand perfectly well that no country in the world, no commercial country, has ever gone so long without some set-back, without some financial check. We have had lessons enough in our own country, Mr. Chairman. It was only in 1873, when, with an enormous revenue, a revenue greater than our 1873, when, with an enormous revenue, a revenue greater than our present revenue, we were obliged to suspend payment on our sinking fund. Any gentleman who will follow these tables will find that in 1873 and 1874 and 1875 we were unable to perform our full duty as provided by law in regard to the sinking fund; and although a period of prosperity which has since ensued has enabled us to make up that deficiency, and although the sinking fund to day stands fully provided for, as every dollar due it will be paid up in the next year, yet there were three years when we were altogether unable to meet it. And of course such a disaster as overtook the country in 1873 can overtake it in 1883. And it is because that is possible that I for one not only want to put it in the power of the Treasury Department to have a choice of issuing bonds or notes, but I want to adopt this suggestion, vaguely stated but yet intelligently enough, that these notes when they shall fall due shall be redeemable rather than payable; in other words, if we have a recurrence of disaster and have not the necessary surplus revenue, then we let the notes lay paying the interest. necessary surplus revenue, then we let the notes lay, paying the interest on them till we are able to redeem them; and when it is known that these notes can either be redeemed at the day named or can become as good as a bond redeemable at the pleasure of the Government but still bearing interest, the Secretary of the Treasury will have no difficulty in placing those notes, and we need not be disturbed on that I do not hold this opinion because a banker here or a banker there tells me the money can be placed at 3 per cent. I understand perfectly the bankers and individuals who are not bankers can be interfectly the bankers and individuals who are not bankers can be interested in bonds, say of 4 per cent. or of the fives and sixes, and therefore advocate the issuing of bonds at 3 per cent. or of not funding at all, that the value of the four percents may be advanced or that the same may be so of the fives and sixes. As I said before, I reject them and their counsels and come back to my own judgment and the support of what I believe to be in the interest of this country; that is, to borrow the money necessary to pay the debt in 1891 and make the best terms I can, and make the period for which I borrow not a day longer than I will be able to pay it in.

If I had the least doubt of the revenue of this country being equal to these fifty or sixty or seventy millions a year, then I would not advocate the payment of these bonds as early as 1885. But I am persuaded under any reasonable view of the future we can count upon a sum 20 or 30 per cent. larger than the Secretary asks us to appropriate; that is, the amount due the sinking fund, $520,000,000. See where we are. Six hundred and thirty-seven millions is the entire debt, and if we take five hundred and twenty millions out of it in the next and if we take five hundred and twenty millions out of it in the next ten years there is left only a little under one hundred and twenty millions of dollars. I would not repeal that provision which authorizes the Secretary to issue one hundred and four millions at 4 per cent. I would be perfectly willing to leave that as it is, because with that one hundred and four millions and this money due to the sinking fund he has nearly the amount necessary to cover the entire debt.

In my opinion, for the Secretary to sell his one hundred and four millions of four percents at a premium of 12 is quite as good as selling his new bonds at 31, and we might just as well leave him the authority to sell his one hundred and four millions at 4 per cent., because really to sell one hundred and four millions of four percents at authority to sell his one hundred and four millions at 4 per cent, because really to sell one hundred and four millions of four percents at the present premium is just as good an operation for the Government as selling a 3½ per cent. bond at par. I am perfectly willing, therefore, to let that amount of one hundred and four millions stand. But as it is the sense of the committee to repeal that provision, I acquiesce, as I think we ought to concede to each other on points that are not material. I take the bill as it comes from the committee, only enlarging the amount of the bonds so as to have four hundred millions of each. In other words, I follow up the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I hold the operation, if he can accomplish it, is a splendid operation for this country. If he can sell four hundred millions at 3 per cent, he will have done well for the country, and then if he can negotiate a short bond—he says fifteen years, I would say a less time—at 3.65, he has done well for the country.

Give him his authority, and we know very well that even if he were capable of doing a wrong, which I for one do not dream that he would, the manner in which the bonds are to be issued makes it impossible for him to do it. He has to sell these bonds in the open market, and the only room for distrust that I can conceive of is the amount of money we give him to pay the expenses of that negotiation.

I will not say anything about the Secretary having his favorite bankers and brokers, for that would follow if any of us had such a duty to perform. All the brokers in the world and all the bankers in the country cannot be employed. There must be a selection, and the Secretary must make that selection. I should feel that I was wasting my time to embarrass myself with that question.

But there is a point to be considered, and that is in connection with the expense of this negotiation, whether it shall be 1 per cent. or one-half per cent. That is the question which we cannot go very far wrong on, for it is one which every ex and to permit every man in the country who wants to buy a ten-dollar bond to go to the Treasury Department and buy it, he has but to call to mind our experience under the law passed some years ago, when the brokers of the whole country in different localities took the matter out of the hands of the people by sending their agents to the Treasury to buy the bonds. There never has been devised any mode by which this Government could negotiate a large loan without the assistance of men who trade in money. Their assistance is necessary. When you wish to buy flour and clothing, it is necessary for you to go to the people who deal in those articles. If you wish to sell these bonds you must go to the people who deal in money; you must employ them and pay them what is reasonable. That is the only point for distrust I find in this bill.

distrust I find in this bill.

I certainly do not find the amount extravagant which the committee have allowed. There is a difference between the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and the bill of the committee, but that is a difference which I am quite willing to leave to the committee and to the Secretary. For myself, if I can I want to go on the line of that report, and I want to take so much of this bill as covers that report. The House must remember that it is no reproach to the committee, either in its entirety or in its individuality, that this bill is not exactly in pursuance of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill was reported last year, and the Secretary of the Treasury said in his report of that year that it was absolutely necessary that he should be allowed to issue 4 per cent. bonds. During the year which has passed since then he has modified his opinion, and has gone even below the original proposition of the bill, which was for a 3½ per cent. bond.

These are details which I refer to only to put the Secretary and the committee in perfect harmony, as I believe they are. For one I am willing to leave the credit of this country to the Committee of Ways and Means and to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have promised to yield to my friend from Illinois [Mr. Springer]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLane. With pleasure.
Mr. GILLETTE. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] conveys the impression that the use of the surplus silver coin in the Treasury to pay the bonds when they become due would be an injury to the public credit. I wish to ask him how the fulfillment by the Government of the contract according to its letter and its spirit the Government of the contract according to its letter and its spirit could injure its credit?

Mr. McLANE. I will answer the question. Although the Government has the power to pay this either in silver or in gold—and I have no doubt it has that power—yet when it had in the Treasury all the gold that was necessary to pay the debt, if it should take silver at a depreciation of 8 or 10 or 12 per cent. and pay the debt, I should consider it a fraud on the creditor. I think any individual or any government that did such a thing as that would lose its credit in the world. world.

I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] or any other advocate of the double standard should allow the silver quesother advocate of the double standard should allow the silver question to come into this discussion. Whether we should have two standards or one standard is a question entirely apart from the consideration of this bill. We have two standards now; we have the right to pay the debt either in gold coin or silver coin; that is admitted by everybody. There may be those who would like to have the debt payable in gold; they have not a majority in this House to make the debt so payable.

The debt is payable in gold or silver at the option of the Government. If the Government had no gold; if it had nothing but silver, it would not be dishonorable on the part of the Government to pay the debt in silver. There might be some necessity for negotiation:

the debt in silver. There might be some necessity for negotiation; there might be a question as to whether the Government ought to make up the depreciation of its silver. That would be an equitable if not an abstract question; and I have no doubt at all that this Government of the United States, if it ever found itself in a condition to be obliged to pay off its debt in a depreciated coin or a depreciated paper, would recognize its obligation to pay the balance when it was able. I do not think this Government will ever fall to any form of able. I do not think this dovernment of the repudiation.

Mr. GILLETTE. Another question.

Mr. McLANE. I agreed to yield a part of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer,] and I do not desire to take any

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, there are not many minutes of the hour remaining, and I desire to yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from New York; hence I shall ask the attention of the committee for only a short time. I am opposed to the pending bill, and unless it can be amended in a very material manner I must vote

Let us consider, first, what would be the effect upon the public debt in the event of the passage of this bill. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds not exceeding five hundred million dollars, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after million dollars, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after twenty years and payable forty years after the date of issue. It provides also for the issue of Treasury notes to the amount of $200,000,000, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years and payable in ten years. If this bill should be passed it would carry all the debt payable within the ensuing years, except $200,000,000 payable in Treasury notes, to a period twenty years beyond this time. If this bill should be passed, there would only be within our reach for payment $200,000,000 after two years, $250,000,000 of the four-and-a-half percents at the end of ten years, and the bonds provided for by this bill, about five hundred millions, in twenty years. In other words, we could only pay at par $200,000,000 within the next ten years, at which time $250,000,000 of the four-and-a-half percents would be payable, and after these sums we could pay nothing until would be payable, and after these sums we could pay nothing until after twenty years from this time.

This being the effect of the passage of the bill, I wish to call the attention of the committee to our ability to pay within this time, so as to ascertain whether this bill does not put far beyond the reach of our present ability to pay the public debt of the United States.

I hold in my hand the public debt statement issued on the 1st day of January of this year, from which it will be seen that there will be redeemable on the 1st day of May next 5 per cent. bonds to the amount of $469,651,050, and on the 30th of June there will be redeemable 6 per cent, bonds to the amount of $144,339,900 and other 6 per cent, bonds. of $469,651,050, and on the 30th of June there will be redeemable 6 per cent. bonds to the amount of $144,339,900, and other 6 per cent. bonds to the amount of $57,216,100, making in all $671,207,050 redeemable at the pleasure of the United States between this time and the 1st day of July next. The Secretary of the Treasury informs us in his annual report that the surplus funds in the Treasury will redeem a portion of this, so as to reduce the whole amount at that time (July 1) to about six hundred and forty million dollars. Without further legislation we have $630,000,000 within our reach on the 1st day of July next and $250,000,000 within our reach ten years from this time. But this bill proposes to put $500,000,000 of this amount beyond our reach for the period of twenty years from this date, leaving only $200,000,000 of interest-bearing Treasury notes and the 4½ per cent. bonds due ten years hence, or $450,000,000 in all, as redeemable within the next twenty years.

We can do better than that; and I am opposed to placing the public debt in funded loans which will deprive the Government of the right to pay it to the extent of the sinking fund and the surplus revenues without increasing taxation. I would leave this debt in such a shape that we could continually apply to it these means of payment. This we cannot do if this bill is passed. After the passage of this bill and the payment of $200,000,000, which can be made within two or three years, we must go into the market and buy our own bonds at such premium as the bondholder may be willing to accept; and when the Government is the largest purchaser of bonds, when there is a large demand by the Government on account of purwhen there is a large demand by the Government on account of purchases for the sinking fund, the market price of bonds will necessarily go up. I have in my hand the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury showing what will be the accumulations of the sinking fund for the next ten years. I find this statement in the very able and exhaustive speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] who sits on my right. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his last report, says:

The requirements of the sinking fund prior to the maturity of the 4½ per cent. bonds, for a period of ten years, from 1882 to 1891, both inclusive, are estimated as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882	$43, 386, 645 00
	45, 122, 110 80
	48, 804, 075 04
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886	50, 756, 238 04
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887	52, 786, 487 56-
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888	54, 897, 947 07
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889	57, 093, 864 95
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890	59, 377, 619 55
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891	61, 752, 724 33

From this statement it will be seen that the accumulations of the sinking fund for the next ten years will amount to $520,000,000, saysinking fund for the next ten years will amount to $522,000,000, saying nothing of the surplus revenue which must be added to this sum, which will be the means in our Treasury that we may apply to the payment of the public debt during the next ten years, and which the Secretary of the Treasury estimates, as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] has stated, to be equal to the sum I have just named. If within ten years we shall have in our hands for application to our indebtedness, without increasing taxation, a thousand million dollars, why not leave the debt in such shape that we can apply this surplus revenue to it? This bill does not make such provision. this surplus revenue to it? This bill does not make such provision, and I shall vote for no bill which proposes to fund the debt beyond the reach of payment by the use of this $1,000,000,000 within the

I have been endeavoring to find out by an examination of the reports of the Treasury Department the amount of debt that has been paid in the last ten years. I hold in my hand a statement issued by the Treasury Department, July 1, 1879. Upon an examination of this table, which purports to be an analysis of the principal of the public debt from July 1, 1856, to July 1, 1879, showing the amount of the debt at the close of each fiscal year, it appears that during the ten years last passed we have reduced the public debt to the extent of $382,000,000, and that we have now in the Treasury $100,000,000 more than we had when we started out on this decade. During three of these years, as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] suggests, we paid very little; yet during those ten years we did pay $382,000,000, while we increased the amount in the Treasury to the extent of $100,000,000, which might have been applied to the same purpose, but which is held for resumption.

I have another table from the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying the report submitted to this House a year ago. From this statement of the amounts of the payment of the public debt, it seems I have been endeavoring to find out by an examination of the re-that the Treasury has paid during the same time $53,000,000 more than the sum I just named, or $435,810,339. I do not know which of these statements is correct; I cannot reconcile these discrepancies of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I am willing to take either statement as substantially correct for the purpose of this argument. We may assume that the reduction has been between $48,000,000 and $53,000,000 per annum, with the increased accumulations in the Treasury for pur-per annum, with the increased accumulations in the Treasury for purposes of resumption. One statement shows $53,000,000 more paid in the same time than the other. If, then, we have paid off during the last ten years the public debt at the rate of $50,000,000 a year—

Mr. McLane. Of the principal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of the principal; yes, sir. If during that time we have had a succession of years when our imports were very small, owing to the hard times in this country consequent on the crisis of 1873, and the amount of accumulations from customs revenue fallen off some years making the reduction of the whole amount less than off, some years making the reduction of the whole amount less than four millions of dollars, we can assume at least our ability to pay $50,000,000 a year for the next ten years; and I think the estimate for the payment of $1,000,000,000 in ten years, or $100,000,000 for each year, is not beyond reasonable probability. I do not anticipate, however, so favorable a result.

I believe this bill can be so amended that we can refund the whole amount of the bonds redeemable within the periods I have mentioned, and make the new issues payable or redeemable at such times in the future as the surplus funds in the Treasury from year to year and the sinking fund can meet. Then we will have, after the payment of the amounts covered by this bill and of $250,000,000 of four-and-a-half amounts covered by this bill and of $250,000,000 of four-and-a-half percents due ten years hence, remaining of the public debt the sum of $738,420,400 of four percents which are not redeemable until the year 1907—twenty-six years hence before we can pay any part of the remaining portion of the public debt, unless we shall go into the market and buy it there at whatever premium it may command. We have then but $1,000,000,000, or $921,207,050 in exact numbers, to be paid within these twenty-six years, and after we have paid this amount, which we may in ten years from this time, we will have all the accumulations of the sinking fund and surplus revenues for the purpose of meeting the 4 per cent. bonds which can only be paid after twenty-six years from this time.

Hence, Mr. Chairman, if this bill can be so amended as to place the public debt coming due between this and the 1st of July next within the means of the United States to pay, I think we ought to pass it, and the bonds should be such that they can be negotiated in the markets of the world at the lowest rate of interest possible. If the bill can be amended in this and in one other respect, I shall take pleasure in supporting it.

I am opposed to the theory which has been advanced here that we should pass no refunding bill and make no provision to meet these bonds. If I were the possessor of five, ten, or fifteen millions of dollars of five or six percents due on the 1st of July next, or of any of those bonds, my interests might induce me to oppose any provision of law by which those bonds should be refunded into bonds at a lower rate of interest because helding such bonds. I sould do not see that the same and the same see that the same are helding such bonds. I sould do not see that the same helding such bonds. I sould do not see that the same helding such bonds. rate of interest; because, holding such bonds, I could demand 5 and 6 per cent. interest on them until the Government was able to pay per cent. interest on them until the Government was able to pay them off. It seems to me such would be the position of the holders of bonds due the 1st of July next. They would naturally oppose the refunding of those bonds into bonds bearing a lower rate of interest. But as representatives of the people we should seek to make the public debt as little burdensome as possible. Low rates of interest, short bonds, and rapid payments as possible, should be our motto.

I desire also a provision to be incorporated in the bill to prevent the abuses which grew up under the last funding bill of paying double interest and large commissions to syndicates of bankers to negotiate our loans, giving exclusive privileges by contract to such syndicates. I hope we shall not have repeated under the sanction of this proposed legislation (as the first section seems to provide) the paying of double interest or large commissions to syndicates and brokers, or the keeping of large deposits of Government moneys in private banks during long periods of time, thus encouraging speculation with Government funds and making possible irregularities like those attending the last negotiation of Government bonds.

I yield now the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New

I yield now the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is entitled to

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] for the unexpected opportunity I have to make a brief expression of the reason why I shall oppose the general propositions contained in this bill. There are no doubt very many of the people of the country and of my own constituency who are induced to favor a refunding bill on account of the promise it affords for a reduction of the interest on the national debt. But there is much that is delusive in this promise. I esteem it of much greater importance that this debt of the country should be paid at the very earliest opporthis tens does of the country should be pain at the very earnest opportunity afforded to the Government and according to the means and revenue of the Government than that it should be refunded at a lower rate of interest. We must assume—and in this respect I am greatly relieved in the statement of my views by the fact that my friend from Maryland [Mr. McLane] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] have given the statistics upon which the proposition rests—I say we must assume that for the next few years at least the income of the Government will be much larger than it has been in the past. We cannot expect from this Congress, and very likely not from the next, cannot expect from this Congress, and very likely not from the next, any radical change in our customs laws, whereby the people shall be relieved from taxation. We may therefore expect the revenues arising from the increased prosperity of the country will gradually increase rather than diminish from duties on imports. The national resources then will be greater, and yet it is stated by the Secretary of the Treasury that for the last year our revenues furnished $90,000,000 to diminish the national debt.

Now, sir, if we adopt the proposition of this bill to refund $500,000,000 into a permanent debt, outside of the possibility of being redeemed for thirty years, there must necessarily be gathered into the Treasury an amount of income which cannot be used in the payment of the public debt. Under the present law it cannot even be used as a sinking fund. Hence arises the difficulty which has not been stated sinking fund. Hence arises the difficulty which has not been stated in this debate hitherto, but which to my mind is a controlling one. A large fund gathered into the Treasury will furnish temptation for large and unusual appropriations of money. Members of Congress here in this House, all of them, are pressed by their constituents in one way or another for the construction of public buildings, for the commencement of public works, for expenditures upon those that are already commenced, or for expenditures upon this matter or that, and there will be a constantly increasing pressure brought to bear upon them, so that extravagant appropriations of the public moneys lying idle in the Treasury, which cannot be even used for the paylying idle in the Treasury, which cannot be even used for the pay-ment of the national debt and the cancellation of the outstanding bonds, will inevitably follow.

In the first place, by my vote and position upon this bill, in alliance with my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] who from exactly opposite motives opposes this permanent debt because he sees in it a reason why Congress will be moved from time to time, and more strongly moved for the reduction of customs duties, I am moved to vote against the proposition of funding $500,000,000 because I fear it must necessarily place in our Treasury a large sum of money, and be a temptation thereby to the House of Representatives and to the Senate to discover some new fashion of expending money in the public service. It is fortunate that this is not a party measure at this time. It might well have been forced into the rut of party consideration. But we meet this question, a purely economic and business one, standing alone upon figures and computation, fortunately at this time in such manner that I find high-tariff men and low-tariff men such as myself, the leaders of the greenbackers of the country and the hard-money men of the country, all able to unite in opposition to a permanent fastening of the public debt upon the people of this coun-

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to invite the attention of the committee to the practical questions presented for our determination.
We have $671,917,600 of bonds that are redeemable between this and the 1st day of July next. Of this amount $202,266,550 bear interest at 6 per cent. and $469,651,050 bear interest at 5 per cent. The annual interest on these bonds is $35,618,545. It is not denied that we can sell other bonds bearing 3 per cent. interest and obtain the money with other bonds bearing 3 per cent. Interest and obtain the money with which to redeem those now outstanding. The annual interest of such 3 per cent. bonds would be $20,157,528. By this means the Government would save annually $15,461,017.

The question before us is a practical business question, just such as presents itself to every one in his own individual affairs. It is neither more nor less than that. The measures proposed embrace two distinct propositions. One provides for the sale of long-term bonds, and the other for Treasury notes and short-term bonds that may be called and paid with the annual surplus revenues of the Government. There the other for Treasury notes and short-term bonds that may be called and paid with the annual surplus revenues of the Government. There are grave objections to long bonds. They are only justified when the emergencies of the State are such that the required revenue cannot be obtained in any other way; they are like that onerous and excessive taxation endured in war but wholly indefensible in time of peace. Nothing except a great calamity like war can justify the Government in selling long-term bonds and piling up interest upon the people year after year and generation after generation. Such a policy is un-American, undemocratic, and unrepublican. It has not met the sanction of any great statesman in this country in any period from the organization of the Government to the present time. The payment of the public debt as rapidly as possible without oppressing the people has been the constant and cherished policy of those who have gone before us. It is a policy founded in the wisest statesmanship and demanded us. It is a policy founded in the wisest statesmanship and demanded by the best interests of the nation. Our first great President said to Congress

No pecuniary consideration is more urgent than the regular redemption and discharge of the public debt.

Again calling their attention to the subject, he urged them "to consummate the work without delay." In his farewell address to the American people he warned them of the evils that lay in the path American people he warned them of the evils that lay in the path of their progress to jeopardize their institutions and imperil the common welfare of themselves and their children. He warned them against the evils of sectionalism, of foreign entanglements, of party spirit, of the encroachments of power, and prominent among the dangers that would rise to confront them was the accumulation of debt. He admonished them to avoid it, "not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burdens which we ourselves ought to bear."

Mr. Adams, who succeeded him, charged Congress to be careful and prevent the growth of the debt and to provide for the necessities of Government "as much as possible by immediate taxes and as little as possible by loans." Dr. Benjamin Rush, one of the great minds of that day and one of the fathers of the Republic, besought Mr. Adams to leave a posthumous address to the American people, and when he came to speak of public debts and banks to summon all his resources and blaze with all the splendor of his genius, as he did on the 2d of July, 1776. President Jefferson, after spending his life impressing upon the administrations that succeeded him the imperative necessity of eradicating the "moral canker," as he more than once characterized it, died without seeing the consummation of that act for which he so earnestly contended. One of the sad utterances of his last days was, "Farewell all hope of paying the public debt."

Mr. Madison contended with the others for "the effectual and early extinguishment of the public debt." John Quincy Adams held the same creed, and, commending the subject to Congress, said in vindication of the earnestness with which he pressed it upon their consideration, that "the deep solicitude felt by our citizens of all classes throughout the Union" must be his apology. That solicitude continued to grow deeper until it culminated in a conviction that free institutions were imperiled every day by its existence. As the result of an avalend nublic oningen. Andrew Jackson a man more of deeds than to grow deeper until it culminated in a conviction that free institutions were imperiled every day by its existence. As the result of an awakened public opinion, Andrew Jackson, a man more of deeds than of words, was called to the Chief Magistracy, and he accomplished without delay what others had for so many years been vainly essaying. He delivered the young republic from the meshes of the web that was being woven over its limbs; and when it was done, done speedily, and well done, he said to the representatives of the people in justification of the act and the energy with which it was performed "the experience of other nations admonished us to hasten the extinguishment of the public debt." No one of the distinguished citizens that have occupied the exalted station of Chief Magistrate of the Republic agents and the extinguishment of the complete the station of the distinguished citizens that have occupied public debt." No one of the distinguished citizens that have occupied the exalted station of Chief Magistrate of the Republic ever taught any other doctrine. The present Chief Executive has done honor to himself in calling our attention in his message recently read at our desk to the same great truth that our fathers so often expressed. In that message he says:

It is fortunate that this large surplus revenue occurs at a period when it may be directly applied to the payment of the public debt soon to be redeemable. No public duty has been more constantly cherished in the United States than the policy of paying the nation's debt as rapidly as possible.

policy of paying the nation's debt as rapidly as possible.

These are noble words, fitly spoken, and "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." In response to these utterances, these oft-repeated utterances of our statesmen, we are now told by the advocates of these long bonds that our debt must be prolonged for thirty, forty, or fifty years. Are there no evils growing out of this prolongation of debt through these many years? Have we suffered nothing by putting our debt beyond the control of the Government? Look at your seven hundred and thirty-eight millions of 4 per cent. They are to day at a premium of 13 per cent. due in 1907. They are to-day at a premium of 13½ per cent.; they were sold two years ago. The bill that authorized them was passed through the House almost without a ripple of debate. No amendment was permitted; no term was prescribed when the Government might call and redeem them. The results are now before our eyes. If we had retained the option of calling and paying at the pleasure of the Government, we could refund them into 3 per cent. bonds, and save to the tax-paying people of the United States over seven millions of dollars of annual interest. Our loss by our not doing so will be over seven millions per year for the twenty-seven years yet to elapse before we can call them in.

If we were to refund them now we would have to purchase them at a premium of over ninety-nine millions of dollars. And that is not the end of it, either. In ten years from to-day we will be ready to begin the payment of these bonds, and before ten years more could elapse we could extinguish them and stop the annual drain of twenty-nine millions of interest from the people. Now, if after paying these bonds maturing this year and the two hundred and fifty millions in 1891 we shall desire to call in and pay any of the remaining bonds we must pay high premiums, and as the Government proceeds with the extinguishment of the debt the premiums will grow greater. We have paid sixty-two millions in premiums since 1865, and before 1907 we will pay a sum vastly larger than that either in interest or premiums on those bonds. We ought all to feel humiliated when we reflect upon that transaction.

When the public debt was being created a sinking fund was established by law, and it is as much a part of the pledge of the public faith as any other part of the law. The Government and the public creditor are both bound by it, and the obligation in every part binds the one as strongly as the other. Yet all the power and influence of the public creditor has been constantly exerted to do away with the sinking fund and perpetuate the debt. The sinking fund would pay the debt in 1905, and the four percents went to 1907; and we are now being urged to sell bonds to be paid in 1920. I submit here a table furnished me at the Treasury which shows that to keep up the sinking fund would extinguish the last dollar of our indebtedness in 1905. Here it is, and I give it for the information of those who may feel any interest in the subject. I submit it with the remark that the When the public debt was being created a sinking fund was estab-

the instrumentalities of exchange. If this Government were to continue its present taxation for twenty years and retain its surplus in its vaults and not return it again to circulation, it would produce a convulsion that would shake every government on earth to its center. But I shall be answered by the friends of this measure that they propose to repeal taxes, which is much more plausible.

It will be so much more agreeable to the people to tell them that you are going to lighten the burden of taxation. That is all very well, and I will go with you as far in reduction of taxes as any one, but I will first pay the debt, stop the annual drain of a hundred millions to pay interest, and then gut down the taxation to the lowest ions to pay interest, and then cut down the taxation to the lowest figure and require from the people only taxes enough to support an economical administration of government. Suppose you now sweep away all the taxes that give you your annual surplus with which you are reducing your debt, and your bonds are to run for twenty years. As my friend from Illinois [Mr. Springer] has said, you cannot pay one of them until the end of that time. Your taxes are repealed. You one of them until the end of that time. Your taxes are repealed. You are only receiving year by year enough to meet the ordinary demands of the Government. When the twenty years or forty years shall come, what will you then do? It will find our children or grandchildren doing just what we are doing to-day—discussing a refunding bill for another term of twenty or forty years. The bill first introduced by the gentleman who reported this one was for fifty years, and he clung to it with great stubbornness and only came down to the 20-40 bond when the fifty-year bond became utterly hopeless. I have no doubt he would have preferred a bond for a hundred years and retained it, undemocratic and unrepublican as it is, to stand like a vulture and tear the vitals of the people from generation to generation. a vulture and tear the vitals of the people from generation to generation.

But the question recurs, Can we pay these maturing bonds in a shorter period? Why, sir, we all know, for it is our business to know, But the question recturs, can we pay these matring bonds in a shorter period? Why, sir, we all know, for it is our business to know, that the revenues of our Government are to-day one hundred millions in excess of the ordinary expenditure and the annual interest charge. In six years we can redeem and pay every one of these bonds. The Secretary tells us in his estimate for this year that the receipts will be three hundred and fifty millions and the ordinary expenditure and interest two hundred and sixty millions, leaving a surplus of ninety millions. He made his estimate as a prudent man, and as an able officer he chose to keep well within the receipts. The first six months of the fiscal year are gone, and the 31st of December shows $182,000,000. The six months to come are the best revenue months of the year, and it is now estimated at the Treasury that the receipts for these will be $185,000,000. That will give us $367,000,000 instead of $350,000,000, and the surplus this year will be one hundred and seven instead of ninety millions. The expenditure for the present and ensuing fiscal year he estimates at two hundred and sixty millions each. Now, when we shall have substituted a 3 per cent, bond for those now existing we will reduce the interest charge fifteen millions annually. The expenditure will then require two hundred and forty-five millions, leaving a surplus of one hundred and twenty-two millions. But I am answered by the friends of the long bonds that this happy condition of things is temporary; that it cannot last. Why not? Everybody knows that the great bulk of our taxes are raised from con-body knows that the great bulk of our taxes are raised from consumption.

The annual consumption depends upon the number of people who are to consume and their ability to purchase such things as their want requires. Therefore, if the number of our people increase, and their pecuniary ability increases with their numbers, their consumption must increase in a corresponding ratio. We are increasing in population rapidly. We are receiving a half million annually by immigration. In a recent article on this subject in the London Economist it is estimated that these immigrants bring to the United States annually $500,000,000. What is the cause of this vast tide that is pouring upon our shores? The author of the article answers that they are flying from the vast national debts that are pressing upon the people of Europe, and the prosperity of our country invites them to come as to a house of refuge. We have added twelve millions to our population in the last ten years. We are increasing to-day at the rate of a million and a half a year. Why should not consumption increase? Will not fifty millions of people wear more clothing than forty? And clothing is taxed. Will they not eat more rice and sugar, and drink more whisky, and chew and smoke more tobacco? Will they not use more implements of labor? All these things are taxed. The consumption of these things must increase as population increases, and revenue must increase as consumption increases. must increase as consumption increase must increase as consumption increases.

Again, our monetary circulation is increasing rapidly and adding to the ability of the people to buy. The Director of the Mint informs us that our circulation since January 1, 1879, in gold, silver, and currency has increased among the people—outside the Treasury and the banks—more than $186,000,000. Increased capacity to buy increases demand for the things that satisfy want, and the increased demand increases the price of commodities. Let us take the tariff, which is the largest source of our revenue.

Mr. WRIGHT. Why not talk about the tax on incomes?

Mr. MILLS. I am dealing with a practical question. I am trying to show that our customs will increase year by year. Our tariff is in the main specific. That is, it is imposed by weight and measure and not by value. It is so much per yard and so much per pound.

Let us take a ton of iron for illustration. If it is worth $10 per ton and the duty is $10 per ton the equivalent ad valorem is 100 per cent.

Let us take a ton of iron for illustration. If it is worth $10 per ton and the duty is $10 per ton the equivalent ad valorem is 100 per cent. If by increased demand it rises in value to $20 per ton the equivalent ad valorem is 50 per cent., and a large importation would result and we would get a large revenue where we would otherwise get none or a very small one. Our tariff is largely on the prohibitory order. Revenues have been designedly sacrificed to the manufacturing interests. The tariff being above the revenue standard every reduction brings it nearer to that point. The very term revenue standard means the largest amount of revenue that can be reached without restricting consumption. Two years ago iron went up 105 per cent restricting consumption. Two years ago iron went up 125 per cent. Other things rose in price, not so largely as iron perhaps, but there was a general rise in the price of all commodities. What was the result? Imports increased largely and the revenues rose from one hundred and thirty millions in 1878 to one hundred and thirty-seven millions in 1879 and one hundred and eighty-six millions in 1880, and the imports are still increasing. During the five months ending 30th November our imports amounted to two hundred and sixty-two millions, a gain over the corresponding five months of last year of forty-seven millions. If the remaining months of the year but equal those of last year we shall have seven hundred millions of imports this year. It is a fact that cannot be disputed that every enhancement of the price of commodities must increase our imports in the present status of the tariff. The importations of last year demonstrate the truth of the proposition. And so do the revenues derived from internal taxes. They rose from one hundred and ten millions in 1878 to one hundred and thirteen in 1879, one hundred and twenty-four in 1880, and the Secretary tells us they will be one hundred and thirty-five and the Secretary tells us they will be one hundred and thirty-five millions the present year.

I have expended some labor in trying to reach an approximate estimate of our revenues for the next ten years. I took the fifteen years from 1866 to 1880, inclusive, and made an average of customs taxes per head of our population and found it to be four dollars in round numbers. I took the last nine years of the internal-revenue taxes, and found the average $2.56 per head. I selected nine years for the internal revenue because very considerable changes were made in the laws prior to that time. I take Elliot's tables of estimated population for each of the years from 1880 to 1800.

Applying the averages of taxes paid per head for the time given to Applying the averages of taxes paid per head for the time given to the ensuing ten years, it gives me the following table of population, customs, and internal revenue. The miscellaneous revenues are about the same every year, and I place them at twenty millions, though they are already fifteen millions for the half year that is gone. In the column of expenditures, including charge of annual interest, I have retained the Secretary's estimate for this and next year, and after that added five millions each succeeding year. I have made no deduction on account of the large sum that will be taken from the annual expenditure in a few years by reason of the payment of the arrearages of pensions. Nor have I made any deduction on account of the fifteen millions reduction of interest. Nor have I made any deduction on account of the decrease of interest by annual payment of the public debt. If one hundred millions of that debt is paid each year, the amount required for interest will be three millions less each year, and after that when we take up a hundred millions per year of four-and-a-half percents, then the deduction will be four and a half millions per year. And after they are paid and we purchase a hundred millions annually of the four percents, then it will sink at the rate of four millions each year. Here is the table. The population, which is the basis upon which it is made, is by estimate of Mr. Elliot, of the Treasury, and General Walker referred me to him and assured me his estimate could be relied on:

Years.	Population.	Customs, at $4 per capita.	Internal revenue, at $2.56 per capita.	Miscellaneous.	Total.	Ordinary expenses and annual interest.	Surplus to be applied to annual payment of public debt.
1881	51, 462, 000 52, 799, 000 54, 163, 000 55, 554, 000 56, 973, 000 58, 419, 000 59, 892, 000 61, 393, 000 62, 921, 000 64, 476, 000	205 211 216 222 227 233 239 245 251 257	130 134 138 141 144 149 153 157 160 165	20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 2	355 365 374 383 391 462 412 422 431 442	260 260 265 270 275 280 285 290 295 300	95 105 109 113 116 122 127 132 136 142

I ask gentlemen to look at the annual surplus—over a hundred millions and growing larger every year—and tell me how they can vote to sell bonds that are not to be paid for twenty years. Is not the estimate made on a sound basis, and is it not a very reasonable one? Does it not follow, as the night follows the day, that our revenues must increase with our increasing population and wealth? Would it not be a piece of supreme folly in this body representing the interests of all the people to take this debt, fast disappearing, and which would be wholly exhausted in five or six years at the furthest, and fasten it on us for twenty or forty? Look at this thing as an intelligent business man, and act as you would if it were your own personal concern. When a man embarks in any business enterprise he looks forward and judges the future by the experiences of the past. You invest ward and judges the future by the experiences of the past. You invest your capital upon the probabilities that like causes will produce the same results in the future that they have in the past. If you buy land, engage in mercantile pursuits, invest in public securities, you calculate the probabilities of success, and determine your course accordingly.

But it is said taxation is too high and should be reduced. Taxation, much or little, should never be greater than the demands for an honest and economical administration of the Government. It should always be sufficient to meet the demands of the Government. When we compare the taxation we have to-day with that of the last twenty years we see that it is far below the average. In 1866 we paid in Federal taxation $14.75 perhead; 1867, $13.07; 1868, $10.49, and 1880, $6.75. If we act wisely and continue our revenues and pay these bonds and those of 1891, which we can do in the next seven or eight years, we may then repeal a large amount of taxation.

I have heard it frequently said by the advocates of these long bonds that posterity must bear some of these burdens. Whose posterity? Not theirs. The men who clamor for oppressive taxation on all the Not theirs. The men who clamor for oppressive taxation on all the necessaries of life are equally clamorous against imposing any taxes upon their wealth. The right to eat bread by the sweat of one's brow is a right that was reserved in the primal curse of man; but these men who are so zealous to escape taxation themselves mercilesily demand that the burden shall grow heavier upon the shoulders of those who tail and done to them the right to satisfy their hunger with the who toil, and deny to them the right to satisfy their hunger with the products of their own toil. The wealthy do not intend to bear any of products of their own toil. The wealthy do not intend to bear any of the burdens of the Government, nor do they intend that their children shall. It is the great army of toilers who live by daily labor who are to bear while living this enormous burden, and it is their posterity that are to continue to bear as their fathers did. It is of these that President Washington spoke when he said we should "not ungenerously place upon posterity the burdens which we ourselves ought to bear." In those days the people were not separated into two orders far apart—one enjoying an immunity from taxation and the other suffeiring and bending under all its unconscionable burdens. In those days "equal and exact justice to all men" was the proud motto borne upon the frontlets of the Republic and engraven on the palms of her hands. Suppose you go to the capitalists in Wall street and propose to fix a tax on their income and continue it upon their posterity, what would be their reply? Suppose you propose atax on the five thousand would be their reply? Suppose you propose a tax on the five thousand millions invested in railroads in the United States and continue it millions invested in railroads in the United States and continue it upon the children and grandchildren of the present owners, what will they say? They will denounce the proposition, as they have repeatedly done, as odious and inquisitorial. They once paid taxes, but they swept away the laws that imposed them as with the breath of awhirlwind. They said it was a war tax and fearfully oppressive, and Congress gave them up. But the other day we heard another complaint of excessive taxation. We are told every day that taxes are too heavy. And so they are on those who pay them.

But the question is, do you propose to relieve those who are best entitled to your sympathy? Let us see if we understand each other. How much do you propose to reduce the tax on sugar, that is taxed from 62 to 73 per cent.? On rice, that is taxed 100 per cent.? On salt, that is taxed from 40 to 66 per cent.? On cotton goods, that are taxed from 61 to 71 per cent.? On window-glass, that is taxed from 90 to 116 per cent.? On iron, that is taxed from 70 to 90 per cent.? On candy, that is taxed from 100 to 153 per cent.? The children of peop folls would like for it to come pear enough for them to get a poor folks would like for it to come near enough for them to get a lick at it occasionally. How much do you propose to reduce the taxes on spices, that are all the way from 181 to 461 per cent.? How much on spices, that are all the way from 181 to 461 per cent.? How much on wool and woolen goods, so essential to the comfort of fifty millions of people in winter? They are taxed from 60 to 90 per cent. How much on blankets and wool hats, that are taxed 89 per cent.? Is it not a shame that woolen clothing is taxed 90 per cent.? How many thousands are to-day destitute of such comforts because they are not within their reach! These taxes are shamefully oppressive. They are so exorbitant that they defraud the Government and rob the people. And yet the gentlemen who are here urging a repeal of taxes would not so much as touch them with their little fingers. would not so much as touch them with their little fingers.

Who is it, then, that is so oppressed with taxes? Why, the banks. The little tax on their circulation must be repealed. What next? The tax on bank deposits must be repealed. What next? The tax on bank capital must be repealed. What next? The tax on bank-checks must be repealed. It is banks, and only banks—banks first, banks last, and banks all the time. The banks in whose vaults are two thousand millions of money, and who are receiving a bounty from the Government of over fifteen millions annually as interest on the bonds they have deposited, while 90 per cent. of them have been paid in dollars that are equal in value to gold, are greatly oppressed. So oppressive is this taxation and so eager was the House to comply with the request of the bankers and repeal it at once that it only lacked a half dozen votes of securing the requisite two-thirds, a few days ago, when it was proposed to pass a bill by suspension repealing the tax on checks. When we begin to reduce taxes I want to see it begin in the right place. The first point to attack is the tarift. The first taxes to reduce are the taxes on food and clothing and the implements of labor.

to reduce are the taxes on food and clothing and the implements of labor.

Now, sir, I have shown that we have every probability to expect the increase of our revenues. We are in the enjoyment of a prosperity the result of two co-operating causes, and when these two concur we will-always have increased revenues. The first is increasing population, and the second is increasing wealth distributed among the people. No man can gainsay the proposition. On these two "hang all the law and the prophets." A man's wants always increase with his ability to satisfy them. When a man is poor he will be contented with a two-horse wagon, but if he rises to an income of ten thousand a year he will discard his wagon and ride in a carriage attended with servants in livery. A millionaire will live in a palace, a mendicant will be contented with a hovel. We are prosperous to-day. We can remove the producing causes and bring distress again. We can drive away our population as Europe is doing by the oppressive burdens of national debts fastened upon the people and persecuting them with taxes. We can stop the coinage of gold and silver and issue no more paper convertible into coin. We can continue large taxes and lock them up in the vaults of the Treasury, and it would not be long till we would see our land as though it were visited by the "pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the desolation that wasteth at noonday." The people would soon be unable to bear the burdens of government, and hunger and want would stand on many of the thresholds of the poor. We are coining silver every day and adding it to our circulation. It is bound to remain in the country and aid in the increase of prices. The Secretary tells us that it has the fiat quality. It is worth in commerce eighty-five cents in London and elsewhere.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Ninety and six-tenths.

Mr. MILLS. Somewere along there. The exact figure is not material to my argument. We have invested the silver dollar with all the functions of money. We compel creditors to a of the value of property, the amount of the revenues, and the pros-of the value of property, the amount of the revenues, and the prosperity of the people.

Now, sir, in the light of the prospects around us will we continue this debt for forty years? If we pay it in six years we will pay one hundred and eight millions of interest. If we put it off to forty years we will pay seven hundred and twenty millions of interest. Are we to lay six hundred and twelve millions of unnecessary burden upon the vast body of the people and their children? Would it not be an act of consummate folly, nay, would it not be treason to the people, whose interests we are here to represent, if we should bind them like Prometheus upon the rock to be torn by the talons of those foul birds that feed and fatten on corruption? If taxes are no burdens, let those two hundred and seventy thousand persons who have an annual income of eight hundred and fifty millions come forward and contribute something to the support of the Government. Let those large railroad corporations come forward and contribute something to aid the Government to transport over their own tracks the troops that are necessary to preserve their own property from conflagration when the torch is in the hands of their own strikers.

Burke, the great English statesman, tells us that every exemption from the burdens of government of any class in the State tends to the dissolution of the ties of sympathy and citizenship, and to produce in the bosoms of those who are exempted a feeling that is alien to the rest of the commonwealth. The observation is true. There is a class, few but powerful, that have grown up under the fostering care of legislative robbery, and who feel toward the vast body of their fellow-citizens as though they were but hewers of wood and drawers of water for them. They ask Congress to keep this debt on the people that they may amass great fortunes by its stock—extend the power of the banks and increase the spoliations of the tariff.

As President Washington says, let us pay the debt "without delay," and not ungenerously place upon the shoulders of our children the burden we should bear ourselves. In the language of President Madison, let us press for the "effectual and early extinguishment of the debt." In the language of President Jackson, let us "hasten the extinguishment of the debt." In the language of President Hayes, let us pay the debt "as rapidly as possible." Everything now is propitious. The shadow of the long night of distress lies in the vale behind us. Our faces are turned away from the habitations of the task-masters. Let us with a glad heart and bounding step move forward in the discharge of the great trust committed to us and in the fulfillment of the great destiny that awaits us. [Applause.]

Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read as a part of my remarks a bill which I have prepared and propose to submit as a substitute for the pending measure.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the public debt.

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the public debt.

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the public debt.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That in lieu of and for the purpose of redeeming the United States bonds anthorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and all acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue Treasury notes of the United States in the amount of not more than five hundred million dollars, in denominations of not less than ten dollars, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after the lat day of July, 1882: Provided, That not more than sixty millions of said notes shall so mature in each year from the date of their issue; and said notes shall be disposed of by the said Secretary at not less than par, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the 5 and 6 per cent, bonds of the United States maturing during the year 1881.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange at not less than par any of the notes aforesaid for any of the said bonds so maturing in the year 1881. And on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of the contract of exchange to the time of their maturity and the interest for a like period on the notes so exchanged.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue the said notes either with coupons or registered, and in such appropriate form as he may prescribe, and to make suitable regulations for disposing of said Treasury notes to the best advantage for the Government, the expenses attending such disposition not to exceed one-fourth of 1 per cent. of the notes so disposed of or exchanged.

Sec. 4. That for the purpose of redeeming the residue of said bonds so maturing in the year 1881 the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to

Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Chairmau, I claim no originality for the bill just read. It contains what in my judgment is the good in the several substitutes proposed, and attempts to avoid the chief evil of the eral substitutes proposed, and attempts to avoid the chief evil of the original bill. I have sought a common ground on which I believe every patriot can stand.

This question is one of practical legislation. It ought to be adjusted by the rules of plain common sense and business experience; and there ought to be wisdom and conservatism enough here to secure such unity of action as will bring out of the conflict of opinion a result that will command public approval.

It is the very sum of folly for us to stand here chaffering and whining about how or why this debt was created, or how or why it took its present shape. History and an enlightened public sentiment will assign this responsibility to its rightful place.

The debt exists. It has the sanction and sanctity of legislative authority. To its ultimate liquidation the faith of this great Government stands pledged. The principal of a part of this debt becomes payable or redeemable on or before July 1 next, as follows:

Loan.	Rate.	Payable.	Redeemable.	Amount.
February, 1861		Dec. 1, 1880 July 1, 1881	June 30, 1881 June 30, 1881 May 1, 1881	$13, 414, 000 711, 800 145, 786, 500 57, 787, 250 469, 651, 050
Outstanding Nov. 1, 1880				687, 350, 600

None of the remaining public bonds become redeemable prior to September 1, 1891, and those are 41 per cent. bonds. The bonds payseptember 1, 1891, and those are 4½ per cent. bonds. The bonds payable December 1, 1880, have been redeemed, leaving $637,350,600 to be provided for. Under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, there are $104,652,200 of 4 per cent. bonds in the hands of the Treasurer available for the purpose of sale with which to continue the work of redemption. Thus it is apparent that the practical question which confronts Congress, first, is, shall the Secretary of the Treasury dispose of these $104,652,200 of four percents to obtain that amount for redemption purposes? For Congress to permit this would certainly be most culpable when it is now conceded by the best informed that a 3 per cent. bond of like provisions can be readily negotiated. So, too, as to the bonds redeemable this year bearing 6 and 5 per cent. interest. We would confessedly be unsafe custodians of the public credit and welfare if we were to permit this immense sum of money to continue to bear these rates of interest when we could substitute this dath with a 3 per cent interest bond with its saving substitute this debt with a 3 per cent. interest bond, with its saving of millions of interest, which is a tax on the earnings and resources of the people.

Under the favoring conditions of internal peace and abounding prosperity, resulting from unexampled home production and foreign demand, the day and the hour is ours in which to obtain loans at a rate hitherto unknown to the Government; and which no statesman, in the vicissitudes of harvests, commerce, foreign trade, and peace at home and abroad, can predict will continue for a year. So that the plainest dictates of common sense and self-preservation require that we should, at once, refund this debt, unless it can be satisfactorily demonstrated that this question admits of some other solution consistent with public faith and sound financial economy.

Chief among the pending bills, chief because it is presented to us from so important a committee as that of the "Ways and Means,"

"WOOD FUNDING BILL."

It authorizes, in brief, the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to the amount of \$500,000,000 bearing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after twenty years, and payable in forty years; and also \$200,000,000 of notes bearing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., redeemable after two years and payable in ten years; but not more than \$40,000,000 to be payable in any one year. Since this bill was reported to the House the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has been instructed by his committee to move an amendment reducing the rate of interest on the bonds to 3 per cent. and to increase the volume of Treasury notes to \$400,000,000.

In other words the amended bill is but the echo of the recommen-

In other words the amended bill is but the echo of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the issue of another public bond beyond the power of the Government to call it in and redeem whenever it has the money to pay. If the lessons taught by history in other governments were forgot, the fresh experience of the past fifteen years of our people teaches us that our bonded debt system is an intolerable curse, prolific of evil and dangerous to popular liberty.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency submitted to this Congress announces the amount of United States bonds held by the banks, as follows:

Savings-banks	$189, 187, 816
State banks and trust companies	24, 498, 604
Private banks
National banks	403, 369, 350

Total ...

And it is a well-known fact that one-thirtieth of the entire public

And it is a well-known fact that one-thirdeth of the entire public funded debt of this nation is held and owned by a single man.

The effect of this concentration of public obligations in the hands of a few corporations and individuals is but too palpable. They have become autocrats in finance and dictators in legislation. Under the false notion that the holders of the nation's obligations are its benefactors, their wants and wishes have hitherto displaced all just considerations of the needs and rights of 50,000,000 of tax-paying people.

The holders of these securities are always on the side of immense The holders of these securities are always on the side of immense revenues and high taxes; for in these exactions lie the value of their claims. They are so potential at home that they dictate congressional nominations and dominate elections. There are so few of them and they are so vigilant that on short warning they concentrate on the National Legislature and make their power felt in all of its financial policies. They uphold and sustain the man and party in politics whose voice and vote will maintain and magnify the interest rates on their bonds; for they have no convictions in politics that are permitted to hazard their gains.

being dependent on the perpetuation of these bonds for their continued existence and a high rate of interest for their better security and profits, are ever impressed with the idea that

'Tis their duty, so all the learned think, T' 'spouse the cause by which they eat and drink.

T' 'spouse the cause by which they eat and drink.

So they can always, in our politics, be implicitly relied on to aid with votes and money the party that will continue the bonded debt and stand for high rates of interest. And in turn the dominant party is the unswerving friend of the national banks. Hence, for years all our ministers of finance, from the Secretary to his subordinates, have in their annual reports to Congress devoted a large space to a most labored defense of the supreme importance of the national banks, without whose existence, they teach, there would be no outlet for our gushing revenues, no healthful actions in the financial system. Therefore, as to the public debt, their motto is esto perpetua.

The Secretary of the Treasury states in his recent report that the requirements of the sinking fund, prior to the maturity of the 4½ per cent. bonds in 1891, will aggregate for the ten years from 1882, $520,-904,707.58, or an average in round numbers annually of $52,000,000.

904,707.58, or an average in round numbers annually of $52,000,000. The total of revenues collected in the last fiscal year amounted to $333,526,610.98. The total of ordinary expenditures for the year, including $2,795,320.42 for premiums on bonds purchased, were $267,642,957.78, leaving a surplus revenue of $65,883,653.20. The item of $2,795,320.42, for premiums on bonds purchased ought never to be repeated in the schedule of public expenditures. It is a shameful commentary on the financial management of the republican party that the Government should be forced into competition with the bond-mongers, the bulls and bears of Wall street to call in its own bonds; an occurrence we will not again witness if the policy be adonted which I propose to outline. adopted which I propose to outline.

It is apparent that the application of the surplus revenues, leaving the sinking fund intact, to the redemption of the 1881 debt, would liquidate it in ten years.

For the ten years from 1870 to and inclusive of 1879 there was paid of principal of public debt $436,356,968.06, and of interest on public debt the sum of $1,092,330,558.33, making a grand total of $1,528,687,526.39; and this, too, during a period of four years of unexampled stringency in monetary affairs and business distress.

The receipts of the Government, now far in excess of the most favorable year of the past decade, may not, under any reasonably conceivable fortune, average less through the next decade, and, coupled with an annual interest debt from twenty millions to thirty-five millions less than the average of the past period, it becomes an absolute demonstration that the whole of the 1881 debt can be liquidated inside of the ten years. Therefore any enactment by this Congress that would prolong it or put it out of our power to wipe it out would be almost criminal.

Since March, 1877, in a period of little over two years, with our heavy interest rates and the payment of premiums, there has been paid of the principal of the public debt $109,489,850. In addition to the foregoing ordinary resources, there is no satisfactory objection to the application of a portion of the coin locked up in the Treasury vaults. The Secretary admits that of the $218,710,154 so held $141,597,013.61 are available for redemption purposes; but he claims that it is, and should be, retained as the basis of specie resumption—the security for the greenback circulation of $346,681,016. I shall concede, Mr. Chairman, what the intelligence of the age approves and all political economists teach that a healthful and stable paper currency rests upon the assurance of its ultimate redemption, if demanded, in a money of intrinsic value. Yet it is due to the actual facts to admit that the real convenience and utility of such a currency, and the reliance on the ability of the Government to redeem rency, and the reliance on the ability of the Government to redeem rency, and the reliance on the ability of the Government to redeem ultimately, make it quite as current when it is well known to the public that there is not dollar for dollar in specie in the vaults for the circulating notes. No better proof of this need be offered here than the patent fact that the $346,000,000 of greenbacks to-day are at par with gold and silver when there are only $141,597,013 of coin available for their redemption in the Treasury. I entertain not the shadow of a doubt in asserting that at least $100,000,000 of this coin could at once be put to the service of the redemption of the bonds without affecting in the least the circulating value and office of the green-

On the day of the proclaimed resumption of specie payments there were in fact in the Treasury only $112,703,342 of gold and $32,000,000 of silver. The whole amount of notes presented for redemption the year prior to November 1, 1880, was only $706,658. What contingency is likely to arise in the near future to lessen confidence in the greenback or increase the demand for specie? The greenback survived the shock of battle, the desolations of war, and the depletion of the Treasury. It has withstood the frowns and hatred of gold-mongers. And despite the devilish ingenuity and machinations of the bondholders its very name for ten years made their knees to smite together like Belshazzar at the handwriting on the wall amid even his royal revels. And even the Secretary of the Treasury, whose right hand penned the resumption act—"the steel point unseen, not unfelt," beneath the fair words of which was a covert thrust at the greenbacks to make place for the national-bank notes—is now pelled in his late report to pay this high tribute to its worth:

United States notes are now in form, security, and convenience the best circulating medium known. * * The United States note, to the extent that it is willingly taken by the people and can beyond question be maintained at par in coin, is the least burdensome form of debt.

And yet with all the seeming instincts of the miser he clutches with and yet with all the seeming instincts of the miser he citatenes with nervous hands and guards with greedy eyes his coin bags, as if he would suffer the pangs of starvation rather than let one darling shin-ing piece go. He pleads in justification of the doting passion the pos-sibility of "an adverse balance of trade, or a sudden panic, or other unfortunate circumstances."

No such misery can possibly come upon this land for the next four years; for last fall preceding the election the Secretary from the hustings, and all his party allies, assured the people that financial disorders and reverses were only possible in the event of Hancock's election; but only elect the hero of the "tow-path" and sage of Mentor, and the golden glimmer of the dawning of a financial millennium would light the Orient on the morn succeeding his inauguration. The people were taken in imagination upon the very top of Pisgah's Mount, and pointed, as an inheritance for the faithful, to a republican Canaan flowing eternally with milk and honey, ever swelling in abundance, where even the blasts would but shake "spices from the leaves" and "every month drop fruits upon the ground."

No trade currents, no foreign disturbances were to interrupt a joyous people breathing with the active energies of profitable life. No locusts were to swarm on us again. The skies were never to become brass, the sun ungenial, nor aught in nature was to interrupt the processes of reproductive growth. Well, he is elected. And the man whose magic wand we have been told, like the rod of Moses that drew water from the rock, could produce abundant revenues from the resources of his genius, may continue to hold and wave it.

Why, then, on the eve of this inauguration (which promises in its wasteful outlay of money and imperial ostentation to vie with the crazy triumphal reception of a returned Roman general from his carcrazy triumphal reception of a returned Roman general from his carnival of blood and plunder, and that, too, when the poor of this city block its streets begging) base a claim for the continued hoarding of this unemployed treasure on the apprehension of "hard times?"

Less of extravagance and more of economy, less corruption and more honesty, less partisanism and more patriotism, less charlatanism and more statesmanship, are the great needs to utilize the nation's

There is in the resumption act of 1875, as claimed by the Secretary

There is in the resumption act of 1875, as claimed by the Secretary, ample provision already to meet any emergency likely to arise. By it the Secretary, to maintain resumption, is authorized "to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin," bonds of the description named in the act of July 14, 1870.

There is likewise this further safeguard against any probable raid on the redemption fund: the liquidation and reduction of the principal of the public debt will greatly strengthen the public credit, lessen the burdens of taxation, inspire popular confidence, stimulate healthful enterprises, thereby creating such activities for the employment of the greenback circulation that the occasion for its redemption will be diminished just in the ratio of the diminution of the bonded debt. Then there is the resource of the annual product of silver, yearly increasing, and which would multiply twofold under the fostering hand of a friendly minister of finance, every surplus dollar of which ought in law and justice to the people to be applied to the liquidation of the national debt; though I am free to confess that the future political complexion of this House inspires little hope in this direction. The people are such patient asses that they will bear any burden their litical complexion of this House inspires little hope in this direction. The people are such patient asses that they will bear any burden their republican masters will impose on them if only their ears are tickled with the tintinnabulation of "loyalty" or dinned with the coward outery against a "solid South." With the application of the present surplus revenue and $100,000,000 of coin in the Treasury, the principal of the $637,000,000 bonded debt would be reduced below $500,000,000. This, then, brings us to the practical inquiry, how is this residue to be met so as to relieve the people from the curse of long-running bonds and at the same time give them the advantage of the low rate of interest?

The Secretary of the Treasury concedes in his report that "the large accumulation of money now seeking investment affords a favorable opportunity for selling (Treasury) notes bearing a low rate of interest." He recommends the issue of $400,000,000 in denominations not less than $10, bearing interest not exceeding 4 per cent., running from one to ten years, to be sold at par, the amount maturing in any one year not to exceed the sinking fund for that year. While expressing the belief that a large portion of these could be sold bearing 3 per cent, interest, yet he craves authority to allow him the discretion of selling at 4 per cent.

But why allow him this discretion? The history of the past justifies the assertion that to grant the power is to witness its fullest exercise. For years the popular judgment has been in advance of the Secretary, who has struggled against the people's demand that the management of their public fiscal affairs should be divorced from the management of their public fiscal affairs should be divorced from the network of syndicates, national banks, and jobbers in bonds.

Impelled by the force of public sentiment and the logic of actual events in monetary transactions transpiring at home and abroad to admit that the simple issue of interest-bearing notes would suffice to absorb two-thirds of the maturing bonds, yet, like Ephraim bound to his idols, he asks in addition to the issue of the $400,000,000 of Treasury notes that authority be given him to sell $400,000,000 of bonds, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent., to be applied to the payment of the bonds redeemable on or before July 1, 1881. He wants to exercise his discretion again between the sale of these and the Treasury notes. the Treasury notes.

I have no doubt myself as to where this discretion would strike. It would fall to the national banks, whose capacious throats would cry down the little unaristocratic Treasury notes. If $400,000,000 of cry down the little unaristocratic Treasury notes. If $400,000,000 of the latter can be negotiated, as he admits, there would, under the conclusion I have already reached, remain only about one hundred million dollars of the outstanding bonds of 1881 to be provided for.

Mr. Chairman, I am confident the whole $500,000,000 can be provided for in the issue of a like amount of Treasury notes of the description indicated bearing only 3 per cent., and certainly not over 3½ per cent. I doubt if any species of securities would be more popular. The immense sums of money daily entering into the most visionary schemes of adventure, with the prevailing low rates of interest on collaterals in our metropolitan cities, amply attest its abundance. The premium on 4 per cent. bonds shows that money is not worth more than 3 per cent. than 3 per cent.

These small notes would be eagerly sought for as safe investments for the humble savings of the people, as also by guardians, trustees, and insurance companies. They would, in such shape, be most convenient to the masses for temporary use and investment, readily exchangeable, and at once entering largely into all the commercial transactions of traders and merchantmen and the ordinary bargains and traffics of farmers. And, what is of still higher recommendation to this method, it would induct us into that great secret of the marvelous success of the French Republic in the management of its vast indemnity debt entailed by the Franco-Prussian war, in having our obligations distributed among and held by the masses of our own people, instead of long-lived bonds hawked about in alien markets in quest of moneyed autocrats who only desire to draw from among us to their own coffers semi-annual drains of gold.

Why take counsel of our apprehensions, and decline this experiment upon the arrogant suggestion of stock-jobbers and pampered syndicates? Who has a warrant to arrest the effort by mere prediction when we have never been permitted to make the experiment? tion when we have never been permitted to make the experiment? Give the people a chance at least to test a financial policy in their favor, and discredit it only on failure. Let us at least make one more honest, sturdy struggle to regain the primitive idea and practice in government, that it should be administered amori patrix and not amori nummi. Let us here and now, on this offered field of battle with the haughty knights of Mammon, test their golden armor with the simple courage of the popular legionaries shielded with justice. Inspired with the true democratic policy that this public debt, while honestly paid, should be managed in the interest of the people rather than the creditor, I would stake my life on a popular result.

THE GILLETTE BILL.

As usual when the great body of democrats is struggling for popular relief, with need of every friendly hand, certain so-called green-backers interpose some irrational, impractical scheme, only calculated to weaken the democrats and strengthen the republicans. This seems to be the special mission of that element of this party sloughed off from the republican party. Their only rational hope of financial reform in any degree lies in co-operation with this side of the House. Their assertion of independence makes them wanton obstructionists and supple instruments of mischief. The net result of their last year's exploits, under the ill-starred banner of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] was the loss of six of their own number in this House and the displacement here of three democrats of western birth and sympathy with three gentlemen of nomadic politics, who can always tent inside of the republican picket-lines unchallenged.

and sympathy with three gentlemen of nomadic politics, who can always tent inside of the republican picket-lines unchallenged. Their views on this and cognate questions are so visionary and revolutionary that it is beyond all expectation that a majority of the American Congress can ever be brought to their support. Hence they are simply agitators and disturbers.

The "Weaver resolutions" of last session permitted the refunding of the debt, but "not beyond the right of the Government to redeem at any time." But now these gentlemen advance a step farther in the Gillette bill, and say the bonds shall not be refunded at all. All surplus coin and paper money in the Treasury is to be set aside for their payment, and all the silver the mints can turn out. Then the bill provides for the issues of $340,000,000 of Treasury notes of denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, and one hundred dollars, to be made receivable for all dues, debts, and taxes, with legal-tender qualities for private debts, thus discriminating against the people in favor of the bondholders! One-half of the bonded debt to be paid in silver, &c. Then the national banks are to be crucified without three days of grace or any regard to business or individual rights. Coupled with all this intricate and cumbrous machinery is the restoration, in an intensified form, of the income tax of the war act of 1862 and the war-fever days of 1867. And as an evidence of the consciousness of the framer of this act that under the tardy operation of his modified flat system sufficient revenues could not be realized to meet our public bonds the last section of the bill concludes. consciousness of the framer of this act that under the tardy opera-tion of his modified flat system sufficient revenues could not be real-ized to meet our public bonds, the last section of the bill concludes with the defiant announcement that "only so many of them shall be called in as can be paid under the provisions of this act." Indeed "the said Hagan is not to be hastened."

Indeed "the said Hagan is not to be hastened."

Now, Mr. Chairman, this House understands full well the object of this bill. It is for buncombe! There is much in it that we might approve as an independent measure. Its direct attack on the national banks might elicit more sympathy, but for the fact that if the banks were "taken off" in this fashion they might lay claim to the glory of martyrdom, for having been crucified between two thieves—fiat money and repudiation; whereas, as a result of the policy I have discussed, the banks would be permitted to die on the very plea on which they were horm—the public good which they were born—the public good.

This Gillette bill is too cumbrous—too much stuffed. It is like an amateur Thespian performer in a western town, whose rôle was to personate Falstaff. Being spider-legged, and lean of body, he overdrew on the straw pile and his bed for filling; so that, in a supreme effort before the footlights, his overstretched outer garments "busted," and to his horror and the convulsion of his audience he strewed the stage with a cart-load of straw and bed-quilts.

The truth is, these latter-day political new lights do not expect their financial nostrums to be taken. They do not desire this debt to be paid and eliminated from our politics. Its continuance in its present shape, while a morsel to the bond-jobbers and a bounty to national bankers, is a hobby-horse for demagogues to bestride and perpetually jog on. The greenbackers and the national banks are much alike. They both exist upon the present condition of the public debt. The passage of a bill embodying the views I have indicated would shortly remove both of these barnacles on the body-politic. It would remove insuperable objections to the inauguration of legislative measures for the revision of our outrageous custom and excise laws, the repression of monopolies, the invigoration of internal commerce, the revival of American ship-building, restoring to us the lost glory of the American flag streaming on the high seas and flaunting in every foreign port of trade.

Mr. Chairman, in the future of so grand a republic as ours, with its march of empire, its swelling tide of population, its new rising stars in the constellation of States, its marvelous production of cereals and precious ores; with its pasture lands and meadows stretching from occan all capable of indefinite expansion develop. from ocean to ocean, all capable of indefinite expansion, development, and utilization under the crafty hand and inventive genius of as bold, energetic, and aggressive a race as ever "wrought or fought" under the sun of civilization, there are other problems for the solution of statesmanship, for which patriotism and genius sigh, rather than for this perpetual struggle of degradation with debt and money-

Let us, with rugged, practical business sense, and in the spirit of patriotic compromise, settle this bond question here and now, and turn the country's eye to those brighter fields of glory.

Mr. TUCKER. If there is no other gentleman who wishes to engage in this general debate I will move the committee rise with a view, I will say, of taking up the bill on Saturday next and considering it section by section, as to-morrow is private bill day.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; let it be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. TUCKER. To-morrow is private bill day.

Mr. McLANE. That makes no difference.

Mr. TUCKER. I will say for the information of the House that to-day I stand in charge of this bill at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] who is detained from the House by sickness. He hopes to be in the House by Saturday next, when the bill comes up to be considered by sections. I move, therefore, the committee rise with a view to taking this up again on Saturday next. Mr. Tucker's motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Covert reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. COOK. I now move the House adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before the motion is made to adjourn, Mr. Speaker,

I wish to move that the refunding bill and the amendments proposed thereto be printed in the RECORD to-morrow for the convenience of members

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the refunding bill and all amendments proposed thereto shall be printed in the RECORD to-morrow so they may be seen in one connection. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will not the bill be open to amendment when taken up section by section?

The SPEAKER. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and an amendment to an amendment will be in order at the same time, and when the amendment to an amendment is voted down another amendment to the amendment will be in order. In the House amendments will be in order in like manner until the previous question is seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK. My order has been agreed to. The SPEAKER. It has.

The bill and amendments are as follows:

H. R. No. 4592.—A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

H. R. No. 4592.—A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Be it enacted, &c., That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000 bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than $40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds anthorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange at not less than par any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum, and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity, and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued, but none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the redemption or exchange of any of the bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies, and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

Sec. 3. Authority to issue bonds and notes to the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby granted.

Sec. 4. The act approved February 26, 1879, authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit is hereby amended so as to continue and limit the amount of certificates to be issued to $50,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, and fixing the rate of interest to be allowed thereon at three and one-half of 1 per cent. per annum for one year, after which interest shall cease; and the said certificates shall be convertible, at the option of the holders, when presented in sums of $50 or multiples thereof, into the coupon or registered bonds authorized by this act; and whenever any of the said certificates shall be converted into bonds, the same shall be canceled and destroyed; but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue new certificates in place of those so converted up to the limit of $50,000,000, until the aggregate amount of the bonds authorized by this act and of the said certificates combined then outstanding shall equal the amount of bonds hereby authorized. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to form combinations by which to procure said certificates of deposit authorized out of the said certificates on bonds author

A bill to provide for the payment of the bonds falling due in 1881.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue Treasury notes to the amount of $400,000,000, in denominations of not less than $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at any time at the pleasure of the Government after the 1st day of July, 1882, and to sell the same at not less than par. He is also authorized to issue bonds to the amount of $237,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after the 1st day of July, 1885, and to sell the same at not less than par. And the proceeds of the sale of said notes and bonds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds of the united States falling due in 1881.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange at not less than par any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any bonds of the United States outstanding and which mature during the year 1881. And on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue the said notes and bonds, either coupon or registered, and in such form as he may prescribe.

Sec. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is neared and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of said notes and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-half of 1 per cent.

The substitute proposed by Mr. GILLETTE is as follows:

A bill to provide for the payment of the public debt of the United States.

A bill to provide for the payment of the public debt of the United States. Be it enacted, &c., That all bonds of the United States that shall become redeemable in the year 1881 or prior thereto, shall not be refunded or exchanged for other bonds of the United States, but shall be paid as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart all surplus coin and paper money which may be in the Treasury from time to time as a fund for the payment of the said mataring bonds, and for the purchase of silver bullion for minting purposes. The said Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the mints of the United States standard silver coins to the full extent of the capacity of the mints, and he is hereby authorized to purchase the silver bullion for said purpose as provided in the act approved February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character."

act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character."

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare Treasury notes to the amount of $340,000,000, with such additional amount as may be necessary to equal but not exceed the amount of national-bank notes in the United States as shown by the books of the Treasury on May 1, 1881. These notes shall be in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100, as most adapted to the convenience of business, and shall be receivable for all dues and debts and taxes of every kind due or that shall become due to the United States, and shall be receivable for all dues and debts of every kind due from or that shall become due from the United States where not otherwise provided by law, and shall be a legal tender for all debts where not otherwise provided by law, and shall be alegal tender for all debts where not otherwise provided by law, and shall be alegal tender for all debts where not otherwise expressly stipulated by contract. These notes shall be paid for an equal amount of United States bonds, unless coin is demanded, in which case at least one-half the coin paid shall be silver coin; and to the extent of the demand for coin, in excess of the supply in the Treasury, these notes shall be used in the purchase of silver bullion for coinage to meet that demand.

Sec. 4. That on and after May 1, 1881, the Treasurer of the United States shall neither have prepared nor issue any national-bank notes to any bank, nore shall he pay out any that shall be received, nor shall any national bank issue or pay out any national-bank notes on any pretext, but the Treasurer of the United States shall return to the respective banks of issue for redemption all such notes received by him.

shall return to the respective banks of issue for redemption at such acceptable by him.

SEC. 5. That as a further means of raising the necessary funds for the payment of all outstanding Government bonds it is hereby enacted that from and atter May 1, 1880, there shall be imposed upon all net incomes exceeding $1,500 er annum of each and every citizen of the United States taxes as follows, to wit: A tax of 3 per cent. upon all excess over $1,500, an additional tax of 2 per cent. upon all excess over $3,000; these taxes to be collected under the provisions of "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862, as modified and inforce after the act of March 2, 1867, so far as they may be applicable, with such provisions and penalties as therein prescribed.

SEC. 6. That in case there should not be sufficient accumulations in the Treasury to fully meet all of the said bonds of the United States, only so many of them shall be called in as can be paid under the provisions of this act, but as fast as possible the Secretary of the Treasury shall call in, redeem, and cancel them.

The substitute proposed by Mr. Buckner is as follows:

The substitute proposed by Mr. BUCKNER is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

'That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt,' and the acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue Treasury notes of the United States, in the amount of not more than $600,000,000, in denominations of not less than $10, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum, of which said notes not more than sixty millions shall mature each year from the date of their issue; and said notes shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States maturing during the year 1881, or the Secretary may exchange the Treasury notes for the said bonds, on such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the United States.

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make suitable regulations for disposing of said Treasury notes to the best advantage to the Government, and all expenses attending the same shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent. of the notes so disposed of or exchanged.

"Sec. 3. That the sum of $100,000,000 of the coin in the Treasury of the United States be set apart as a fund for the redemption of the notes known as legal-tender notes; and any surplus of coin over and above said sum, and belonging to the United States, remaining in the Treasury shall be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase or redemption on account of the sinking fund of any of the said 6 per cent. bonds maturing in the year 1881."

The amendment proposed by Mr. McMillin is as follows:

The amendment proposed by Mr. McMillin is as follows:

Add to section 1:

"And provided further, That the bonds issued under this act shall be subject to taxation as other property."

The substitute proposed by Mr. Bland is as follows:

Strike out all after enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That of the coin now in the Treasury the sum of $100,000.000 is hereby appropriated for the payment of the interest-bearing debt of the United States due in the years 1880 and 1881: And it is further provided. That the sum of $100,000,000 of revenues not otherwise appropriated be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid: It is further provided. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined the maximum amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars in the manner now authorized by law, and shall pay out such dollars in the redemption of the public debt hereinbefore mentioned monthly, and the particular bonds to be redeemed from time to time in pursuance to this act shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

"Sec. 2. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as the same may authorize the issuing of bonds for the purpose of refunding or redeeming the interest-bearing debt of the United States, be, and they are hereby, repealed."

The amendment proposed by Mr. HATCH is as follows:

Amend by adding at the close of section 5 the following:

"And any bank duly chartered or incorporated and doing business under the laws of any State shall, on transfer and delivery to the Treasurer of the United States of registered 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in the same manner, proportion, and amount as is authorized and prescribed by law for national-bank associations, which circulating notes shall be subject to the same regulations and taxation as is or may be prescribed by law for the issue and taxation of circulating notes furnished to national-bank associations, and any law or part thereof in conflict with this provision is hereby repealed."

The amendment proposed by Mr. Chittenden is as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"And all acts and parts of acts imposing a tax upon the capital and deposits of savings-banks, national banks, State banks, and private bankers are hereby repealed, and the tax upon the circulating notes of the national banks issued upon the bonds authorized by this act shall not exceed one-half of 1 per cent. per annum: And provided further. That the total amount of silver dollars of the weight of 412; grains troy, authorized under the act of February 28, 1878, an act to authorize the coinage of the old standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character, shall not exceed $100,000,000."

The substitute proposed by Mr. WARNER is as follows:

The substitute proposed by Mr. WARNER is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the public, in exchange for lawful money of the United States, at not less than par, Treasury certificates or bonds, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, not exceeding three hundred and fifty million of dollars in amount, in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, bearing interest at 3.65 per cent. per annum, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after one year, taken by lot, and payable in six years; also bonds at not less than par, not exceeding two hundred and fifty millions of dollars in amount, registered or coupon, and in such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, bearing interest at 3½ per cent. per annum, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after five years, taken by lot, and payable in the years. Said certificates and bonds shall be payable in coin of the United States of the present standard value, and said bonds bearing 3½ per cent. interest shall alone be received, after the passage of this act, from national banks as security for their circulation, and the certificates or bonds herein provided for may be exchanged at par for either class of bonds becoming payable in 1881.

Sec. 2. That the money received for certificates or bonds sold under this act, together with all the coin that may at any time be in the Treasury belonging to the United States and held for redemption purposes, in excess of 25 per cent. of outstanding legal-tender notes, shall be applied weekly to the purchase, until they become payable, and then to the redemption, first, of bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest and then to the bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, until all of both classes of bonds are redeemed, and then to the redemption, first, of bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest and then to the bonds bearing the highest rate of interest, and then to the remaining bonds issued under this act, until the same are all paid; and wh

The substitute proposed by Mr. PHILIPS is as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the public debt.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, &c., That in lieu of and for the purpose of redeeming the United States bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and all acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue Treasury notes of the United States in the amount of not more than five hundred million dollars, in denominations of not less than ten dollars, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after the 1st day of July, 1882: Provided, That not more than sixty millions of said notes shall so mature in each year from the date of their issue; and said notes shall be disposed of by the said Secretary at not less than par, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States maturing during the year 1881.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange at not less than par any of the notes aforesaid for any of the said bonds so maturing in the year 1881. And on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of the contract of exchange to the time of their maturity and the interest for a like period on the notes so exchanged.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue the said notes either with coupons or registered, and in such appropriate form as he may prescribe, and to make suitable regulations for disposing of said Treasury notes to the best advantage to the Government, the expenses attending such disposition not to exceed one-fourth of 1 per cent. of the notes so disposed of or exchange in the year 1881 the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to appropriate and apply the sum of $100,000.000—one-half in gold and one-half in silver—of the coin in the Treasury of the United States, together with so much of the surplus revenues on hand as may be necessary therefor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 965) to authorize the appointment of D. T. Kirby to the rank of captain.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COOK. I insist upon my motion, that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the gentleman from Georgia to allow the introduction of some executive documents pending the motion to adjourn, and also some enrolled bills.

Mr. COOK. I yield for that purpose.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the folthe committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company through the United States cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name; and A bill (H. R. No. 6256) for the relief of certain settlers on restored railroad lands.

CLOTHING FOR THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting special estimate for clothing for the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. S. H. W. CLAYTON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petition of S. H. W. Clayton; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PONTON TRAIN AT WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for ponton train at West Point; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSENGERS IN OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF WAR.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to messengers in the office of the Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DES MOINES RAPIDS CANAL.

The SPEAKER also; by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the maintenance of Des Moines Rapids Canal; which was referred to the Committee on

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, to have that letter printed, and also that letters in reference to surveys presented on yesterday be printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. WARNER. What are they?

The SPEAKER. They are surveys which are requested to be printed for the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the printing was ordered as requested.

YERBA BUENA ISLAND.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. Davis] requests that a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the Yerba Buena Island, which was presented to the House on the 20th of December, be printed also.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BARRACKS AT HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relating to barracks and quarters at Hot Springs, Arkansas, recommending an appropriation therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR PROPOSALS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BUOYS ON THE OHIO RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to buoys on the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY RESERVATION AT FORT MISSOULA

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the status of land military reservation at Fort Missoula; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CAPTAIN J. SCOTT PAYNE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, against the promotion of Captain J. Scott Payne; which was referred to the Committee on Military

ABUSE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the reply of the Postmaster-General to House resolution of December 14, 1880, in regard to abuse of the franking privilege.
Mr. BROWNE. That is the report which I asked to have read.
Mr. COOK. I insist upon the motion to adjourn.
Mr. BROWNE. You will have to yield to have it read some time, and you may as well have it read now, as you have probably as much leisure now as at any other time.

Mr. COOK. That has all been printed, and it is not necessary now to take time in reading it.

Mr. BROWNE. No, sir; the gentleman is mistaken; it has not been printed; the document has never been opened at all.

Mr. COOK. I insist upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The effect of that motion will be to cut off the reading.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 39.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COOK. I demand tellers.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would ask if this cannot be printed in the RECORD, and obviate this difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement that these executive documents come to the Speaker's desk, and unless unanimous consent is given for their presentation to the House they must be taken up when the business on the Speaker's table is reached. Of course it has been the practice heretofore to allow all such papers to be read by unanimous consent for their appropriate reference.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, if the House refuses to adjourn, objection will defeat the reading of this?

Mr. BROWNE. If there be any gentleman who objects to the reading.—

Mr. MILLS. The only objection we have on this side is the time consumed; let it be read to morrow morning.
Mr. BROWNE. I am willing that a reading shall be had to-morrow morning

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from Illinois has asked that some gentleman make objection to its reading, I will object to its being read at this time. I have no objection whatever to its being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BROWNE. I have no special desire to insist upon its being read now, but simply that some time shall be fixed for its reading, or that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WARNER. We might as well have it read to-morrow morning.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope it will be printed in the Record if it is not

Mr. Brongread to-night.
Mr. WHITE. Let it be read.
Mr. WHITE. What is the document?
This is the reply of 1880. The SPEAKER. This is the reply of the Postmaster-General to House resolution of December 14, 1880, in regard to alleged abuses in the franking privilege.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought unanimous consent had been given to its being printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not take advantage of any gentleman in that manner. If the gentleman from Illinois desired to make an objection the Chair will hear it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not like to agree to printing anything in the RECORD of which I have no knowledge, and this matter has not been read for the information of the House. read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to printing in the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. As I understand it the agreement is not being carried out. If it is not to be printed in the RECORD then the report should be read now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will recognize the fact that the Chair had no option except to recognize the objection made.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the gentleman's proposition is that it shall now be read, as there is objection to its being printed in

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the communication be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. That is where it would naturally go.
Mr. BROWNE. After it has been read it may be so referred.
Mr. WARNER. Let it be referred to the committee and if they wish it printed they can ask an order from the House for its printing.

Mr. BROWNE. When it is reached in regular order on the Speaker's table it will be read.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the appointment of tellers on the motion to adjourn, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BROWNE The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 45, noes 35.

So the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn

To Mr. Armfield, until Monday next, on account of illness; and To Mr. Hubbell, indefinitely, on account of illness; and To Mr. BROWNE. Will the Chair allow me to make an inquiry? Is the communication now on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 7, 1881.

WADE HAMPTON, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, appeared in his seat to-day.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Adjutant-General of the Army, stating that the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives in the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, for the recruiting service, is insufficient to meet the demands of the service; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates from the Chief of Engineers of appropriations necessary to meet the expenses of operating and care of the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, calling attention to a former letter from him of April 23, 1880, transmitting a report relative to public lands, forts, arsenals, &c., and recommending the creation of a division in his office to be known as the land title division; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of James W. Moore and 56 others, citizens of South Carolina, and the petition of John T. Sloan and 201 others, citizens of South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of Broad River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of I. N. Burritt, praying for the purchase of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, by the United States Government, for the use of a proposed general hospital; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

tion of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of the George T. Sweat Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, of Franklin Falls, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KERNAN. I present the petition of the Elwin D. Farmer Post,
No. 119, Grand Army of the Republic, of Oneonta, New York, in which, among other things, they state:

The proposition contained in the amendment to Senate bill No. 496, reported by the Committee on Pensions in the United States Senate, to appoint a commission to consist of one properly qualified surgeon and one attorney in each congressional district properly empowered to administer oaths and examine claimants and witnesses in pension cases, for that purpose frequently visiting county seats and other principal places in the district, is, in our opinion, calculated to greatly facilitate not only an early but a just settlement of claims and at the same time protect the Government from the payment of fraudulent pensions.

As the bill has been reported I move that the petition lie on the

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. JONAS. I present the memorial of W. J. Moore, of New Orleans, and I ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be reported at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The me The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, December 13, 1880.

To the honorable the President and Senators of the United States Senate, Washington, District of Columbia:

District of Columbia:

Gentlemen: Your petitioner respectfully represents to your honorable body that he is a citizen of the State of Louisiana and the United States, and that he was returned by the returning board of canvassers as a duly elected member of the house of representatives of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana in the year of 1876, and as such member he was duly qualified and assumed the office, and as such Legislature he, with the other members thereof, assisted to perform and did perform the duties of the joint session of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana that elected and returned the present sitting member, the Hon. W. P. Kellogo, as United States Senator from the State aforesaid, and that under said election the said Senator Kellogo was duly qualified and is now performing the functions of the said public trust, although the said Senator Kellogo did secure his election as a United States Senator by bribery of the members of the Legislature of the State aforesaid and other fraudulent means, as is hereinafter presented by your said petitioner.

aforesaid and other fraudulent means, as is hereinafter presented by your said petitioner.

Your petitioner further represents the following facts in connection with the election of the said Senator KELLOGG:

First. The republican members of the lower house of representatives of the State of Louisiana elected in 1876, or a majority of them, were controlled by two combinations, one of which consisted of twelve and the other of about forty-five members, the latter number embracing the first. For the purpose of securing the election of the said Senator KELLOGG to the United States Senate the members of the combination of twelve each received and were paid by the said Senator KELLOGG the sum of $500, and those constituting the large combination not included in the twelve each received and were paid the sums of $200 and $250 respectively, and all the said money so paid by the said Senator KELLOGG was lawful money of the United States of America, and among the number so receiving the said bribe from Senator KELLOGG of $500 was your petitioner, who did vote in the joint convention aforesaid for Hon. W. P. KELLOGG, the sitting member in your honorable body, as one of the United States Senators from the State of Louisiana.

Second. Your petitioner further respectfully represents that himself and two other members constituted the delegation of the seventh representative district of the parish of Orleans in the said lower house of the Legislature of Louisiana, and the delegation aforesaid were elected at the general election in the year 1876, and returned as republican members thereof by a process of repeating, by the casting of two hundred and seventeen fraudulent ballots for the members of the Legislature for the district aforesaid; and if the delegation aforesaid and not been returned to the said Legislature that elected the said Senator KELLOGG to the United States Senate aforesaid, the said joint convention as then constituted would have been left without a qualified and constitutional quorum requisite to elect to th

Your petitioner would further represent that when he was summoned and testified before the sub-committee of which Senator Hill was chairman, in New Orleans, Louisiana, recently, he testified to the truth of the matters on which he was examined, but he was not examined on the question of the bribery presented herein. He therefore asks to be examined on the question of the bribery presented herein. He therefore asks to be examined now on the subject-matter of this petition, together with such other witnesses which he will furnish for examination on the subject-matter of the charges presented herein.

And your petitioner will ever pray, &c.

W. J. MOORE.

Mr. JONAS. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I observe the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Kellogg] is not in his seat, and I would suggest to the other Senator from Louisiana whether he had not better wait until his colleague is present before the reference is made. He may desire to make a suggestion in regard to it.

gestion in regard to it.

Mr. JONAS. Whether the Senator is present or absent will not make any difference. The motion I make is simply to refer the memorial to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where he will have ample chance to be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Who is the memorialist? I did not hear the name

The VICE-PRESIDENT. W. J. Moore.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. W. J. Moore was examined before the sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which sat in New Orleans in November and December, 1879. He was examined at length in regard to the election in the seventh ward of the city of New Orleans. I observe that he makes some statements in the memorial in reference to that election. He declared most emphatically at the time he was examined by the sub-committee that he knew of no fraud having been committed at that ward in the elec-knew of no fraud having been committed at that ward in the election to which he now refers. I do not remember whether he was examined in reference to the alleged bribery of members of the Legislature. I observe that he states in the memorial that he was not examined in regard to that; but I think the memorial had better not be referred to the committee until we have an opportunity of examining the evidence which he gave before the sub-committee.

Mr. JONAS. The memorialist is a citizen of my State, and he was a member of the body which professed to elect KELLOGG to a seat on this floor. He has presented a petition asking that he may be examined as a witness in support of the allegation he makes. He states that he is prepared to show, not by his own evidence, but by the evidence of other parties, the fact, which he states he was not aware of at the time he was examined in New Orleans, that he was never duly elected, that neither he nor his colleague was entitled to sit for the seventh ward of New Orleans, and that unless he and his colleague were in the Legislature which elected Mr. KELLOGG it would have been without a quorum. He also offers to testify and furnish evidence that without a quorum. He also offers to testify and furnish evidence that he himself and other members of the Legislature were bribed and paid either by Mr. Kellog or by his agents to vote for him in the election for Senator held in that body. He states that he was not examined on this subject at all by the sub-committee before which he was brought in New Orleans. I think the matter is presented in a form to go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that they may decide whether or not the avidence of Moore shall be taken and may decide whether or not the evidence of Moore shall be taken, and may decide whether or not the evidence of Moore shall be taken, and whether or not it is valuable to the decision of this case.

I only ask that the memorial be referred. Of course Senator Kellogg can be heard before that committee, and the committee is best qualified to decide what evidence may be necessary.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Whatever may be the propriety of referring this memorial of a man who states that as a member of the Legislature he was bribed, in the absence of the colleague of the Senator from Louisiana it would be proper that that motion should remain undisposed of until the colleague of the Senator can be present. He may desire to make some remarks upon the memorial. He may desire to submit to the Senate views which would induce the Senate to refuse to refer to the Senate views which would induce the Senate to refuse to refer such a memorial to one of its committees. I do not say that he will take that course; I do not say that such evidence can be given to the Senate; but affecting the seat of the Senator's colleague, I submit to the Senator whether courtesy does not require that he should permit this matter to remain over until his colleague can be present.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I desire to say that I was not in when the memorial was read. I understand that it is a memorial from W. J.

Mr. McMILLAN. Some man who says he was a member of the Leg-

Mr. HILLAN. Some man who says he was a member of the Leg-islature when Mr. Kellogg was elected, and that he was bribed. Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I remember that witness very well in New Orleans. He was a witness in behalf of the sitting member. He made one very distinct impression on my mind, and that was that at that time he was ready to testify to anything in the world in behalf that time he was ready to testify to anything in the world in behalf of the sitting member.

Mr. LOGAN. I presume he has changed his opinion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know anything about him now, but I say that I would hesitate before I should delay the case by reopening it for an investigation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia whether, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Minnesota that it would be fair to the other Senator from Louisiana, he will permit the memorial to lie on the table for a moment.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I was going to add that whatever might be my opinion as to reopening the case, (the propriety of which I may have some doubt of, and the testimony to justify it would have to be very strong,) I do think that it would be proper to let the memorial lie on the table for the present. That is my judgment, because it is due to the absent member, I think. I think

I wish to say one more thing; that I hope in no event it will be referred to the committee without giving that committee discretion to reopen the case or not after the memorial gets before it. I hope there will be no instruction from the Senate, but that it will let the there will be no instruction from the Senate, but that it will let the committee determine the question for themselves.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Senator Kellogg is here now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I see the sitting member is in his seat now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has just come in.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Louisiana whose seat is affected by the memorial is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Ide not know that it is a very proper thing to ob-

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know that it is a very proper thing to object to a memorial or its reference; but I should like to know at what time, if the time shall ever arrive, this case will be concluded. It has been referred and re-referred to the committee time and again. It does strike me, without passing any improper remarks on this memorial, that it is somewhat strange that for the purpose of reopening a case that has been before a committee time and again it is proposed to refer the memorial of a person, I will not say gentleman, declaring before the world that he is a bribed villain and scoundrel, and therebefore the world that he is a bribed villain and scoundrel, and therefore wants to be investigated. That is what the memorial declares, not in that language, but he says, "I received so much money to commit a penitentiary offense; I am a scoundrel; I am a villain; I ought to be in the penitentiary, and I want the Senate of the United States to examine me and see if I ought not to be there." That is the memorial. On the presentation of a paper of that character, coming from that kind of a man, I myself would ask at least that the Senator against whom it is presented might be heard if he desired to be, and that not only he might be heard but that the Senate at least in the position that this man does.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber, having been sent for in some haste. If I am informed correctly there is a memorial pending. I understand that it is signed by one Moore. There is such a man. I am informed that he was discharged from the employment of the Government recently for stealing or for an and that not only he might be heard, but that the Senate at least would consider the propriety of a paper of that character being referred to any committee. I shall not say what I would believe of a man, either under oath or without oath, who would present himself the employment of the Government recently for stealing or for an attempt to embezzle, or perhaps he was permitted to resign; the precise nature of the charge I do not know. Several affidavits I am told were filed against him by reputable citizens, and I believe that the charge was considered amply sustained.

This Moore I have heard recently threatened to come to Washington and procure to be laid before the Senate some memorial. The collector of the port at New Orleans some time since informed me that he had received information that Moore had threatened that ruless he was appointed to some good resition under the Government. unless he was appointed to some good position under the Government he would send to Senator SAULSBURY or some other member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections some communication to be laid before the Senate reflecting upon me. Later, I am informed, he sent a communication to the appraiser of the port demanding $1,600.

If, as I am informed by the Senator from Wisconsin, Moore asserts that he ever received a cent from me or from any one so far as I know touching my election as a Senator, he lies. If he swore to it he perjured himself; and I will undertake to impeach him by a hundred witnesses. Moreover, I will undertake to show that his recent acts prove him a blackmailer.

This Moore was a witness before the sub-committee at New Orleans.

touching the election in the Seventh ward. It was attempted to show that certain names were stricken from the registration list and certain qualified voters denied the right to vote. He was brought upon the stand to show that such was not the case, against my judgment, but some of our friends desired that he be sworn. He swore ment, but some or our friends desired that he be sworn. He swore positively and unqualifiedly, as the Senator from Wisconsin and other members of the committee must recollect, that there was no fraud whatever regarding the registration or the election in the Seventh ward. So unqualifiedly and positively did he swear touch-

Seventh ward. So unqualifiedly and positively did he swear touching that point in controversy that the opposite side attempted to, and thought they did successfully, impeach him. His testimony will be found covering fifteen or twenty pages, I think.

If I am informed correctly regarding the purport of the memorial he proposes to swear just different to what he did before the committee. I will show that during the past few months he has been offering to sell his testimony, and has stipulated and named the amount that he demanded, or the office, or else he would come here and procure something of scandal, if nothing else, to be laid before the Senate and the country regarding some improper pactices he the Senate and the country regarding some improper practices he asserts to be within his knowledge in connection with my election to the Senate.

Now, I say in conclusion, that I have no objection to having this man's statement investigated, and if it is to be investigated I should like to have thirty or forty witnesses, or fifteen or twenty, just as the committee or the Senate shall determine, brought from New Orleans, and if one reputable man can be found to corroborate him, I say I and if one reputable man can be found to corroborate him, I say I shall be utterly amazed; and if I cannot impeach him by a hundred reputable citizens I shall be, if possible, still more astonished.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I wish to say, as I said awhile ago, that it would take a very strong case to induce me to reopen this issue and to take anybody's testimony in it. I hope the members of the Senate will now, since the question has been raised, look into the testimony of this man Moore at New Orleans. It is very peculiar; there is no doubt about that; and much that the sitting member has said has a great deal of force in it. If I understand the sitting member he says great deal of force in it. If I understand the sitting member, he says now that this offer to make a disclosure and confession of bribery by this man arose because he had been turned out of the custom-house, or something to that effect; I may not have heard him distinctly. I will state my recollection that when this man was before us he was regarded, I thought, as one of the most respectable witnesses produced by the sitting member. It was charged, however, as the examination shows, that this man was turned out of the custom-house, or reported to have been turned out of the custom-house, once before; that he then offered to make these disclosures, or was threatening to make them, and that when threatening and making appointments with another witness to see what he would testify to that would show that the sitting member was not entitled to his seat, he was re-given a place in the custom-house. After he was given a place in the custom-house he then became a most exceedingly willing witness for the sitting member. If he did not testify specifically he testified in very general strong terms, as the sitting member has stated, that his side was all right, that his election was all fair, or something to that effect.

Now it seems he has been turned out of the custom-house, and he is now willing to testify that it was not all fair, but all foul.

That is the finest illustration I have seen of the character of those witnesses who were members of that Legislature. I am willing to concede that I have never yet seen one man connected with that concern whom I would believe in a court of justice on eath upon his character. If there was one man who looked respectable out of the character. If there was one man who looked respectable out of the whole pack before the committee, it was this man Moore.

The sitting member says that he can produce testimony in New Orleans to prove that this man was not a man to be believed under oath. Really, if I recollect aright, the sitting member insisted that he was entitled to belief under oath. I think if you will examine the testimony, you will find that this man's character was very strongly defended by the sitting member, and he maintained that he was entitled to credit under oath. Now this man has come in with this revelation which he threatened to make once before, and which the memorialist charged he did not make because he was given a place in morialist charged he did not make because he was given a place in the custom-house not to make it, and the sitting member says he can show by a thousand witnesses, if I understand him, that he is not en-snow by a thousand witnesses, if I understand him, that he is not entitled to credit under oath. He brought up so many of his men down there before to prove that he was entitled to credit under oath that I had to shut down the brakes, as it would take up too much time, and now he can prove by a thousand witnesses that he was not entitled to credit under oath. Judge Spofford would have been delighted to have had those thousand witnesses produced in New Orleans, for there this man was one of the main witnesses of the sitting member. I think there is nothing in this matter except that it does show to think there is nothing in this matter except that it does show to the Senate and the country very much the character of the whole case. My friend, the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan,] says he would hesitate to believe any man who would come in and confess that he was bribed as a member of a Legislature to vote for a Senator. If the distinguished Senator from Illinois will look into the testimony taken before the committee he will find there that members of the Packard legislature came forward and deliberately swore, and some of them wrote their own affidavits, confessing that they were bribed, and subsequently came before this committee, after having been given places in the custom-house, and swore that they were not bribed.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I know something about that evidence, because I happened to be on the committee. ator certainly will not state a desire that the Senate shall understand him to mean that there is any such testimony there that he himself would recognize as testimony without any cloud on it. He knows very well that the witnesses testified before some notary public down there, and came before the committee and swore that the affidavits were not read over to them and they did not know what was in them, some of them, and they have all contradicted the statements. That has nothing to do with my statement. I do say that a man who would come before the Senate of the United States and ask to publish to the world his crime, not only as a bribe-taker but a perjurer, is unworthy of belief before any community in the world.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not join issue with the Senator from Illinois on that. The fact has come to light that such was the condition of the Packard legislature that sent the sitting member here, for man after man of that body has gone either before a notary public or before this committee and confessed the bribery. The Senator says that they came before this committee and said that they did not know what was in the affidavits. Some of them did come before the committee and say that they did not know what was in the affidavits; and yet the men wholly disinterested who took the affidavits came and yet the men wholy disinterested who cold the anidavits can't before the committee and swore that the affidavits were distinctly and correctly read over to them before they signed them, and that they distinctly signed them after they were read over, knowing what was in them, and that they were read over to them by disinterested parties. In addition to that, one or two of the witnesses it was proved wrote out their own affidavits, and when confronted with the facts that they had sworn one thing before a notary public and testifield to a different thing before the committee they went so far as to say they considered it right to lie for their party. They said even under oath that they committed perjury in the interest of their party, and they thought it right to do so.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me now, I will say that I did not expect that this memorial would open up the whole case for argument. I did not dream of such a thing. I only supposed the remarks would be confined to the memorialist or the memorial; but in answer to what the Senator says now in reference to those witnesses, inasmuch as he has opened that question—

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I did not open it. You opened it.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not, I beg the Senator's pardon. I spoke in reference to this man and not in reference to the other witnesses. The Senator is now speaking of the witnesses who testified before the committee other than this one. I made no reference to the others except in response to the remark the Senator made. I will now say to the Senator that on the same theory that I announced in reference to this man, the witnesses that he mentions now who made affidavits in one direction before a notary public in New Orleans and swore exactly the reverse before the committee, and made the statements that he attributes to them, I would not believe them. I say that a man who will go before an officer and make affidavits in one direction knowingly, unless he is deceived, and then go immediately and contradict it, and say that he made that affidavit but it is not true, is unworthy of belief.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I said before that I made no issue with the Senator from Illinois on that point; none whatever. I am glad to hear-him take that position now. It is the first time I have heard any member of the committee take it in this investigation on that side of the house. I am glad he has taken it. That has been my position-all the while, that none of these witnesses of the character alluded to were entitled to the slightest credit on their character, and the facts sworn to were not to be believed merely on their swearing to them, and could only be believed from corroborating testimony. I believe some of the witnesses testified to the truth in this case, and I am compelled to believe it, not because they testified to it, but because facts and circumstances clearly proved that they were telling the truth.

That is all.

Now, I believe and did believe when this witness Moore was before the sub-committee in New Orleans that he was there swearing falsely. I did believe then and believe now that he was so swearing because he was rewarded to swear so by an office in the custom-house. I be-lieve what he swears now is the truth, or what he offers to swear now is the truth, not because he says it, but because I can take the record of the evidence and show by other circumstances and facts that what he says must be true in the nature of things. That is the difference. I say to the gentleman frankly I understand that quite a cabal whowere introduced in behalf of the sitting member in New Orleans and whose character the sitting member then defended, and they were supporting each other as entitled to credit on oath, are now ready to come porting each other as entitled to credit on oath, are now ready to come up and swear differently. I would not believe them; I agree with the Senator from Illinois on that. I say it would take a very strong case to induce me to open this investigation. I would concur in much that the Senator has said on that subject.

But, sir, under the circumstances, as the sitting member has, I suppose, not seen this memorial, and I think he ought to see it and has a right to see it he fore action is taken by the Senator I suggest to the pose, not seen this memorial, and I think he ought to see it and has a right to see it before action is taken by the Senate, I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Jonas] that he let it go over a day to allow the sitting member from Louisiana to have a full opportunity to examine it before any disposition is made of it. I think that is right.

Mr. KELLOGG. I now have the memorial before me, and have read it hurriedly. I do not ask the Senate to delay any action they may choose to take regarding their memorial. I do desire, however, to make a simple statement touching a matter referred to by the Senator from Georgia.

The Senator from Georgia said in the hearing of the Senate-Ithink I quote him in substance—that witness after witness, members of the Legislature, came before the committee and swore that they had received bribes for voting for me. I assert here in the face of the Senator that not one member swore to that.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from Georgia said no such thing. The Senator from Georgia said—

Mr. KELLOGG. Wait a moment.

Mr. HOAP, Leal the Senator from Georgia to order.

Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. HOAR. I call the Senator from Georgia to order.
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Very well.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from Georgia said in substance, as I understood him, that member after member came before the committee and either swore or had before made affidavits that they had received bribes for voting for me. Now I assert that no member of the Legislature or witness swore before the committee anywhere that he had so received a bribe; not one. That has been asserted in the report, and it has been asserted heretofore in speeches, but it is not

There were four or five members or perhaps six in all who made There were four or five members or perhaps six in all who made affildavits, and in the case of one we proved that it was a forgery, and that the person purporting to have signed it never saw it, and the justice admitted on oath that a strange man personated a member, and falsely made an affidavit. In every other instance we proved that the affidavits were paid for, or that the men signing them did not really know their contents. They themselves swore to this and in some cases other corroborating witnesses swore that those making the affidavits did not know what the affidavits contained; and I believe excepting one or two or perhaps two or three instances there was no excepting one or two or perhaps two or three instances there was no direct allegation even of their having received money for voting for me, moreover in every instance the person who purported to make the affidavit or who made it came before the committee and swore positively that he never did receive a cent for voting for me. And even the parties mentioned in the affidavit as knowing the fact of the payment of money or promise of office came before the committee and swore positively and unqualifiedly that it was untrue; and every man that testified to corroborate the allegation of bribery—in almost every case hearsay—we impeached chiefly by democratic witnesses. Some of their most material witnesses we impeached by such men as John Fitzpatrick, the democratic criminal sheriff of the parish of Orleans, now by recent election the administrator of public improvements for the city. We impeached by numbers of democratic citizens the most material witnesses they had, and in fact we chiefly relied upon democratic evidence to not only contradict but impeach their testimony. So much for that.

Mr. President, I do not propose to let assertions go unchallenged, especially when they come here under guise of a memorial in order to load this record with iterations and reiterations affecting me, which I assert here are absolutely false.

I am not surprised that the Senator from Georgia makes these statements. Before this investigation commenced, as I had occasion once before to state, and I believe it has never been contradicted, he stated that he always had intended to put me out of this seat. I think I may say, and I do not think the Senator will deny it, that before more than two-thirds of the testimony was taken he gave out substantially the points of the report he subsequently made, and they stantially the points of the report he subsequently made, and they were published in the papers and asserted in substance that he intended to press this matter against me.

Now, a word more. Moore was intended originally as the witness of the opposite party. Moore swore himself that they tried to use him against me. He was at first called by the opposition, and they asked that he be sworn upon his roir dire. It was finally agreed that he should be sworn, if at all, in the usual way. Some of our friends insisted that Moore should be put upon the stand by us, because the fact in controversy upon which he was to testify was a matter of record and was of such a nature that he could not avoid testifying fact in controversy upon which he was to testify was a matter of record and was of such a nature that he could not avoid testifying to the truth. We called him in regard to the registration lists and in regard to the allegation that he struck certain names from the registration and prevented certain citizens from exercising the right of suffrage in the Seventh ward. Upon that point he swore, in conformity with the record, that he did not do it. We had abundance of evidence to show that what he swore to was true. They cross-examined him and then attempted to impeach him. We did not care particularly about that, because his testimony was not so very material. We could have found it in other directions. We could have proved it by the testimony of the supervisor of the Seventh ward or proved it by the testimony of the supervisor of the Seventh ward or any of the three commissioners, there being three at each poll in the ward. We called Moore himself to prove that there were no fraudu-

That is the whole story. When he came on the stand he went on to testify, I believe, that he had been approached by the opposite party; they had endeavored to persuade him to testify for them. He went on to state, as I recollect, that the collector of internal revenue had him in his employ a number of months and had suspended him. At that time I think a number of the collector's employes were being suspended for want of appropriations. Moore being out, he had, it was asserted, said to one Williams that there were improper practices in the Seventh ward, and Williams had gone to the attorney of Spotford and told what Moore said, and therefore Moore was summoned, and when they refused to examine him we examined him, and he contradicted the statements made by Williams.

This is the whole story as to Moore. I do not think he was examined on any other point; but I see that he does assert now not only that there were improper practices in the Seventh ward, but he asserts also that he was bribed. Well, it is passing strange when as they assume, and as they asserted then and now, he was disgruntled and dissatisfied because he was turned out of the custom-house, that he did not tell some of those witnesses like Williams who testified as to what Moore had told them, something about bribery, why when he was unloading his bosom, as they asserted, and was telling everything he knew, that he did not drop one word about bribery. But no, the testimony was confined to the improper practice in the matter of registration in the Seventh ward; but now, after looking over the record and seeing that he did not cover that point, he comes up here and says unless he gets an office he proposes to tell what he knows about brib-Who brought this man here, and for what purpose?

ery. Who brought this man here, and for what purpose?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HILL of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will allow me simply to say a word.

The Chair hears no

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there consent? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. When the sitting member from Louisiana commenced quoting what he said was the language used by myself I was thoughtless enough to suppose the Senator had misunderstood me, and so thinking I was thoughtless enough to attempt to correct him, for both of which pieces of thoughtlessenss I beg pardon of the Senate and of myself. It was thoughtless in me to notice the sitting member or anything he said or could say.

I simply intended to say, in reference to the statement of the Senator from Illinois, that he did not believe this man who has confessed his bribery, that there were various witnesses in behalf of the sitting member who came before the committee and testified that they did not receive bribes who had previously sworn that they had received bribes; that some of them denied that the contents of the affidavits in which they confessed the bribery were known to them; and it was proven that they were read over to them before they signed, that others confessed that they did know what was in the affidavits and had written them themselves confessing their bribery, and when confronted with the fact that they had sworn one thing in their own chosen, written affidavits and testified to another thing before the committee, their explanation was that they thought it was right to commit perjury in the interest of their party. That was my statement, and I repeat it, and the records will abundantly show it. Of course I have no discussion with the Senator from Louisiana.

Now, this memorial of this man I trust will have one good effect.

It will bring vividly to the attention of this Senate and the country the great fact which explains more than any other one fact the whole bearing of this case, and that is that the custom-house at New Orleans has been used from beginning to end to suppress the truth in this case. In the language of one of the sitting member's own witnesses, members have had to be appointed to that custom-house to prevent them from squealing on Kelloge.

Mr. KELLOGG. He has made an affidavit that he did not say any spet thing.

Mr. KELLOGG. He has made an amdavit that he did not say any such thing.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is precisely what the testimony shows, as the record will prove. Having said that I have nothing more to say. Unless the sitting member is willing that this memorial be disposed of now, I am still willing that it may lie over until to-morrow. The VICE-PRESIDENT. It passed from the consideration of the Senate before the Senator from Louisiana rose.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division-ayes 23,

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Lucretia P. Brewer, praying for a pension, to report it adversely and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

This petition was presented by the junior Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Baldwin,] who is not present. I think it is a matter he takes some interest in, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Petitions do not go on the Calendar. The report will lie on the table.

ROSALIE LOUIS.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 4887) granting a pension to Rosalie Louis was indefinitely postponed on the adverse report of the Committee on Pensions. Under the rule of the committee the case was presented to the Pension Office and rejected. There is new testimony in the case, and as there was a misunderstanding about the report when made, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote for the purpose of sending the papers back to the commit-

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1985) to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FERRY. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Commerce to the importance of this bill, and especially to section 8, which provides for a pension for those who have lost life or received wounds while acting in the life-saving service of the Government. I notice the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is not present, but there are other members of the committee present, and I hope early attention will be given to this bill, and that it will and I hope early attention will be given to this bill, and that it will be reported to the Senate at an early day for action.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURNSIDE (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1986) authorizing the retirement of Brevet Major-General William W. Averell, United States Army, with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1987) for the relief of John H. Schabinger, guardian of Susan McKnatt and Martha McKnatt, minor daughters of James McKnatt, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. EATON. If there is no further business of the morning hour I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps it would be as well that I should make a brief statement to the Senate before the reading of the bill. The estimates for the coming year were $1,257,035; the appropriations for 1881 were $1,180,335. The amount appropriated by the House, in this bill, is $1,190,435, to which the Senate Committee on Appropriations have added $1,000, so that the amount as reported to the Senate is, $1,191,435. The bill as reported is less than the estimates $65,600, but exceeds the appropriations of 1881 by $11,110.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The appropriations for the current year you

Mr. EATON. The appropriations for the current year.
Mr. EDMUNDS. But for 1880 you said 1881.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to understand: by "1881" you mean the year ending the 30th of next June?
Mr. EATON. I do. This bill exceeds that appropriation $11,110.
I will give now the increases in the bill over the act for 1881:

Clerk to legation in Central America (new)	$1,000	00
Consul at Halifax made consul-general	3,000	00

Perhaps I might as well speak of the changes that have been made in the bill at this time. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have changed the consulate at Belfast from class 4 to class 3, and the of the bill $1,000.

The changes made by this bill and our amendments in consulates from the act for 1881 are as follows:

1. Mozambique, re-established at salary of $1,000.

2. Belfast, increased from class 4 to class 3; Dundee, increased from class 5 to class 4; Apia, increased from class 7 to class 5; Southampton, increased from class 7 to class 6; Guayaquil, increased from class 7 to class 6; Guayaquil, increased from class 7 to class 6; Ceylon, increased from class 7 to class 6—seven.

I ought to say here that the changes from the fees to official salaries does not increase but decreases the expenditures for the consulates several thousand dollars—I did have the exact amount—perhaps five thousand dollars. At some of the offices the compensation is thereby increased, while in others it is very much less, but the total result shows a decrease of several thousand dollars.

As the consideration of the bill proceeds, if further information is desired. I shall be very glad to give it.

desired, I shall be very glad to give it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read and the amendments reported considered as they are reached in the reading.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 37, to insert:

For salary of chargé d'affaires and consul-general of the United States in Rou-mania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would rather that amendment should not be agreed to at this time. I wish to know whether we have any office of chargé d'affaires at Roumania, and I doubt extremely the propriety of our going into diplomatic business at this particular place. course there is no objection to a consul-general. Therefore let the reading go on until we find out exactly what the office is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question on this amendment will be reserved.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 69 and 70 under the heading "Schedule B," as fol-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This involves the same question as the previous amendment, and will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 88, to increase the appropriation "for salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks" from $329,400 to $330,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 104, after "Demerara," to insert "Belfast" in the list of consulates of Class III.

The next amendment was, at the beginning of line 217, to strike out "Ceylon" from the list of consulates of Class VII.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 263, in the clause relative to clerks at consulates.

Mr. HOAR. I believe all the committee amendments are disposed

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are not; one is still pending. Mr. HOAR. All with the exception of one passed over. I move, in line 263, to insert, after "Montreal," "a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,400 in any one year."

rate of $1,400 in any one year."

The clerk of the consul-general at Montreal has been paid until within two years the sum of $1,500. Last year the appropriation was cut down to $1,200. The clerk is a gentleman whom I know, a gentleman of very high character, a very efficient officer, and he writes that it is impossible to support his family on $1,200, that the expenses of living in Canada have increased during the last year from 10 to 15 per cent., owing to the operation of the new Canadian tariff. His labors frequently last till a very late hour of the evening. He does a very large proportion of the work of the consulate. This amendment, I understand, has been requested by the Department of State, and by it recommended to the committee. I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State to that effect. I have not moved to restore the allowance for clerk hire at that consulate to the old rate of $1,500 the allowance for clerk hire at that consulate to the old rate of $1,500 a year, but have fixed it at $1,400. I trust the committee will make no objection to that slight amendment.

Mr. EATON. I shall be compelled to object as the organ of the committee, because this matter had due consideration in the committee. We had a letter from the clerk, who is a very worthy gentleman,

I have no doubt, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, and a very good officer. We had a communication from him, and we had the recommendation of the Department also in regard to it; but the committee did not think it advisable under the circumstances to make this change. The change was made from $1,500 to $1,200 a year or two since, I have forgotten which, by recommendation of the Department itself with divers and sundry other changes, reductions in one place and additions in another. The committee hardly felt it proper to make an exception of this one man.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut, I have no doubt, would desire to do justice in a matter of this kind. Although it is a small amount to the Government, it is a matter of great importance to so humble and at the same time worthy an officer as this clerk. He says, what I suppose the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations knows as well as anybody else, that the expenses of living have increased from 10 to 15 per cent. within the past year.

The case is this: Two years ago the Department of State thought the compensation of this clerk in Montreal could properly be reduced. It was reduced to $1,200. Since then this extraordinary fact, applicable to that consulate alone, has intervened, to wit, a general change in the scale of living by reason of the operation of the Canadian tariff; and now the Department on whose recommendation the reduction was made recommends the partial restoration of the old pay. It does seem to me that if they fixed $1,200 as a proper compensation two years ago, when the price of living has risen from 10 to 15 per cent, it is proper that there should be some allowance made according to the request of the party.

I should hardly feel warranted in urging an amendment, even of so slight a character, against the judgment of the Senator who has this bill in charge, because I know his absolute desire to do justice in such cases; but I submit to him for his consideration whether that is not a good reason for this trifling change in the bill.

Mr. EATON. It may be a very good reason for the opinion of the clerk at Montreal who says, I agree, that the cost of living is 10 per cent. higher there than last year. Suppose it should be 10 per cent. lower next year than this, should we hear from the clerk in regard to that state of the case? For some reason that I know nothing about he says there is an advance in the cost of living at this particular point. There may be advances at other points. I do not know but that we ought to increase the salary of the consul-general from $4,000 because the cost of living has increased.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator should take into consideration, certainly, the cost of living, the price of the necessaries of life in the place where the officer exercises his duties; and if the Canadian tariff has within the last twelve months made this increase in the price of living, as the clerk says, and he certainly knows, as no doubt the Senator does, it seems to me that is a reason for increasing the com-

Mr. EATON. That was not the sole reason, I believe, why this clerk desired an increase of his salary; but no matter about that.

Mr. HOAR. What was the other?
Mr. EATON. As the organ of the committee I do not feel at liberty myself to accept the amendment. Let the vote of the Senate be taken upon it.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what information, if any, he has that the cost of living has increased in Montreal specially?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know why it has increased. The clerk writes that under the new Canadian tariff the cost of living has increased there to such a degree that his salary of $1,200 is not enough to pay his family expenses. Of course that is a cause which would apply to every other Canadian consulate; but it may be that at the other Canadian consulates the pay was fixed so that a little margin was left. At any rate, I do not understand that there is application from any other quarter, but this man makes this suggestion. The committee acted two years ago in reducing his compensation on the authority of the Department of State, who recommended a reduction in quite of the Department of State, who recommended a reduction in quite a large number of consulates. Now the Department of State concur with this particular clerk and say that in his case, without meddling with the other reductions, they think there should be a restoration or partial restoration of the old salary. If hereafter the expenses of living are reduced, that will be another thing. That is the reason for having the Committee on Appropriations and Congress revise these appropriations every twelve months.

Mr. BECK. My reason for asking the question was that I had received a similar letter: I know the salary is a small one; and I wish to vote according to the facts.

Mr. WINDOM. I think this amendment ought to be adopted, and I want to say a word as to why the reduction was made a year or two ago, as I understand it; and I think I shall state the facts as the committee have them.

The State Department was unable to employ a sufficient number of consular clerks elsewhere, and in order to get them they recom-mended a reduction in quite a large number of clerkships, paring mended a reduction in quite a large number of clerkships, paring down several of them in order to have money enough to employ others elsewhere. This reduction in Montreal was not made, as I understand, because the Department believed that the clerk there then received a larger salary than he should have, but they pared $300 off his salary to pay somebody else. In other words, they made him contribute to pay the salaries of clerks elsewhere. I think the Government should pay the salaries of the clerks and give a fair compensa-tion to all. I have read the letters of the consul and others showing tion to all. I have read the letters of the consul and others showing the increase in the cost of living and the necessity for this little addition, and I believe it is just and right that it should be given to him. I dislike to disagree with the committee, but my friends know why I do it; this matter has been fully discussed and they know what my opinion has been hitherto, and I think the Senate will do a simple act of justice if it raises this salary to the amount proposed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota says he dislikes to disagree with the committee. He knows I always dislike to disagree with him and always like to agree with him; but, Mr. President, the raising of this salary in all probability involves the raising of many others. The Senator has properly stated that there is a gross sum appropriated here for salaries of the various con-there is a gross sum appropriated here for salaries of the various consular clerks. This gentleman is a clerk at Montreal. Two years ago or a year ago the Department of State, so as to make the gross sum appropriated for salaries go all around and make the salaries equal appropriated for salaries go all around and make the salaries equal to clerks at the different consulates, reduced this clerk among others and may have increased one or two; I do not know how that was. At any rate it was done by the Department after careful investigation, and it was supposed by them that this place would be equal to the others, if $1,200 was paid this clerk. The committee could not see how they could raise this salary and let the others remain where they are they are.

The Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Massachusetts will notice that this bill appropriates nearly one thousand dollars more for this purpose than was appropriated last year, so that if the State Department believe that this particular man ought to have more than he now receives, they will most probably give it to him. The same discretion that they had to reduce his pay they have to

The same discretion that they had to reduce his pay they have to advance it, and I hardly think we can afford to single out this one clerk and let the others remain as they are.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to say in reply to his suggestion, that the increase of this salary will involve a large number of others, that this is the only exception made that I know of by the State Department. Quite a number were reduced a year or two ago, and now the State Department ask that this one alone shall be increased. They themselves make the exception, and there is only one exception in their recommendation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In answer to my friend I will say that perhaps this is the only gentleman who has written as many letters, and urged the State Department and Senators to raise his salary. Perhaps this is the only one. I believe there is a general rule

ary. Perhaps this is the only one. I believe there is a general rule in the State Department that none of the clerks shall make efforts to raise their own salaries. This clerk appears to have changed that entirely, and the State Department has made an exception in his case. I was told by a clerk only last night that he thought a brother clerk would be dismissed for making an effort to have his compensa-tion advanced. I believe the general rule in all the Departments prohibits such efforts by clerks; and I take it it is so in the State Department; but this particular clerk appears not only to have writ-

Department; but this particular ciers appears not only to have written to the Department but to have written to Senators.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask if that does not prove the strength of this case, that the Department sees the justice of it so strongly that it is willing even to waive the violation of the rule in order to do justice.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Department do not recommend it very strongly; they are very tender. They say this clerk asks it.

Mr. HOAR. I have the letter here from the Assistant Secretary of State.

I do not know whether it is a proper mode of introducing a letter from the Department to the Senate, but the Department do certainly express their approbation and recommendation very decidedly.

Mr. President, here is a question of fixing the compensation of a very faithful, important, and hard-worked officer. There is not a member faithful, important, and hard-worked officer. There is not a member of the committee who will get up and say that he thinks the officer is now paid enough. The officer writes that by reason of an extraordinary cause acting upon the community where his services are performed alone he cannot support his family, and he asks the slightest increase. The Department, which has recommended a decrease in other cases, recommends this increase. The committee do not say there is any mistake about that; they say on the contrary that they believe the man to be a worthy man whose statement is to be credited; do not say that there is any mistake, do not say the salary ought not to be raised, or anything of that kind; they only say there is this, that, or the other technical difficulty, that the Senate may improperly raise somebody else's salary if they raise this one.

that, or the other technical difficulty, that the Senate may improperly raise somebody else's salary-if they raise this one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 9. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is a further count called for?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hardly think this question is properly understood, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will let the yeas and nays be called in the Senate, and not have them now. Let the amendment prevail here and go to the Senate.

Mr. EATON. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present, and the reading of the bill will continue.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I called for the yeas and nays, and I want to be heard a minute on this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The gentleman in charge of the bill suggested that it be passed over for the present, and the Chair supposed that the Senate acquiesced in the suggestion.

Mr. EATON. Let it be passed over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection if it is not to Mr. DAVIS, of west virginia. I have no objection it it is not to be declared carried.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a quorum present, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Evidently not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I believe the rules provide for the Chair doing something about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of Sen-

Mr. FERRY. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. BALDWIN] is Mr. FERRY. I denecessarily absent.

Fifty-three Senators answered to their names,
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. As I understand that this proposition has passed for the moment, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of my proposition?

Mr. HOAR. What has become or my proposition:
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been passed over until the bill shall be reported to the Senate.
Mr. HOAR. But my proposition was declared carried by the Chair; then some one on the other side—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asked if a further count was desired.

Mr. HOAR. I suggested that as it would have to be voted on again in the Senate it was not worth while to call the yeas and nays here, and that was accepted. So my amendment stands as adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is mistaken. The Chair asked if a further count was demanded, and the Senator from West Virginia demanded the yeas and nays, and then the suggestion was made that the matter be postponed until the bill came into the Senate, to which the gentleman of the committee in charge of the bill assented.

Mr. HOAR. I did not assent to that. I do not understand that the Senate has postponed this amendment which I moved in order, and it was carried, but the point was taken that there was no quorum, and there was a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is mistaken in his supposition that the Chair declared it carried.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair announced the numbers on the vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And asked if a further count was desired, no quorum having voted, to which the Senator from West Virginia responded that he demanded the vees and navs before any further count was had.

Mr. HOAR. No assent has been given to a postponement of the matter except that I made a suggestion that the Senator from West Virginia withdraw his call for a further count and let the matter be presented in the Senate, the amendment having been adopted here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut accepted the suggestion, and the Chair presumed the Senator from Massachusetts acquiesced in order that a quorum might vote on his amendment. Still, if he desires it, the question now can be put upon it.

Mr. HOAR. It may be as well now, because the debate has been had; otherwise we shall have to have it all over again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be again reported, as Senators have come in since it was read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 263, after the word "Montreal," it is proposed to insert "a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,400 in any one year."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Only a word. I wish the Senate to understand that this is an exception to the other clerks. This is an advance of salary to one. The salary is now $1,200. While this may be a deserving gentleman it appeared to the committee that we ought not to single him out from all the consular clerks and make an ought not to single him out from all the consular clerks and make an advance of his salary. It appears to me to involve the whole question. If this man is entitled to it the others are. It is understood, and a Senator on the other side has stated very distinctly, that this salary was reduced by the Secretary of State, or by his option. It was not reduced by the Senate, but by the Department of State, because they believed that the salary ought to be $1,200 in proportion to the others. Now, while it is true that this advance affects none but this one clerk this year, will it not next year lay a claim for the other consular clerks? other consular clerks

My friend from Minnesota will notice that there was an appropriation of $56,100 last year for clerk hire. This bill advances it to $57,400; over a thousand dollars advance. It may be that the Secretary of State deems that this gentleman is worthy of the advance of $200; from $1,200 to $1,400. Part of that increased appropriation can probably be taken for that purpose. If he had the power to reduce the salary he certainly has the power to advance it if we give him the money.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not remember the fact; but is there any additional clerk provided for in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not able to answer that.

Mr. EATON. There is.

Mr. WINDOM. Even if there were not, the Secretary of State could not increase this salary above $1,200, because this bill fixes it

Mr. WINDOM. Even if there were not, the Secretary of State could not increase this salary above $1,200, because this bill fixes it at $1,200.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if the bill of last year did not fix it at $1,500 in the same way? I understand these salaries to run along according to the recommendation of the Secretary of State, and according to the estimates. The estimates of the Department are $1,200 for this particular salary, and this salary is in accordance with the recommendations of the Department.

Mr. WINDOM. I would say that if the bill of last year fixed it at $1,500 in the same language that this fixes it at $1,200 this year, the Secretary could have reduced it to $1,200; but he cannot increase this to $1,500 for the reason that the bill says "at a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,200 for any one year." He cannot go above $1,200, but he can go below it.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from West Virginia, as I understand him, is right in his statement, he will vote for my amendment, which is simply that a sum not exceeding $1,400 may be allowed. That is all. If he is right in supposing that the Secretary can allow it now, my amendment simply expresses that and nothing else. It does not require him to allow more than $1,200.

Mr. EATON. I really think on the whole that the Senate had better leave this salary where the committee have left it. This is not the only one where an increase has been suggested.

Mr. HOAR. By the Department?

Mr. EATON. A very good stowy undenbtedly can be made out for

Mr. HOAR. By the Department?
Mr. EATON. A very good story undonbtedly can be made out for the increase of the salaries of various consular clerks. I think the Senate had better leave this where the committee left it, and do what is fair by all the Government employés.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

I am almost ashamed to talk so much about so small a matter; but it is very remarkable that here is a proposition recommended by the Department against which no single member of the committee brings any argument whatever; not one has said it is not right, but one member of the committee thinks that the bill means right, but one member of the committee thinks that the bill means that now exactly, the chairman of the committee. Certainly, therefore, there is no harm in making the amendment. The other members simply say, we had better leave it where they did.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator certainly misunderstood me. I said in case the bill did leave it to the Secretary, that could be done; I did not say it did leave it. But I did not rise to that; I rose to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and let a division take place, as it is hardly a matter worthy of the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massa-

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WHYTE. During this session of Congress the two Houses have passed a joint resolution directing the Public Printer to send to our foreign legations a copy of the daily Congressional Record, but made no provision for the payment of the postage on it. There is no fund at the State Department, nor is there any fund under the care of the Public Printer out of which to pay this postage. I have therefore been requested by the Public Printer and by the State Department to offer the following amendment, to come in between lines 337 and 338—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When that portion of the bill shall have been reached the amendment can be proposed. It has not yet been reached in the reading of the bill. The reading will continue.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to Mr. WHYTE. I move to add after line 337:

For postage on copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be sent by the Public Printer to all of our legations abroad under the provisions of the joint resolution approved December 18, 1880, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. In the part of the bill just read there is a provision, as I heard it imperfectly, for taking care of prisoners in China and Japan. I ask the Clerk to re-read that part.

The Secretary read lines 317 and 318, as follows:

For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses, (China,) $9,500.

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish some Senator familiar with the Constitution, and who has leisure, would inform this body what right we have to try any man for crime in China, without a judge, without a jury, without any constitutional jurisdiction whatever. Men are being tried for crimes frequently in China, Turkey, and elsewhere; some have been tried for murder and are awaiting execution, as I am told, and I would like to know, just for the peace of my own conscience as a Senator, what authority we have to vote money to keep them in jail until somebody can hang them by judicial murder. The Constitution says that no man shall be tried for crime except upon the presentment of a grand jury. They are in prison now in every one of these countries, Japan, China, and Turkey, and I assert here that they are in prison there in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

United States.

Between China, for instance, and the United States a treaty removes all cause of national offense. China, if it chooses to let us do it, can make no complaint. If we hang our own people and half of hers, it might be a blessing to her as far as she is concerned; but when you come to our power to do what China is willing we should do you must point to some provision in the Constitution which gives us the right. I have looked thoroughly for it, and I cannot find it. It is undoubtedly there, because Senators would not sit here year after year and you money for an illegal purpose; but I have never been able to find that particular provision. I see before me the Senator from Illinois. that particular provision. I see before me the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,] ripe in constitutional learning, who has administered law on the bench, and who has participated in making appropriations. I wish he would take five minutes of his valuable time and point to that provision of the Constitution, or else I wish the Senate would say openly out and out, so that we can understand what we are about, that whenever anything becomes desirable in our opinion, that is

I move to strike out that provision to test the sense of the Senate.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out the following paragraph—
Mr. VOORHEES. Let the paragraph be read.
The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 317 and 318,

For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses, (China,) $9,500.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Wisconsin perhaps had better address his inquiry to a member of the present administration rather than to the Senate. Some time back there reached me in var-ious forms a series of accounts of the exercise of this high and lawless power which he has described, in Turkey, and I think perhaps an inquiry addressed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the present Postmaster-General might elicit the information he desires. I commend him to that quarter.

Mr. CARPENTER. I modify my motion by moving to strike out the two paragraphs which read as follows:

For rent of prison for American convicts in China, $1,500, For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses, (China,) $9,500.

They should both go out together.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin, who seems to have looked into this question and with whom I heartily sympathize, whether it is not true that at this time an American citizen is under sentence in Turkey by our late resident minister, condemned to death? Is not that the fact at this time?

Mr. CARPENTER. I so understand it.

Mr. VOORHEES. And so do I; and I take pains to embrace this opportunity to say that the trial was as utterly lawless as if it had been conducted by a Comanche Indian on the plains; without authority, and a disgrace to our country.

Mr. CARPENTER. I would be quite willing under the circumstances, and considering the importance of it to our citizens residing in China. Japan, and other countries, if it can be constitutionally sin, who seems to have looked into this question and with whom I in China, Japan, and other countries, if it can be constitutionally done, (about which I am not entirely clear,) to vote to establish a judicial district over the concessions in Japan, another over the concessions in China, and another over the concessions in Turkey, appoint a judge and administer justice there as Great Britaindoes. Great Britain has a court in each one of those countries, composed of judges Britain has a court in each one of those countries, composed of any under a treaty similar to ours, and it has a bar of English barristers, and a grand jury are subposned, and a petit jury are called; and when a British subject is charged with murder or any other crime, he is tried in those courts as he would be in the "Old Bailey," by regular judicial proceeding. We ought to do one of two things. If we are too rried in those courts as he would be in the "Old Bailey," by regular judicial proceeding. We ought to do one of two things. If we are too mean as a nation to pay the expense of observing the Constitution in China, then let us give up our concessions in China and come back to as much of the Constitution as we can afford to carry out.

I am opposed to this whole proceeding. It has resulted already in China and in Japan in such proceedings on the part of our diplomatic representatives there as are simply a disgrace to this nation in the avec of all nations. A diplomatic representative of the United the eyes of all nations. A diplomatic representative of the United States on one occasion embezzled from the United States a large sum of money; he invested it in bonds and mortgages in his own name. He sat as sole judge in his own court and foreclosed the mortgage in his own name. He ordered the property to be sold by the marshal, or whatever officer carried his decrees into effect. The sale took place; the officer appeared at the sale and bought in the property himself. He then went back on the bench and confirmed the sale to Such a thing would have made such a noise in Great Britain that the atmosphere could not have held it; but we have become so indifferent to constitutional provisions, so careless of the fundamental and essential rights and principles of freedom, that these things go on and we sit here and vote appropriations to carry them on in flat, plain violation of the Constitution, of every principle of Magna Charta, of the rights of all men, and it ceases to excite the least surprise or attention. least surprise or attention.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Wisconsin means to press his motion to strike out all the provisions in this bill for rent of prisons for care of offenders in foreign countries, or whether he merely makes that motion as a text for his very eloquent and excellent sermon on the impropriety of the proceedings of some of our foreign officers. I suppose that the Senator from Wisconsin will agree that it is expedient that the American consul abroad shall have some authority to try offenders on American ships, when they come into port, for petty or for grave offenses, and that if he has such authority he should have authority to sentence them, to imprison them, and that a place should be provided where they shall be imprisoned and kept under sentence instead of being brought half around the world home for petty offenses. So I think it would be hardly just to strike out the entire provision. I understand, however, that the jurisdiction of our consular officers or ministers in foreign countries, especially in Asiatic countries, for the trial of offenders for grave offenses is not under any authority conferred by the Constitution of the United States, but it is under the authority conferred by the governments where they reside. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator by the Constitution of the United States, but it is under the authority conferred by the governments where they reside.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. Let me complete the statement, and then I will yield for a moment. For instance: Here is an American citizen in China who commits an assault or a larceny; if he is to be tried by the savage Chinese law he would be beheaded or disemboweled. The Emperor of China, for a crime committed by an American citizen, has consented that the American consul shall exercise a criminal jurisdiction. It is therefore the rescuing of American citizens abroad by sened that the American consul shall exercise is criminal jurisdiction. It is therefore the rescuing of American citizens abroad by the concession of these semi-barbarous governments from barbarous trials and punishment, which we obtain by this provision and for their imprisonment and punishment.

Mr. EATON. If my friend will permit me right here, let me read section 4095 of the Revised Statutes:

When any final judgment of the minister to China, or to Japan, is given in the exercise of original or of appellate criminal jurisdiction, the person charged with the crime or offense, if he considers the judgment erroneous in point of law, may appeal therefrom to the circuit court for the district of California; but such appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings, unless the minister certifies that there is probable cause to grant the same, when the stay shall be such as the interests of justice may require.

Then section 4096:

The circuit court for the district of California is authorized and required to receive, hear, and determine the appeals provided for in this title, and its decisions shall be final.

I only wanted to call the attention of my friend to the statute to that effect

Mr. HOAR. I do not regret that the Senator from Wisconsin has called public attention to this matter, for I agree that in the exercise of these rude and imperfect jurisdictions there is wanting proper proof these rude and imperiect jurisdictions there is wanting proper provision for the security of the citizen, and for a trial by jury in proper cases, and for the proper method of proceeding. Such an outrage as the Senator described perhaps is not sufficiently prevented by our existing laws. We passed the other day a treaty extending the fugitive slave law to American sailors; that is the only proper and adequate description which can be given; and yet those legal processes which when applied to persons claimed as fugitive slaves excited the indignation of the entire North, especially of the section of the country that I represent, when applied as they are applied every day untry that I represent, when applied as they are applied every day under our treaty, and have been from the beginning of the Government, to American sailors, pass without any indignation whatever. I am very glad that the honorable Senator from Wisconsin has called attention to the defect in the code which provides for the trial of citizens committing offenses abroad; but I suppose he will not seriously claim that the entire abolition of all criminal process whatever abroad is the remedy. The remedy would be to have the committee of which he is so distinguished a member, the Judiciary Committee, provide a carefully drawn and limited law to cure the evil.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I had no expectation that the provision would be stricken out. It would be of course, as the Senprovision would be stricken out. It would be of course, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, an eccentric, a violent, and partial interference with a great evil which ought to be treated as an entirety. I did think, however, it was well enough to call the attention of the Senate to it, and see what its disposition was. We ought certainly to have a carefully prepared bill establishing a judicial district in each of those countries; but to say that because it is a good thing to rescue our citizens from the savage treatment they would receive at the hands of the Emperor of China, from being beheaded for a trifling offense, and all that, we are therefore justified in doing this thing, is the old argument by which all constitutions have been supplanted, namely, that if a thing is desirable, if it is beneficial to the people, let us have it, constitution or no constitution.

let us have it, constitution or no constitution.

Take the very case mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts. I concede that if an American citizen commits lareeny in China, for which he would be beheaded, it is a favor to that citizen to resone him from the ax and send him to jail for a few months. But it is said by the Senator that this power is conferred upon the United States by the treaty with the foreign nation. That learned Senator will see, if he will reflect one moment, that the United States can receive no power whatever from a foreign nation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me for an interruption. President Grant acted as an arbitrator between foreign nations by their consent. There is nothing in the Constitution whatever which authorized him to do it. I suppose the Senator would not deny the fair legality and propriety of that proceeding. If that be so, what difficulty is there in the American consul at Smyrna, by consent of the culty is there in the American consul at Smyrna, by consent of the Government of Turkey, trying a case for an offense committed by an American citizen upon another American citizen within the criminal jurisdiction of Turkey?

Mr. CARPENTER. The difference in the two cases strikes me as a very broad one. General Grant did this, I suppose, while he happened to be President.

Mr. HOAR. I believe so.

Mr. CARPENTER. That, however, was a mere accident. If those two notions had agreed to refer that question to the Senator from Mar.

two nations had agreed to refer that question to the Senator from Mastwo nations had agreed to refer that question to the Senator from Lass-sachusetts, if they had agreed to refer it to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, or to some respectable hack-driver driving on the Avenue, the arbitrament might have been binding between those two nations, but the arbitrator would have acted in his individual capacity. But our Government can do nothing except it has authority. Where our Government can do nothing except it has authority. Where do you look for that authority? In but one place, and that is in the Constitution. Undoubtedly the United States have power to make treaties; they have the constitutional power to make treaties. a treaty is made and anything is to be done by the United States under that treaty, how is it to be done? You do not get the power to do it from the treaty. The obligation to do it may be imposed by the treaty, but the power to do it must be derived from the Constitution of the United States.

To test this for a moment, suppose we should make a treaty with Great Britain by which we should provide that we would confer titles of nobility upon certain persons in the United States; whether citizens of the United States or British subjects would not make any zens of the United States or British subjects would not make any difference, perhaps. Suppose we make such a treaty. That fixes upon us, in the language of the law of nations, an obligation to confer those titles; but when we come to perform the duty, the President has no authority to confer such a title, Congress has no specific authority to confer such a title, the Supreme Court has no authority, no other branch or officer has, and over all is the prohibition of the Constitution that no titles of nobility shall be granted by anybody. I ask, and that brings the matter to a proper test, does that treaty we have made with England promising to confer a title of nobility upon some person give Congress the power to do what the Constitution says shall not be done? In other words, does the treaty-making power which is a creature of the Constitution override the Constitution itself and enable Congress in pursuance of a treaty to do what is expressly which is a creature of the Constitution override the Constitution itself and enable Congress in pursuance of a treaty to do what is expressly forbidden by other clauses and provisions of the Constitution itself? In the early days, when the Government was first put into operation under the Constitution, there was some discussion, and some pretty close discussion, as to whether a treaty could not be made that would carry things beyond the Constitution. It was said that the treaty-making power was an independent power, as much so as the power of Congress to pass a law appropriating money, and being given by the Constitution, a treaty made within the general scope of international law would be a treaty binding upon the United States under the Constitution. But that has been negatived for the last fifty years. No statesman, no lawyer, no judge, that I am aware of, has for half a century made any such claim for the treaty-making power, and all concede now that it is absurd. Two or three decisions of the Supreme Court, which I encountered last year in examining this question, although not directly upon the point, seem to put this matter at rest. matter at rest.

Therefore when you come to the right of hanging a man in China for murder, or when you come down to sending him to prison two weeks for murder, when the Emperor of China might hang him or behead him, although you do the fellow a favor, under what authority do you do it? The Senator from Massachusetts says under authority derived from the Emperor of China. I deny that the Government of the United States can exercise any authority derived from anybody or anything except the Constitution of the United States. I deny or anything except the Constitution of the United States. I deny that the monarchy of Great Britain can clothe us with powers denied to us by the Constitution; I deny that the Emperor of China can do any such thing; and although it be to exercise power upon our citizens, I deny that our Government as a Government can do it. An individual citizen of the United States, General Grant, my learned friend, the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] or any private individual may be chosen an arbitrator by two nations and may decide the question, and if those two nations say they will be bound by the decision then they are so bound in honor; but I deny that France and Great Britain could not refer a question of that kind to the Congress of the United States, because I deny that the Congress of the United States when assembled as a Congress could enter into the discussion of the question and determine who was right and who was wrong between two foreign nations. It cannot be done, because the Constitution does not give the power to do it. When you get into a Constitution does not give the power to do it. When you get into a State Legislature there anything within the general province of legislation may be done if it is not forbidden by the State or Federal constitution; but when you come to consider any power of Congress it is not enough to show that it is forbidden in the Constitution. You must be able to point out the clause that confers the power, because if there is no such clause the tenth amendment expressly denies it to you, for it says that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Therefore the suggestion made by my honorable friend from Massa-chusetts cannot be maintained. We cannot exercise a power derived from a treaty if it be forbidden by the Constitution itself. It might from a treaty if it be forbidden by the Constitution itself. It might be beneficial to do it; it might be a great mercy if China would let us administer justice over all her people. If by treaties they can give us power to administer justice over Americans happening to reside in China, by treaty they can give the United States power to administer justice over all the people of China. Suppose such a treaty were made, would any man in his senses claim that the United States had thereby acquired the power to administer justice over them, that we could appoint judges there and administer justice for that people under the treaty? In other words, can this Government loan its powers for the use of other nations?

It is doubtful enough, Mr. President—and I do not wish to discuss the question without more reflection—it is doubtful enough whether we could under any circumstances establish a judicial district in the question without more reflection—it is doubtful enough whether we could under any circumstances establish a judicial district in China; but one thing is perfectly clear, that if we can it must be authorized by the provisions of the Constitution; it must be done by a judge who is to hold his office during good behavior, whose salary shall not be reduced while he is in office, and in obedience to all the other special provisions of the Constitution that regulate the administration of justice. Whether we can or cannot do that I would not enter upon the discussion of now; but I do say that the idea that we can get such power from a foreign nation cannot be maintained one moment, and such practice and proceedings are a disgrace to our nation. ment, and such practice and proceedings are a disgrace to our nation. I say disgrace to our nation because foreign nations point with contempt to a nation whose theory is the most perfect protection to private right but whose practice is to condemn its own citizens for crime vate right but whose practice is to condemn its own citizens for crime without presentation by a grand jury, without trial before a judge possessing the qualifications fixed by our own Constitution, and without any jury whatever; and an American cannot help blushing at such a proceeding in a country where Great Britain—not a republic but a monarchy—surrounds its subjects with the various safeguards which the experience of centuries has demonstrated to be indispensable to the protection of innocence.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I concur with every word that has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Wisconsin. It seems to me that every sentiment that he has uttered is in entire concurrence with the spirit of the Constitution. My attention was called last summer to the incident referred to by the Senator from Indiana, that a minister accredited to the court of Turkey had left the city of Constantinople and gone to Cairo to try an American citizen for his life.

stantinople and gone to Cairo to try an American citizen for his life. I followed up somewhat the telegrams that were sent in relation to those proceedings, and I found that that minister, upon an application that triers should aid him in the trial, had determined, in effect, tion that triers should aid him in the trial, had determined, in effect, that he had the sole power, sitting alone, under the provisions of the statute, to try, convict, and execute that man without any power of review or reversal in any tribunal whatever and without any legal duty on his part to submit his proceedings even to the President of the United States. I called the attention of the Senate, on the 2d of June last, to that state of the law; I asked the Committee on the Judiciary to examine the provisions of the statutes and see whether they were in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, but the session had so far progressed that the committee had no time to make that examination.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him for a moment to make another statement to go with the one already made?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. I have no doubt that the minister is right under the statutes.

Mr. PENDLETON. I was about to go on to read the statute to

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to call attention to another fact also, that our ministers in China and Japan are not only clothed with all the judicial power which this Government or any government possesses, but with all legislative power. They are authorized by the

Mr. PENDLETON. I am going to read the statute; I have it here. Mr. CARPENTER. Go on and read it. I thought you were pass-

Mr. CARPENTER. Go on and read it. I thought you were passing from it.

Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir. My attention was called, as I said, to the decision, as transmitted to us by telegraph, of this minister sitting there as a court. He decided under the statute that he, sitting alone, had a right to try and convict and execute that man; and while in civil cases he was obliged to report his proceedings to the President of the United States, in criminal cases there was no such obligation upon him, and he could issue his warrant for the execution. That led me to examine the law and I found that the minister obligation upon him, and he could issue his warrant for the execution. That led me to examine the law, and I found that the minister was entirely right under the law, that he had anthority just to do that thing; that while in civil cases he might be obliged to call three triers to his assistance, in criminal cases, involving the liberty and the life of citizens, he could sit alone. In those cases arising in Egypt at least he was not obliged even to submit his proceedings; he was obliged to make no report to the President of the United States; and the man could be executed without the knowledge of the President so that he could exercise his pardoning power. the President so that he could exercise his pardoning power.

Mr. CARPENTER. He could be executed the next day.
Mr. PENDLETON. He could be executed the next day; but if he was not executed until the next year the minister was not obliged

Mr. TELLER. When was that law passed?
Mr. PENDLETON. I do not know that I can tell the Senator. I will give the sections of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CARPENTER. It was passed immediately after our first treaty with China.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the twenty-first article of the treaty between the United States and China which regulates the subject, and which gives to the consuls of the United States the exclusive power in those cases. I ask the Secretary to read it, that Senators may see where this power is

Mr. PENDLETON. Before that is read, I desire to say that no treaty can confer upon the Government of the United States power treaty can confer upon the Government of the United States power to try and execute one of its citizens, except in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. The Constitution says that no citizen of the United States shall be tried for a crime except by a jury, after having been presented or indicted by a grand jury. As the Senator from Wisconsin has so well said, no foreign government can confer upon this Government a right to do that in relation to the life and liberty of its citizens which the Constitution has not conferred upon liberty of its citizens which the Constitution has not conferred upon this Government. Now I will hear what the Senator from Virginia wishes to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The article called for will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Subjects of China, who may be guilty of any criminal act toward citizens of the United States, shall be arrested and punished by the Chinese authorities according to the laws of China; and citizens of the United States, who may commit any crime in China, shall be subject to be tried and punished only by the consul, or other public functionary of the United States, thereto authorized according to the laws of the United States. And in order to the prevention of all controversy and disaffection, justice shall be equitably and impartially administered on both sides.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The act of 1848, which was passed to carry out that provision of the treaty, certainly gives the consul the most extraordinary powers, the right not only to execute the laws but absolutely to make a code of laws.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio, if I understand him in citing the provision of the Constitution requiring a jury trial and presentment in capital cases, to mean to say that there is no power which can be properly exercised by a United States officer abroad, with any consent of a foreign government, to try offenders who commit offenses on shipboard, or to try American citizens who commit offenses in those countries? I ask if his suggestion goes to that length?

Mr. PENDLETON. My suggestion goes to this length, that while the foreign nation may permit that to be done within its jurisdiction by the officers of the Government of the United States which the Constitution of the United States authorizes the Government to do, no consent can be given to this Government which enables us to do that which the Constitution forbids.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me I will read the entire clause to which he referred. The provision is that—

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law.

Of course one part of that is as much in force as the other, and there is no possibility of a trial for an offense committed on shipboard or in a foreign country.

Mr. PENDLETON. That involves the very question that was suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to the power of the Government as to extra-territorial courts. Upon that point I do not desire just now to express an opinion; but I am very certain that if there be power to establish an extra-territorial court there is no power to invest that court with the right to do that which the Constitution says the Government of the United States shall not do.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the argument of the honorable Senator from Ohio to be that no foreign government by its permission can authorize a United States consul to do what the Constitution of the United States prohibits. The Constitution of the United States prohibits trying a man for crime without a jury. Ergo, no United States consul can try a man for a crime in a foreign country without a jury. My point is that the same clause says that the trial shall take place in a State and district.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In "the State."

Mr. HOAR. I understand; "in a State and district" being the State and district where the offense was committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law. Therefore, according to the logic of the honorable Senator from Ohio, a United States consul must only try a man in a State and district, and cannot try him anywhere else. Thus he cuts up by the roots the whole power of the United States consular officers to try offenses committed on ship-board or offenses committed by American citizens in foreign countries. His logic remands the American sailor who does not take off his hat to a mandarin in China, or whoever else may happen to be a dignitary there, to be impaled, or beheaded, or bastinadoed, or whatever may be the punishment of the country.

Mr. PENDLETON. In relation to the particular point which the Senator from Massachusetts makes, I do not feel myself going quite !

as far as he seems to indicate; for I find in the Constitution this provision:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Mr. HOAR. Now look at the sixth amendment; what I read.
Mr. PENDLETON. I know what the Senator read, but I am reading from the Constitution itself, which provides exactly for the case where the crime is not committed within a State.

Mr. HOAR. We hold over here that the amendments are as much a part of the Constitution as the Constitution itself.

a part of the Constitution as the Constitution itself.

Mr. PENDLETON. So say I, and I believe none of us has ever doubted that the first ten amendments, at all events, were passed in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. We think so of the whole fifteen.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We go you four better.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am willing to agree with you upon that point power at all events.

now, at all events.

Mr. President, I said that in my opinion the decision of the minister was right, so far as the statute could confer upon him the authority he claimed, and I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the provision of section 4086 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 4086. Jurisdiction in both criminal and civil matters shall, in all cases, be exercised and enforced in conformity with the laws of the United States, which are hereby, so far as is necessary to execute such treaties, respectively, and so far as they are suitable to carry the same into effect, extended over all citizens of the United States in those countries, and over all others to the extent that the terms of the treaties, respectively, justify or require. But in all cases where such laws are not adapted to the object, or are deficient in the provisions necessary to furnish suitable remedies, the common law and the law of equity and admiralty shall be extended in like manner over such citizens and others in those countries; and if neither the common law, nor the law of equity or admiralty, nor the statutes of the United States, furnish appropriate and sufficient remedies, the ministers in those countries, respectively, shall, by decrees and regulations which shall have the force of law, supply such defects and deficiencies.

Mr. President, you violate the Constitution of the United States when you invest your ministers and your consuls with law-making power. You violate the Constitution of the United States, which says that the trial of all crimes except in cases of impeachment shall be by jury, when you invest one man with the power to sit upon the life and liberty of a citizen of the United States. You violate the Consti-tution which says that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed," when you do not carry out that provision. If the Constitution of the United States has not invested the Government of the United States with all the power which perchance it ought to have in its relations to other nations of the world, then you must do what we have found we can do in modern times, amend the Constitution. The Constitution says:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

Yet this law is intended to operate upon our citizens so that in-stead of providing that from those who are there a jury shall be impaneled it provides that the minister shall sit alone and try the life and the property of a citizen in those countries.

I had not intended to say a word upon this subject; but I agree so heartily with the object which the Senator from Wisconsin has had in proposing this amendment that I was unwilling not to call the attention of the Senate to these provisions of the diplomatic and consular laws which, when I first came to see them, struck me with amazement that we should commit those great acts of injustice upon our citizens who happened to be in those nations which the Constitution of the United States expressly prohibited this Government at home to exercise in regard to its citizens here; and I shall vote, merely by way of expressing an opinion upon this subject, for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to have the amendment reported, for was not in to hear what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 315, 316, 317, and 318, as follows:

For rent of prison for American convicts in China, $1,500. For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses, (China,) $9,500.

For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses, (China,) $9,500.

Mr. BROWN. I am not quite certain that I understand the proposition before the Senate, but if I understand the amendment as it is reported, we have in the bill an authority to pay for certain expenses of prisons and trials in China. The motion now is to strike that out of the bill, and we have gone off into a discussion as to whether the United States had any constitutional right to confer upon our ministers there the jurisdiction to try cases or whether we had any right to establish prisons there. Whether we had that right constitutionally or not, it seems to me the statute is very clear in conferring it. If Congress had no right to confer it, and yet the statute does confer it, and our minister has contracted these debts, common honesty requires, I presume, that we should pay them. quires, I presume, that we should pay them.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. I do not understand that debts have been contracted. I understand that this is an appropriation for next year.

We do not contract debts in foreign countries and then pay them, but we make appropriations in advance, so that next year the minister will not have to go in debt, but will have the money on hand to make this payment; and our logic is that if we have no right to maintain a prison we have no right to vote the money to support it.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator for the explanation; still I think Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator for the explanation; still I think it does not obviate the difficulty. Until we have a repeal of the law and have afforded some other protection for our citizens in China we ought to make provision for paying the expenses as we have done heretofore. Admit for argument that the whole of this legislation is absolutely unconstitutional, null, and void, yet we have practiced for a number of years under it. It has been the custom there for the citizen of the United States to look to the American minister for protection. tection. It has been the custom there to try American citizens before the consul, and not before Chinese tribunals. It has been the custom to have prisons to confine them in when they are arrested for crime. It seems to me, therefore, it would be very bad policy for us to discontinue the appropriations necessary to pay for the prisons until we have repealed the statute. I am ready at any time to vote to repeal the statute whenever a bill comes up in proper shape, if you will show me something better.

But there is another view of this question that is to be taken in discussing now the constitutional question, and it is this: What disposition do you propose to make of your citizens in China? How do you propose that they shall be tried? Is it proposed to turn them over in case of the commission of alleged offenses there to the Chinese tribunals for trial? That is the very point that our Government in the treaties has very carefully guarded, from the time of first opening any relations with that country. We do not permit citizens of the United States, as I understand it, to be tried by Chinese tribunals, and we have carefully guarded that in the treaties we have made with the Empire of China. If we are not to give our own ministers the power to try them, who is to try them?

Mr. CARPENTER. You should establish a court to try them there, according to the Constitution. You should have a judicial district and a judge, a law for subpenaing a grand jury, and you should have attorneys, clerks, &c., as we do at home.

Mr. BROWN. Where would you get the jurors?

Mr. CARPENTER. Export them, if you could not get them any other way.

other way.

Mr. BROWN. Ifeel pretty certain that my honorable friend would not be willing to be one of the jurors transported. The jury, I believe, must be drawn from the district. There might be some difficulty there, perhaps. Really I think the question should not come up in this way. It is not so much our commerce as it is our missionary stations there that have brought about this provision in the treaties. The religious denominations of the United States, as I understand it, have been very jealous of this question and very guarded about it; and they have from time to time impressed their views upon the legislative authorities and the freaty-making power views upon the legislative authorities and the treaty-making power, so that they should not be put within the power of the tribunals of that foreign country while they are there teaching a religion which does not conform to the opinions and usages of that country. It has been more with a view to protect the missionary than it has been to protect the tradesman there that this legislation has taken place.

So far as trial there without jury is concerned, I admit there is point in that. I am not prepared to say, though, that my honorable friend is right as to the rest of it, that we have no authority to establish a court there; in other words, that Congress has no right to confer upon the minister there the power to try causes and have a jury when there should be a jury. I agree very fully with my friend that we can confer no jurisdiction unless we find power in the Constitution of the United States to confer it. We have no difference of opinion there. However, when I turn to the Constitution, I find this lan-

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority:—to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

Mr. CARPENTER. That of course speaks of jurisdiction in the United States

That is the jurisdiction of the United States. FER. In the United States. Mr. BROWN.

Mr. CARPENTER.

Mr. BROWN. The Constitution provides that-

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."

There is no limit there as to the inferior tribunals that Congress may ordain and establish. The Constitution gives the right to Congress to establish one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and prescribe. The establishment of a minister in China as a judge may be one of those inferior courts.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator from Georgia understand me to maintain that we could not establish a judicial tribunal there!

Mr. BROWN. I understood the Senator a while ago to argue that under the Constitution this jurisdiction could not be given, but from my seat I hear so badly that I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. CARPENTER. I simply expressed a doubt upon the subject.

Still my general balance of opinion is that we can do it. But it must be a court presided over by a judge who holds his office during good behavior; it must not be some political officer who happens to be there, removable at the will of the President.

there, removable at the will of the President.

Mr. BROWN. I am not prepared to quite agree with the Senatorthat it must be a judge who holds his term for life. You appoint judges in the Territories, I think, who do not hold their term for life. The judges of the Territory of Montana, or of Utah, or any one of the Territories, holds office for a term of four years, if I recollect the law correctly. If you may establish a court in a Territory, with a judge holding office for four years, why may you not establish a court in China, if a treaty with that country allows you to do it, with a judge holding only during the time the minister remains there, or for four years?

Mr. EATON. Is there any necessity of using the word "judge" to

empower the minister to try causes?

Mr. BROWN. That is very well suggested by my friend the Senator from Connecticut. We are not obliged under the Constitution to use the term "judge." The language is "one Supreme Court" and "such inferior courts." You may call him judge, or call him court, or call him minister, or what you please, and Congress has the right to give him the power to try causes. If Congress may establish a judge with a commission for four years in a Territory it may appoint a judge for less than life in China.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have no doubt you can call a judge of the Supreme Court anything you please except the Chief Justice; his title is fixed in the Constitution; but you cannot give him another quality or deprive him of qualites which the Constitution gives him. Whether you call him judge or commissioner he must hold the office which entitles him to exercise judicial power.

Mr. BROWN. How do they hold in Territories where the term is four years?

Mr. BROWN. How do they hold in Territories where the term is four years?

Mr. CARPENTER. That matter depends on a long argument entirely outside of this. The Supreme Court held that to be law, because they hold that the power to govern the Territories came from an entirely different branch of the Constitution.

Mr. BROWN. Then I suppose they would hold this to be a totally different thing from that branch of the Constitution which has been cited as to the judicial power.

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not think so.

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. CARPENTER. All right.

Mr. BROWN. By turning to the Revised Statutes I find in section 4083 this language:

4083 this language:

To carry into full effect the provisions of the treaties of the United States with China, Japan, Siam, Egypt, and Madagascar, respectively, the minister and the consuls of the United States, duly appointed to reside in each of those countries, shall, in addition to other powers and duties imposed upon them, respectively, by the provisions of such treaties, respectively, be invested with the judicial authority herein described, which shall appertain to the office of minister and consul, and be a part of the duties belonging thereto, wherein, and so far as, the same is allowed by treaty.

That embraces China.

Mr. CARPENTER. There is no doubt the treaties are broad enough

Mr. CARPENTER. There is no doubt the treaties are broad enough to cover it. The question is whether the statutes are valid.

Mr. BROWN. Then there is as little doubt, I think, under the provision of the Constitution I have referred to, that Congress has the right to establish a court there to try American citizens. The statutes may be defective in making no provision for a jury; but I think it would be a constitutional tribunal. If the law provided we might summon a jury of American citizens living there and try citizens who have committed offenses before that jury, I see no reason why it could not be done. There it is defective; but because the law is defective in that regard and there is no permission for a jury, as we have practiced under it for years we should at least provide for the expense until we have amended the law. I know that generally the rule is that a government cannot exercise extra-territorial jurisdiction, but here there is express permission given by the treaty with China that our there is express permission given by the treaty with China that our own minister should exercise this jurisdiction within her territory in the trial of our own citizens there.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. The question is whether this Government can derive any power denied to it by the Constitution from a treaty with

Mr. BROWN. No, I answer emphatically it cannot, but it can establish courts for the trial of its own citizens on the territory of another sovereignty with the consent of that sovereignty, guaranteed by treaty that it may establish them, and that is what it does

Mr. CARPENTER. According to the Senator's own admission he has got to have authority in the Constitution for trying our citizens in foreign countries with the consent of those countries. Now I want Mr. BROWN. I read it to you a little while ago.
Mr. CARPENTER. I think not.
Mr. BROWN. The Constitution provides that—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

There is the power to ordain and establish a court not confined to any territorial jurisdiction. Then the Constitution provides that-

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Here the Congress has by law directed that it shall be in China. The Congress had a right so to direct, because the authority is expressly delegated to it by the Constitution to direct it so. There is where the authority is derived from.

Mr. CARPENTER. There are two ways of discussing the constitutionality of a law; the one is to begin and read the statute first and show that it was passed immediately after the Constitution was and snow that it was passed immediately after the Constitution was adopted, and therefore it must be constitutional, and the Constitution must be construed so as to harmonize it with the statute. That is the popular method of determining the question, into which the Senator from Georgia has fallen to-day. The other method is to take up the Constitution and see what it declares, what laws it will permit to be passed, and if by that examination it be ascertained that the statute in question conflicts with the Constitution, then the statute in question conflicts with the Constitution, then the statute in question conflicts with the Constitution, then the statute in question conflicts with the Constitution, then the statute is a second conflicts with the Constitution, then the statute is a second conflict with the Constitution, then the statute is a second conflict with the Constitution of the conflict with the Constitution of the constitution was a statute in question to the constitution was a supplied to the constitution of the constitution was a statute of the constitution of the constitution was a supplied to the const ute has no force whatever. The Senator from Georgia must start at the right end of this thing if he wants to discuss the question in a proper way. He must show, in the first instance, that the Constitu-tion authorizes the statute, not that we have had such a statute since 1860, and have been hanging men in violation of the Constitution; and therefore we ought to go on for consistency's sake and do it for the next forty years. That will not do. He must show that the Constitution authorized us to hang the first man, or imprison the first man, or fine the first man, and if he can show that then his argument that we ought to go on and do the same thing is entirely consistent and may be entirely proper. I am not objecting that there ought not to be some way to punish crime in China committed by our citizens; I am only objecting to the method that is adopted.

If any man will look at the statute for the first time—and I mean

If any man will look at the statute for the first time—and I mean by that if he had not examined it already—if any Senator will take that statute and read it, I am certain he will be very much astonished. It is a delegation not only of all the powers of this Government, but of the powers of all governments. This consul or minister, who is thus clothed with judicial power, is authorized to administer the Constitution of the United States, the statutes of the United States, and exercise all jurisdiction at law and in equity, and admiralty, and maritime jurisprudence, and when the law falls short then the common law of England and all of its provisions, and when that fails the statute declares in express words that he may pass the common law of England and all of its provisions, and when that fails the statute declares in express words that he may pass ordinances which shall have the force of law, and they apply not only to resident Americans who go to China to reside and carry on trade or business, but they apply to every American who may by chance or accident or the wild winds of heaven be driven upon that shore by shipwreck. If the Senator from Georgia, traveling in the East, should be sailing by one of these countries and by adverse winds be blown into the jurisdiction of one of these American consuls, he may find himself confronted with an ordinance made by that consul declaring some conduct of his a crime, which in the United States would be entirely innocent, be arrested and tried by the man who made the ordinance without a jury, and be sentenced to be executed the next day at four o'clock in the morning. And the Senator is about to vote an appropriation of money which at some future day may be used to aid in his own arbitrary execution, if adverse winds and waves should waft him into that jurisdiction.

I trust no such misfortune will ever overtake the Senator from Georgia. But if it should I fear there are persons malicious enough to smile and exclaim that it was a visitation of poetic justice upon a Senator who had made it possible that such calamity should befall any citizen. In other words, he who had digged a pit for his neighbor had fallen into it himself.

That such a statute could ever have passed Congress, and especially that it could have passed when Daniel Webster was in the Senate, as I believe it did, is matter of astonishment.

The Senator from Massachusetts not at this moment in his seat started a difficulty about the theory which I advanced on this subject. I admit it to be a difficulty, and he did not state it as broadly as he might have stated it. He should have pointed to the fact, to make his argument as broad as it can be, that the Constitution gives Conms argument as broad as it can be, that the Constitution gives Congress the power to punish piracy on the high seas, and that piracy on the high seas necessarily is not within the jurisdiction of a State.

Mr. BROWN. When I yielded the floor I did not know that the honorable Senator proposed not only to criticise my speech but to reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CARPENTER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he had Mr. BROWN. Not at all; but I yielded to the Senator.
Mr. BROWN. Not at all; but I yielded to the Senator.
Mr. CARPENTER. A thousand pardons, then.
Mr. BROWN. I yielded with great pleasure.

The Senator from Wisconsin seems to misunderstand my position on this question. I have not defended here the power that these statutes confer upon the minister in China either to try criminals without a jury or to make ordinances or to do any other act that is legislative in its character. I have defended no such thing. I am as far from consenting to the principle as he is, and being quite a young man myself and a very young Senator, I cannot be responsible for these measures being upon the statute-book. But my honorable friend from Wisconsin having been a member of the Senate for a long time, and during nearly all that period I believe a very prominent member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I wonder he has not had these obnoxious laws stricken from the statute-book long since. It certainly ought to have been done, and I would naturally have looked to him as the man to report the measure to have it done. It has not have to him as the man to report the measure to have it done. It has not been done, however, and they are still upon the statute-book. Now I say I think while they are there we ought to carry out their provisions, so far as the expense is concerned at least, until they can be amended. That is my reply to that portion of the Senator's argument.

As I have said, I claim no power for the courts that is not given by the Constitution of the United States. The Senator objects to my mode of discussing this question, however. According to his ideas a man should always read the Constitution first when he undertakes to discuss the constitutionality of a statute, and then refer to the statute and see whether it is in conformity to the Constitution. In this instance I read the statute first and then the Constitution. I do not think it is very material which is read first. We are testing the constitutionality of a statute. I read the statute and then read the Constitution, and show from it that the statute is or is not constitutional. The Senator from Wisconsin reads the Constitution first and then reads the statute to show that it is not constitutional. It is a good deal a matter of taste as to which is read first. At least I preferred the course I took on that subject. If I shall ever have another discussion of this character with my honorable friend, I shall be very careful to observe the other order, for I have no particular preference in regard to it, and I would be willing to read first the Constitution and then the statute. In any event I have read the statute and then I have read the provision of the Constitution which authorized Congress to pass that statute to the extent that I have defended it, and that is all that I desired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President. I do not propose to go into the discussions. The Senator from Wisconsin reads the Constitution first and then

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not propose to go into the discussion of this matter at all; yet I do not think, with all due deference to my friend from Wisconsin, on an appropriation bill of this character it is necessary to give way to a constitutional discussion. There has been a treaty with China, and for aught I know my friend from Wisconsin was one of the parties to that treaty. For aught I know he may have been a member of the Senate at the time when that treaty was declared one of the laws of the land; I was not.

Mr. CARPENTER. I might have been, but I was not.

Mr. EATON. The Senator has been here a great number of years, a very distinguished member of a leading committee, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and I have not yet learned of any proposition from that committee to alter these laws. Here is a treaty with China and Japan. Certain statutes have been passed by the Congress of the United States. It is necessary that certain appropriations should be made. Those statutes have not yet been declared to be unconstitutional by any body of men. I do not now propose to discuss the question whether they are constitutional or not, but I to discuss the question whether they are constitutional or not, but I simply propose that we shall appropriate a sufficient sum of money to carry on the interests of the United States in China and Japan, and upon the proper occasion I have no doubt that I shall be found very nearly shoulder to shoulder with my friend from Wisconsin in attacking the laws of the character of which he has been speaking.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is any other Senator entitled to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator remy Wisconsin is en-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, having by accident invaded the speech of the Senator from Georgia I desire not to repeat the blunder, and so I have inquired whether any other Senator was entitled to the floor.

As I was about to say when I was informed that I was interrupting the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has alluded to another provision of the Constitution as seem-Hoar I has alluded to another provision of the Constitution as seemingly in conflict with the theory I have advanced upon this subject. The Constitution provides that Congress shall have the power to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas. The high seas not being within the limits of any State or judicial district, such crimes could not be included within the provisions of the clause of the Constitution which requires the trial of all crimes to be had before a jury of the State in which the crime was committed. The ocean is the highway of all nations, and no nation can accomize any special jurisdiction over it or any part of it. The ocean quire any special jurisdiction over it or any part of it. The ocean being as much a part of the United States as of any other nation, the Constitution gave Congress the power to punish crimes there committed, and the last paragraph of article 3, section 2 of the Constitution provides that when crimes are not committed "within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed." The original Constitution did not require that any one to be tried for crime should be first indicted by a grand jury.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The original Constitution did provide that all crimes must be tried by a jury.

Mr. CARPENTER. The last paragraph of article 3, section 2 of the Constitution is as follows:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

There stood that provision side by side with the provision in regard to piracy. Of course there is but one way to construe the Constituto pracy. Or course there is out one way to construe the Constitu-tion. You cannot do that as you construe a statute by holding that where one clause conflicts with another the last clause must prevail over that which stands first in order, but Judge Story says in his Commentaries that each provision must be construed with reference to its subject-matter, and to be so construed as to carry the provision in regard to its subject-matter into force and execution, although it may conflict with other provisions of the Constitution upon other Applying this principle, you have here, in the first place, the provision in the broadest terms, that Congress might provide for the punishment of piracy, and then the provision that it should be tried in the State where the crime was committed. That of course would be a flat contradiction, and one section or the other upon the principle of construing a statute would have to fall. But the high seas not being within any State it would be impossible to try any offense committed on the high seas in the State in which the offense was committed; but according to the rule laid down by Judge Story and the Supreme Court it would follow that in a case of piracy the manifest purpose and in-tention of the Constitution was to be carried out upon that subject, and when they came to the trial of an offense which was committed within some State then that provision of the Constitution should be construed as the makers of it intended with reference to that particular subject. That would undoubtedly be the principle of construction. But here is the other question raised by the Senator from Massachusetts. Piracy being one of the offenses which the original Constitution au-Piracy being one of the offenses which the original Constitution authorizes Congress to punish, and which, of course, could not be tried within the limits of any State, the trial must necessarily be outside of the limits of any State. The Senator could well say the argument goes to this extent, for you could not try and punish a man in the limits of a State for an offense committed outside the limits of the State. Then you have struck down the provision which authorizes the United States to try the crime of piracy. That would undoubtedly be so but for the one reason, which I have already mentioned, that the two subjects containing provisions antagonistic, each provision must be construed with reference to its subject, although in conflict with the other. That is Judge Story's rule and the rule of all the courts. Then the further provision, the provision in regard to trial by jury, and all that sort of thing, comes in under the form of an amendment to the Constitution. of an amendment to the Constitution.

We all understand that an amendment to a statute as to a constitution is not to be construed with reference to its own subject-matter merely, but it repeals as much of the original instrument as it conflicts with. Now, then, upon this principle it would follow that the amendment had repealed the provision in regard to piracy. No court would hold that, I admit, and I do not think any court ought to. I think the principle laid down by Judge Story entirely and fully covers it, but in all respects except piracy which was covered by the original Constitution, and which in the nature of things is a separate subject altogether, these amendments of the Constitution would repeal and do repeal every provision of the original Constitution with which they conflict.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will permit me, the practical question, is there any lawful power under which an American consul may try an American who commits an assault on another American in the streets of Canton, sending him to six or twelve months' imprisonment there, or must he be sent tution is not to be construed with reference to its own subject-mat-him to six or twelve months' imprisonment there, or must be be sent on a six months' voyage home to take his trial, or can be not do that? Mr. CARPENTER. I have no hesitation whatever—

Mr. CARPENTER. I have no hesitation whatever—Mr. HOAR. Where do you get your authority to do that?
Mr. CARPENTER. I will tell you. I do not get it; I deny it; I say it is in flat violation of the Constitution. It was convenient to have it done, and convenience is getting to be higher than the Constitution of this country; but I do say it is denied by the Constitution that that man should be tried for the simplest offense except before a magistrate exercising judicial power, and that judicial power must be vested in courts, not in men.
Mr. HOAR. Then the Constitution has an extra-territorial force and governs the American citizen everywhere, according to the Senator?

Mr. CARPENTER. The Constitution says this—
Mr. HOAR. Where does the Constitution say you shall not do

Mr. HOAR. Where does the Constitution say you shall not do this thing in China?

Mr. CARPENTER. I will read the language that says so plainly. I see both the Senators from Massachusetts are combining to get this information, and I will stop to give it to them:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

There is nothing in the Constitution that says you can punish a man in Canton. Therefore the power is reserved under the tenth

Mr. DAWES. I take it the Senator means the people of the United States or the people in the States. Does that have any reference to what is going on in Canton?

Mr. CARPENTER. It does. It speaks of power being conferred upon consuls of the United States. I do not think the people of Canton, and that is what I have been arguing all the way through, or the Emperor of China, can confer any authority whatever upon any officer of the United States, and any American citizen being punished out of our jurisdiction is being punished under very doubtful authority. If he can be punished at all under the Constitution it must be because he is arraigned before a magistrate recognized by the Constitution, and that must be before a court. It has been asked the Constitution, and that must be before a court. It has been asked here, why not the consul? You need not call him a judge, says the Senator from Connecticut. No, you need not call him a judge, but you must make him a judge, you must give him the attributes of a judge; you must give him the good-behavior tenure; you must fix him a salary, and all those things which make a judge. See what the Constitution says, and let me have the attention of both the Massachusetts Senators on this question: setts Senators on this question:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and es-

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that means the courts of the United

Mr. CARPENTER. So do I, but I say the power cannot be invested anywhere except in a court of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. Not under that authority?

Mr. CARPENTER. No, nor anywhere else, because it says all judicial power shall be vested.

Mr. DAWES. All the judicial power in the United States shall be ested so and so.

Mr. CARPENTER. Of the United States is what it means. It is not the judicial power in the United States.

Mr. DAWES. I understand "all the judicial power of the United States" and "all the judicial power in the United States" are one and the same thing.

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not think any such thing. Great Britain may exercise judicial power in the United States with our permission. Great Britain is a monarchy. She may do what Parliament Great Britain

Mr. DAWES. Let me ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he means to say that Great Britain could exercise judicial authority in the

United States

Mr. CARPENTER. I say with our consent she can, and I say the sole difference between Great Britain and the United States is that Parliament, according to the theory of Great Britain and her constitution, is omnipotent; it may do what it pleases, while Congress, instead of being omnipotent, is the servant of the people, bound hand stead of being omnipotent, is the servant of the people, bound hand and foot within certain lines and certain principles.

Now, this judicial power must be vested in the courts, and I must say that I am getting sick and tired of defending democratic principles of the Constitution here in this body. I have done it for years. The democratic party have fallen away, dropped their flag, deserted their standard, and stand out in any direction where they may get an office, and have left me principally to stand by the old landmarks and the Constitution. [Laughter.] I am really tired. I call a halt.

Mr. McDONALD. I will explain that that service has been mere lip service, and that his real work has been on the other side.

Mr. CARPENTER. Nobody says that John Smith is a court because he is a consul at some place. He is not a judge even. He is not even called so.

not even called so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. When was the statute passed?
Mr. CARPENTER. I think the first one in 1860. It was to execute the Burlingame treaty. I must apologize to Senators who have charged me with having been on the Judiciary Committee for several years and with not having brought forward a bill for the repeal of these statutes. I must say, and I say truthfully, that until within two years I had no more idea that such a provision could be found on any statutes passed by Congress than I had that I should be hanged myself by the judgment of a lamp-lighter.

This third article confers, as I say, all the judicial power of the United States upon one Supreme Court. That Supreme Court might perhaps consist of one judge, but he would still be a court and could cally act when he was sating as a court. Take our significant outst.

only act when he was acting as a court. Take our circuit courts; the power may be lodged in a single judge; in all our district courts it is, and the law fixes the term of holding the district court, although there is but one judge. He can do things in term which he cannot do in vacation. He calls the court, opens it, adjourns it from day to day, and adjourns it sine die; but the distinction between the powers of the judge at chambers and the powers of the judge in court is clear and distinct.

Mr. DAWES. If it does not interrupt the Senator—
Mr. CARPENTER. Nothing interrupts me.
Mr. DAWES. If it does not interrupt the Senator to have an interrogatory put to him, I should like to have him inform me, if all the judicial power of the United States is confined to these particular courts, the Supreme Court and inferior courts, where is there any of it left to give to Great Britain in the form of a consent to her exercise of it here?

Mr. CAPPENTED

exercise of it here?

Mr. CARPENTER. There is not any.
Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to say that under the Constitution we could give it to Great Britain, because she was almighty.
Mr. CARPENTER. No, I did not. I said that under Parliament, which was omnipotent—
Mr. DAWES. Parliament being almighty, this Government could give England judicial power here!
Mr. CARPENTER. No, I said nothing of the kind. It is bad enough to have Massachusetts on my back as often as I am defending the Constitution without having her Senators pervert what I say, [Laughter.] A court, whether composed of one judge or forty, must be treated as a court. The jurisdiction is given by the Constitution to courts, not to men or officers.

Mr. DAWES. You did say a moment ago that Great Britain could exercise judicial authority here because of parliamentary omnipo-

Mr. CARPENTER. did not say anything of the kind. I said Great Britain could authorize her courts to do such things here or anywhere on the globe.

Mr. DAWES. With our consent?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, we do not make a row about it, but we have no authority to give them.

Mr. DAWES. Oh!

Mr. CARPENTER. Oh! What I mean is this-

Mr. BROWN. In that connection the Senator will allow me to ask him a question. The Constitution clearly shows that Congress has power to establish courts inferior to the Supreme Court of the ask nim a question. The Constitution clearly shows that Congress has power to establish courts inferior to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Government of China gives the United States by treaty the right to establish such courts in her dominions for the trial of American citizens who may be in that kingdom. Why is there any objection to its being done?

Mr. CARPENTER. I have maintained all the way through to-day that although it was one of those powers that everybody would call doubtful, I thought it might be done. It is pretty sharp straining of the Constitution—pretty close shaving.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman is a defender of State rights, and we are greatly obliged for his defense of them.

Mr. CARPENTER. I always defended State rights. I was attacked before I had been in the Senate Chamber thirty days because I let fall the accidental expression "State rights," which I maintained upon the ground that there were rights which the States had and which were bound to be protected; for instance the right to pay their own taxes, build their own highways, and provide for the administration of justice within their own sphere of action; that those were State rights which we could not interfere with, and that the great mistake which had led the country into an uproar and a war was that the which had led the country into an uproar and a war was that the cry of State rights meant State sovereignty. I was trying to draw that distinction. I never denied State rights. I will stand up and defend them as long as any man in the world.

Mr. BROWN. We are very thankful to the gentleman for standing by them.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am not on the subject of State rights exactly now. [Laughter.] When I am talking about the power of Congress to establish courts in China, I do not know what particular State I am defending except the State of China.

Mr. BROWN. That State has already given her consent, as I un-

Mr. CARPENTER. But the United States of America have not given their consent that we shall spend the people's money to maintain an unconstitutional principle.

Now, if I can get back once more. I have started so often on this point that I almost forget the point itself, but I believe it was that Congress can vest judicial power only in courts, nowhere else, and that the judge of such a court, if he be one, or the judges, if they be many, must hold their offices during good behavior, with a fixed salary, which cannot be diminished during their term of service, and that Congress cannot vest judicial power anywhere except in such tribunal. Mark the language of the Constitution; this was not written carelessly:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts—

Not individuals, not persons, not officers, not consuls, not foreign ministers, but in such courts; and this language was used by men familiar with the language of the English courts and the English law. They knew the distinction between a judge and a court; they knew the distinction between an individual and an officer and a judicial tribunal, and this language was used carefully and for a purpose; and then the limitation of the office to the life of the judge and all that would follow in order.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will allow me I will ask whether any judge holding the office from the United States must be for life? Are there not judges holding by a different tenure?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly it is illegal. The territorial judge is under another clause.

Mr. BROWN. Your position, then, I understand is, that no court is

Mr. BROWN. 1 our position, then, I understand is, that he court is legal unless it has a judge with a life office?

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me state my position. I maintain that every court which exercises the judicial power mentioned in the third article of the Constitution of the United States must be presided over article of the Constitution of the United States must be presided over by a judge holding his office for life or during good behavior, with a fixed salary, which cannot be diminished during his continuance in office. The Territories are not governed under this third article at all. The third article speaks of nothing but the judicial power of the Union as such. The government of the Territory springs entirely from another provision of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to admit new States into the Union; and the District of Columbia stands upon a separate provision which authorizes Congress to exercise exclusive power of legislation over the District. The power is just as complete and just as conclusive as the power of the State of New York for domestic purposes over the people of that State.

There are three kinds of judicial power included in this Constitution. One is in the District of Columbia, which springs from their general legislative power over the District; and one in the Territories, which springs from the power of Congress to admit new States, and carries with it as a corollary the power to hold a community in place, to protect them from the savages, protect them from thieves and from robbers, and preserve the peace and administer justice among them until they grow to a condition where they can be admitted as a State in the Union. All that is independent of the provisions of the third article. But here in the third article is the regulation of the judicial power proper of the United States. The United States Government is divided into three great departments—the legislative department, the powers being in Congress subject to the veto of the President; the executive department, vested in the President with certain qualifications; the judicial power, vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and qualifications; the judicial power, vested in one supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. Then it says what that power shall extend to, and then it provides that the judges shall hold their offices during good behavior and have their salaries fixed, &c. The Territories are outside of this provision entirely; but I do maintain, to answer the question of the Senator from Georgia fairly and squarely, that no man can exercise any part of the power contemplated by the third article of the Constitution except in a court, except as the judge of a court, and that he must have the qualities of a judge which the Constitution fixes for judges.

I offered the amendment more for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to this subject than for any other purpose; and yet I am inclined to think I will stand by the amendment and let the Senate vote upon it, for I should like to know how many Senators think there is a plausible excuse for continuing an unconstitutional

It is said here by some Senators that we have done this and that, even conceding it to be all wrong; yet inasmuch as we have been doing it for some years now it would be inconsistent to say we will not do it next year; that that would not look well as a part of the policy of a great nation. Well, I am rather inclined to the opinion that when we become fairly satisfied that we have been doing wrong for five years it is manly and proper to say we will not do it next year nor ever thereafter.

As my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] suggests to me, if this amendment is adopted it is notice to the Executive Department and to all the other Departments of the Government and to the committees and to Congress that the laws which you provide for these payments are to be changed or repealed. It is virtually an instrucwr. ALLISON. But let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that these powers are being exercised now in China.

Mr. CARPENTER. And they are paid for up to the 1st of July

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that; but suppose an American citizen should desire to bring himself within the provisions of these laws, is it not our plain duty to appropriate money to carry out these laws in that distant country until we do repeal the laws?

Mr. CARPENTER. We have done it up to the 1st of July next.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps we cannot repeal or change these laws by

Mr. CARPENTER. If human right is thought of any consequence in this Congress, we can certainly pass a bill within the next forty days. So I will stand by my amendment and see who is in favor of it and who is against it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I simply desire to say one thing for myself, and that is that in my judgment this whole question of the protection of our citizens in foreign countries is vested in the Government of the United States under the treaty-making power, not under the judicial power or any of those other powers relating to the government of citizens in this country; and I think that in all our relations with foreign governments the United States Government is just as much a pation as England or France. nation as England or France.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.]
Mr. CARPENTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think, Mr. President, that this is a very important question, and while I am ready to go as far as the Senator from Wisconsin in the way of protection of our citizens under the judicial power, I think I can see that great injury might follow to the rights of our citizens abroad from the adoption of this amendment. There is nothing better understood in the code of nations than that a sovereign is supreme within the limits of its own territory, and that it can hold amenable the citizen of any country who commits an offense there within its own courts and according to its own laws. That is a proposition which I imagine no lawyer will dispute. When it comes to offenses on the high seas the Senator from Wisconsin states the law correctly; no nation can appropriate the high seas. An American ship floats the ocean as a part of the territory to which she belongs; but when it comes to the territory of China that is a very different thing. We have no jurisdiction there whatever except what the sovereign of that country may consent to give us. Now, what is the character of this concession? It is a concession for the benefit of our own citizens to keep them out of the clutches of Chinese law. Is it not preferable that an American citizen who should unfortunately commit an offense within the territory of China should be tried by his own countrymen according to the forms of trial prevailing in his own country rather than to be turned over to the arbitrary methods of Chinese justice? And if you take away this power of trial you will have no right to demand that a criminal who happens to be an American shall be remitted to this country for trial, and he has either to be tried in the way that the foreign government says he shall or be tried in a Chinese court. I prefer to have this protection over the citizen and to have him tried before a consul rather than before a set of Chinese judges.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have only to say that the Committee on Appropriations made this appropriation to carry out the law as it exists. Various suggestions have been made about the revolutionary exists. Various suggestions have been made about the revolutionary character of the democratic party in failing to make appropriations to carry out existing laws. I am glad to be able to say that no such charge can be made now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 43; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be now taken on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, at the end of line 37 to insert:

For salary of charge d'affaires and consul-general of the United States in Romania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000 .

mania, (at Bucharest.) $4,000.

Mr. EATON. I have information which induces me to suppose that the description of the title of that office ought to be changed. It ought to be "consul-general and diplomatic agent." Therefore I move to so amend the amendment. I have consulted with as many of the committee as I have noticed here. My reason for moving the change is that we have just confirmed that officer with that title, "consul-general and diplomatic agent," and therefore I do not think it proper that he should be called a chargé.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On what part of the bill are we now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two amendments were passed over and this one is on page 3 of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut, if he will pardon me, that the description of the office being changed to precisely the one the Senate consented to—

mr. EATON. My motion is to make it correspond with the title of the efficer who was confirmed the other day by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand it and entirely concur in what the Senator from Connecticut states, because the Senate has never consented to the appointment of any other officer than that; but that sented to the appointment of any other officer than that; but that being done, this provision ought to be in the class of consuls and not in the class of diplomatic officers and ought to be left, therefore, in Schedule B, having Schedule B on page 4 corrected in its description in the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. EATON. The Senator from Vermont is quite right. I will say that the reason why it wasput on page 3 was that it was removed from Schedule B under consuls when the amendment was made by the committee, and therefore I will, in addition to moving that amendment, move to replace it under Schedule B after line 68.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The simplest way I suggest will be to disagree to this amendment on page 3, and then when we come to the one on line 69, page 4, change the description of the office according to the truth.

truth. Mr. EATON.

Mr. EATON. Very well; I have no objection to that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment just reported.

The amendment was rejected.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reserved will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 68 it is proposed to strike out:

For the chargé d'affaires of the United States in Boumania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000.

Mr. EATON. Instead of striking that out I propose to insert: For consul-general and diplomatic agent of the United States in Roumania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that there is an amendment pending to strike out lines 69 and 70. Ought not that to be acted upon first?

Mr. EDMUNDS. But a paragraph can always be perfected, according to the extraordinary notions of the Senate, before it is stricken

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The SECRETARY. After line 68 it is moved to insert:

For consul-general and diplomatic agent of the United States in Roumania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now we should disagree to the recommendation of the committee to strike the whole clause out. That will make the Journal straight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations is to strike out the clause as amended, which will be read.

to the amendment.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

For consul-general and diplomatic agent of the United States in Roumania, (at Bucharest,) $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now the question is on striking that out as

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the clause as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, on page 14, lines 323 to 325, the phrase is:

For rent of court-house and jall, with ground appurtenant, at Yeddo, or such other place as shall be designated, $3,850.

I think that after the word "place," in line 324, there should be inserted the words "in Japan," so as to confine this expenditure of money to the country to which it was evidently intended to refer.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And on the same point precisely, in the following paragraph, line 327, there is a similar appropriation:

For rent of buildings for legation and other purposes at Peking, or such other place as shall be designated, $3,100.

I think after the word "place" there should be inserted "in China." I move that amendment.

Mr. EATON. I do not know that there is any objection whatever to that, except that we follow the custom of years in this matter. The estimates are so made, but I do not think there is any objection to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not doubt that the estimates were that way, but the Senate is not responsible for the estimates, and it is always better, I think, in legislation when we are appropriating money to confine its expenditure to what was evidently intended and properly intended to be its object. I should not wish to give the incoming Administration the opportunity to consider that "other place" allowed the renting of a building in the District of Columbia, or at Hong-Kong, (which is a British possession by the way,) or at Siam, or somewhere else if they happened to be a little short of the appropriation there and wanted to transfer this money. My only object is to make it secure. it secure it secure.

Mr. EATON. I hardly suppose that even the incoming Administration would venture on anything of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know; for they have precedents before 1861 that would warrant a very large diversion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to amend on page 4, in line 82, by striking out the words "and Halifax" and inserting at the end of line 83 "and Halifax, $4,000; "so that the provision will read:

For the consuls-general at Vienna, Frankfort, Rome, Constantinople, each $3,000, $15,000, and Halifax, $4,000.

The Secretary of State has strongly recommended that the salary

The Secretary of State has strongly recommended that the salary of the officer at Halifax shall be increased to $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the recommendation.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have not got it in my pocket, but I have

Mr. BLAINE. There are very strong reasons for doing it.
Mr. CARPENTER. The commercial interests of this country are

Mr. CARPENTER. The commercial interests of this country are so great as to require this increase.

Mr. EATON. I hope that amendment will not be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it in order?

Mr. EATON. I do not raise any point of order, but I will simply say that the committee have investigated this matter thoroughly, and while I agree that the Department recommends the raising of the salary from $2,000 to $4,000 the committee reported that it could be properly placed with the other cases named in this paragraph at $3,000. We see no reason to make that more than $3,000.

Mr. CARPENTER. The amendment to be complete should be this: In line $2 strike out the words "and Halifax" and the words

"$15,000," and insert "and Halifax $4,000, $16,000 in all." That should be the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The bill already increases the salary of the consul-general at Halifax $1,000, and the effect of the amendment is to increase it $2,000. Of course it is out of order if a point of order is raised, which I think I shall have to raise.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not seem to me that this can be out of order if the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill is order if the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No point of order has been raised.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but I only desired to see whether it could be made. As I understand now, this cossul-general at Halifax receives $2,000 by existing law. The House of Representatives proposes to raise his salary to $3,000, and that we find in the bill. It would certainly be competent for us to change it from $3,000 to $2,500 by an amendment; and if so, why is it not competent to increase it $4,000?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because the rule says you shall not increase a provision in the bill without the recommendation of the head of a Department and without its being referred to the committee, and so

Mr. ALLISON. But we have not only the recommendation of the head of the Department, but we have also that recommendation referred to the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear the recommendation of the head

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear the recommendation of the head of the Department read.

Mr. ALLISON. I know we have such a recommendation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. CARPENTER. There is no way provided in which the fact how it is recommended by the Department shall be proven. I believe the recommendation is before the committee itself, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is aware of it.

Mr. EATON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the recommendation read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the recommendation read as evidence

Mr. EATON. It is in the estimates, and there is a letter from the Secretary of State in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the letter read that we may know what the ground is for putting up that salary at an English naval station over all the others.

Mr. EATON. I will read the letter:

Mr. EATON. I will read the letter:

Department of State,
Washington, December 10, 1880.

Sir: On the 11th of June last the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed Mr. Mortimer M. Jackson to be consul-general at Halifax, with a jurisdiction embracing all of the eastern maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and including the province of Newfoundland. The appointment so made raised the grade of the consular office at that post, and was conferred upon Judge-Jackson for his faithful and valuable services as consul at Halifax since 1861.

The jurisdiction and duties imposed by the appointment, in their relation to all the consulates and subordinate agencies in the maritime provinces, place the office in the same position as that now held by the consul-general at Montreal toward the consulates and subordinate offices in the other provinces of the Dominion. In addition to this, the consulate-general at Halifax is now charged with the preliminary examination into the recurring difficulties between the American fishing fleet and the local officers of the Dominion, and with the adjustment of the disputes arising on those vessels, and the subordinate officers in his jurisdiction refer to him for instructions in matters of ordinary administration. Apart, however, from the greatly increased duties and responsibilities imposed upon the consul-general, it is to be observed that the appointment of an officer of that grade has had the effect of drawing attention in the Dominion to the importance attached to the office at Halifax in its relation to questions concerning the fisheries. In connection with those questions Judge Jackson has rendered the most efficient service, and an adequate salary and outlit for the office suggest themselves as a recognition of his usefulness and fidelity, without regard to what is demanded by the enlarged jurisdiction intrusted to him. In the view of the Department, the appropriation for salary should be made so as to embrace the period since June 11, 1850, th spects.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

The committee did not change their opinion at all. That letter was considered by them, and they are clearly of the opinion that $3,000 at that point is all that is required.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is $4,000 at Montreal.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is $4,000 at Montreal.

Mr. EATON. There is more business at Montreal than in Halifax.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Secretary of State does not so certify.

Mr. EATON. The Secretary of State does not certify at all in regard to the business at Montreal, begging my friend's pardon.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] remarked in his seat that the business at Montreal was tenfold larger than at Halifax. I presume the mercantile business, the bulk of it when you count it in dollars and cents, is much larger at Montreal; but I precount it in dollars and cents, is much larger at Montreal; but I presume there is no port in the world where as many American sail are dealt with by the consul as at Halifax, and I presume the duties of the American consul-general at Halifax are more onerous and exacting and tedious by far than those of the corresponding officer at Montreal. You cannot quite measure the compensation that a consul is entitled to by the amount of commercial transactions that may be involved at that port. At Montreal the duties are important. They are not half as engrossing and exacting as those of the consul-general at Halifax. I have no doubt that the recommendation is well and strongly based, and it ought to be responded to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator from Maine has referred to the observation I made, and with entire propriety, for I made it, that the business at Montreal is tenfold that at Halifax, I wish to say that I think it is. The business of Montreal is different from that of Halifax in general. The business at Montreal is proper consular business, commercial affairs, and it is very heavy and very extensive. The commercial business at Halifax is almost nil. Occasionally when an American fisherman gets into trouble in respect of the fishing question in the northeastern waters the consul-general at Halifax is called upon to assert his rights and to protect his interests and to write the proper note to the proper Canadian official and to write to the Secretary of State a report of the circumstances. That is all true, but in respect of the labor and time necessary to the performance of his duties I repeat the observation that in my belief—and I think I know something about it—the work at Halifax is not one-tenth that at Montreal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected. Mr. LOGAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator if there is any probability of getting through with this bill to-day.

Mr. EATON. So far as I know, it cannot take but a very few minutes longer. I know of no more amendments to be proposed.

Mr. LOGAN. Ido not wish to interfere with it, but I was going to ask for an executive session.

Mr. EATON. I do not know that there will be any more amendments.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I shall not interpose at present.

The amendments were ordered to be engressed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, Mr. President— Mr. VOORHEES. I call for the regular order. Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Indiana indulge me a moment? I rise for information.

ment? I rise for information.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the regular order be taken up.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to make a statement which will only take a moment. There is a joint resolution from the House appropriating $2,500 for the expenses of an international sanitary conference which is now in session in this city, and as I understand from the Secretary of State, it is subject to daily expenses. The Committee on Appropriations reported it favorably; I think it will only take a few minutes, and though I do not wish to interfere with gentlemen, I beg my friend from Indiana to allow this to be taken up.

Mr. VOORHEES. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. VOORHEES. There will be no objection to that.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has the floor, I understand, and he has yielded to me a moment to make a motion, on condition that I will renew his motion to go into executive ssion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Senator from Illinois will allow this joint resolution at least to be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that be done after I have made my motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a right to the floor to call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I have the floor.
Mr. VOORHEES. I want an understanding. Here the Senator from Kentucky says he is to make a motion and then yield to the Senator from Illinois to make a motion for an executive session. ask that the regular order be taken up, and then I am ready to yield to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. VOORHEES. With that understanding I yield to the Senator from Kentucky to make his motion and the Senator from West Virginia to have his resolution passed, to which I presume there is no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is satisfactory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be laid before the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Hol-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I had a bill of very great importance in which I take very deep interest set as a special order for to-morrow; but I understand the Senate has resolved to adjourn, when it does adjourn to-day, until Monday; and I ask to have that order continued to another day. It is a bill to pension the Mexican soldiers. I want the order extended so that the bill shall be the special order for Tuesday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must insist on the regular order, Mr. President,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

Mr. VOORHEES. On that the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. McDon-ALD,] my colleague, has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, upon which the Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Indiana

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Indiana and to the Senate to allow—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Indiana. Does he give way to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. Then I ask the Senator from Indiana to yield to me one moment only in order that I may ask the Senate and the Senator from Indiana to allow the unfinished business, the regular order, to be informally laid aside in order that the joint resolution mentioned by the Senator from West Virginia may be considered. It cannot take five minutes to dispose of that joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist on the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President—
Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Indiana will yield to me to make a motion, I believe.

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir.
Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope that will be voted down.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw that motion for a moment to permit me to introduce a bill, which I was prevented from introducing this morning.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator can do that before we get through, after the doors are closed. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the Senator from Illinois will not insist npon his motion at present.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall insist on it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I trust the Senate will vote it

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division-ayes 30, noes 16.

I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The order of the Senate must be executed to clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. A motion to adjourn is always in

Mr. CARPENTER. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. CARPENTER. I rise to a point of order.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at four o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 7, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Samuel Domer, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELFORD. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

JAMES I. WADDELL.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6725) to remove the political disabilities of James I. Waddell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES I. GRAVES.

Mr. KNOTT also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6726) to remove the political disabilities of Charles I. Graves, of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JOHN E. BOULIGNY.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of the widow and heirs of John E. Bouligny, in regard to lands granted by Congress; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS IN WIND RIVER VALLEY.

Mr. AINSLIE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1779) for the relief of certain settlers in the Wind River Valley, Wyoming Territory; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5309) granting a pension to Walter D. Plowden; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPSON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6727) granting a pension to Anne R. Voorhees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

printed.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (8. No. 562) granting an increase of pension to Thornton Smith; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3812) granting a pension to Sarah Lupkin Merchant; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6278) granting a pension to John H. Weaver; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6728) granting a pension to Allen G. Bernard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2933) granting a pension to Cutler S. Dobbins; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (8. No. 335) granting a pension to Simeon Crain; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3555, a bill (H. R. No. 6729) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JACOB CRAMER.

Mr. VOORHIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 283) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees having been concluded, the Chair will now recognize gentlemen to make reports who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

ASSIMILATED RANK FOR SHIP-CARPENTERS.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely upon a petition that the President of the United States be authorized to grant assimilated rank to naval officers of the United States known as ship-carpenters; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR THE CHAPLAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask leave of absence indefinitely for the Chaplain of the House, who has been called home by information that his wife is at the point of death.

There was no objection; and leave was accordingly granted.

AWARD OF HALIFAX FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask consent to submit at this time, for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of State be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House all information in the State Department not heretofore communicated to Congress in reference to the Halifax fishery award of $5,500,000 paid by this Government to Great Britain, and especially relating to the alleged fictitious statistics and perjured testimony imposed upon the arbitrators, and upon which evidence the award was made; and also whether this Government has taken any steps to procure a verification of a recently published statement of Professor Henry Youle Hind on this subject.

There was no objection; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I ask permission to make a statement touching the subject of this resolution just referred.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Speaker, it is more than a year since my attention was called to the alleged fraudulent, false, fictitious, and the probably manufactured and forged testimony which was brought before the Halifax fisheries commission by the British officials who managed the case. Since that time many facts have come to my knowledge. Much information has been furnished that warrants me in calling the attention of this House and the country to the subject. in calling the attention of this House and the country to the subject. and which will justify me in alluding to it as a great international

By this talse and traudulent testimony this Government was most unjustly condemned to pay an award of $5,500,000, which was denounced by this Government and official notice given that this Government would not be bound in the future by its alleged findings. And very soon the important so-called evidence adduced before that tribunal will again be brought forward as true and as a basis to settle the rights of this Government and the people in the great fisheries question. It is fitting, therefore, that this resolution should be introduced, and by permission of the mover I make this statement and submit certain documents to be printed.

On July 4, 1871, the treaty between Great Britain and the United States was proclaimed. This treaty among other things provided for the settlement of the questions relating to the fisheries on the North Atlantic coast, &c. It gave United States fishermen the right to catch sea-fish on this coast, and all bays, harbors, &c., but not shell-fish, salmon, or shad. This limitation it is important to notice in view of the substance of the matter hereinafter referred to. This treaty provided for the appointment of three commissioners, one by Great Britain, one by the United States, the third conjointly by the two governments or by the King of Belgium. Hon Ensign H. Kellogg, appointed by the United States, Sir Alexander T. Galt, named by Her Britannic Majesty, and Monsieur Maurice Delfosse constituted the commission.

by the United States, Sir Alexander T. Galt, named by Her Britanine Majesty, and Monsieur Maurice Delfosse constituted the commission. The commission convened in Halifax June 15, 1877, and an alleged award was made by two of the commissioners November 23, 1877, a protest or disclaimer being attached by Commissioner Kellogg, awarding $5,500,000 to be paid by the United States. This sum so awarded, although it was conceded by the British and claimed by American writers to be not binding upon either government because not manimous, was duly and promptly paid.

The history of the appointment of the third commissioner was such that it was looked upon with suspicion by the American people at that it was looked upon with suspicion by the American people at the time of the appointment, or as soon as the facts in connection therewith were made known.

Time and again it is said the proposed selection of Mr. Delfosse was not assented to by the United States Government when proposed by England, and it was always considered that the efforts on the part of the British Government to procure his appointment, particularly after the United States had declined to consent, was in the greatest degree indelicate and suspicious, and not compatible with high national honor. The subsequent appointment of this same gentleman, notwithstanding the action of the United States Government, and the acceptance of the appointment by Mr. Delfosse, after it was well known that the United States Government had declined to consent to his appointment, was a still greater surprise; more particularly when the ground of that non-consent was substantially that it was feared he might have a preconceived bias, or a subjection to influences of one of the arbitrating parties.

Subsequent action tended strongly to show that the fears of the American people were not groundless.

A high official of the British Government, the minister of justice of Canada, it is alleged, before the commission had organized, had declared in an official paper-

That the amount of compensation that we (i. e., the Canadians) would receive from our fisheries must be an amount unanimously agreed upon by the commissioners, and that therefore we must be willing to accept such compensation as the American commissioner would be willing to concede to us, or we should receive nothing.

And the London Times, July 6, 1877, while the commission was in session—a paper whose announcements are considered quasi-official said in relation to this commission in unqualified language:

On every point that comes before it for decision the unanimous consent of all its members is, by the terms of the treaty, necessary before an authoritative verdict can be given.

The American commissioner, when two commissioners proposed to make an award, raised the point at once that the commission had not the power to make an award except the same was made unanimously, and further and promptly attached his protest to the alleged award. As to other commissions established by the same treaty, it was provided expressly that an award could be made by a majority, while there was no such provision as to this Halifax commission.

Notwithstanding all this and much more this member of the com-mission, who was placed upon the board as heretofore suggested, has-tened to join hands, as it was suspected beforehand he possibly might, with the British commissioner; made the alleged award against the opinions of British writers that the award must be unanimous; decided by a mere majority the very initial, crucial point on which depended the legality of any action; decided it without giving the representatives and counsel of either government an opportunity to be heard upon it—indeed, as I am informed, without letting them know that they had even considered the point, or that such a question was involved.

Mr. REAGAN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberray] if the facts to which he now refers ever came to the knowledge of our commissioner.

Mr. NEWBERRY. They never came to the knowledge of our commissioner, and were not made known until the whole proceedings were finished, and I think not until the award was paid. I have no knowledge that anybody connected with that commission ever knew any-thing about these facts save Professor Henry Youle Hind, who was appointed by both parties to thoroughly index the documents and testimony. I think it took him nearly a year, perhaps more, to complete his analytical index. And I will tell you how this matter came

In the papers presented to him by the British Government, unfor tunately for them, was a true statement of the official statistics, with interlineations in ink and in different handwritings, showing they had been manufactured and forged for this purpose. In a subsequent letter Professor Hind says that he has put this information where it can be produced when wanted.

Mr. REAGAN. Then our Government had no knowledge of these frauds before Congress voted the award. Mr. NEWBERRY. It had not.

Mr. REAGAN. One question more. How was it that the third commissioner was forced upon our commissioner without his con-

Mr. NEWBERRY. Not upon our commissioner.

Mr. REAGAN. I understood the statement of the gentleman to be that there was a British commissioner, an American commissioner, and that a third commissioner, or arbiter, if you choose to call him so, was forced upon our commissioner against his consent.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Oh, no; not that.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Oh, no; not that.
Mr. REAGAN. I misunderstood the gentleman, then.
Mr. NEWBERRY. The American Government appointed one commissioner, Mr. Kellogg, and the British Government appointed a commissioner, Sir A. T. Galt. By the treaty, if those two commissioners could not agree upon a third man, the King of Belgium was to appoint a third one. The British Government suggested that Mr. Delfosse be put on the commission, but our Government would not consent to that. I understand, but I do not know the fact, that when the time had nearly expired for the Belgium Government to appoint a third commissioner the United States Government finally consented to the placing of Mr. Delfosse upon the commission. That I understand is the history of the matter, of course unwritten, but well established by tradition. tablished by tradition.

Two days ago I had another document placed in my hand containing far more explicit and definite statements in regard to this false and fraudulent testimony.

Mr. RICE. What is the date of that document?

Mr. NEWBERRY. It is dated November 23, 1880, or nearly two months ago. It seems incredible that such conclusive action should have been taken, such an extraordinarily hostile decision arrived at, on a question upon which hung not only the legality and propriety of their award, but which would very likely call in question, if not actually impugn, their personal and official honor, without referring it to the eminent and distinguished lawyers and jurists whom the two governments respectively had deputed to watch their interests and discuss disputed questions of law which might be raised before the commissioners. Add to this the extraordinary fact that this arbitration, commencing June 15, was continued almost continuously for four months and six days, and on Wednesday, at the close of a session on October 21, the final argument was ended, and the commission adjourned until Friday the 23d, over one day only, and at two o'clock on the 23d the president read what he was pleased to term an award, signed by himself and the British commissioners.

It is to be noted that there are three large volumes of one thousand pages each of testimony, statistics, and arguments, and yet these reference are three large volumes of the todasate pages each of testimony, statistics, and arguments, and yet these two astute commissioners, hastily, giving no reasons, referring to no data, no evidence, deciding all questions against the United States, not even indicating that the United States could by any possibility have had or even presented any counter-claim, so far as appears, without even a meeting for consultation, made the alleged award for

It is with feelings of pride and patriotic satisfaction that I add that the American people and the Congress of the United States paid this iniquitous, illegal award without a question.

It has been deemed necessary to make this statement as introductory of the momentous question which follows naturally and not unexpectedly from the foregoing statement of facts. It needed but what is to follow to round up and complete in its fullness this disgraceful and scandalous proceeding.

I charge that the privileges and the integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and of both the Executive and Legislative Departments of the Government have been most grossly invaded, in that—

First. In order to procure the passage of an act of Congress appropriating $5,500,000 to pay what was called the Halifax fishery award also and fraudulent testimony and statements and altered official documents were adduced and brought before said commission and this House, which will be found at large in volumes 18, 19, and 20, Executive Documents of the House of Representatives, second session of the Forty-fifth Congress.

Second. Such false and fraudulent statements, &c., consist of altered official public documents, tables, and statistics of the Canadian and British Governments, which were presented to the commissioners as part of the "Case," so called, of the British Government, and of the evidence to sustain such alleged "Case."

Third. That such alterations and falsifications were made designedly and continuously by the authorized agents and officers of the British Government in presenting their case and evidence to said commis-sioners in order to corruptly influence said commissioners in their de-cision and the Congress of the United States in making the necessary cision and the Congress of the United States in making the necessary appropriation to pay said award so corruptly obtained.

Fourth. That the false and fraudulent alterations and testimony were of such a nature as to materially and largely enhance the value of the privileges given to American fishermen, and at the same time materially diminish the advantages which would accrue to the Canadian Government and its inhabitants under the said treaty.

Fifth. That these false and fraudulent alterations and testimony were called to the attention of the agents and officials having charge of the preparation of the said "Case" of the British Government before they were presented to said commissioners, and said officials persisted in such false and fraudulent testimony after their admission of its falsity.

sisted in such false and fraudulent testimony after their admission of its falsity.

Sixth. That extraordinary precautions were taken by said agents and officials of the British Government to prevent the discovery of these fraudulent alterations and testimony by the United States officials, and success for the time being crowned their efforts.

Seventh. That proof of the existence of these extraordinary, false, fraudulent alterations of testimony was communicated to said Commissioner Delfosse and placed in his hands after said alleged award was made, to the end that he might, as substantially the arbitrator between the two nations, take such action as right, justice, and equity and such as the honor of the inculpated party might demand; that said Delfosse, in a letter, referring to this actual proof of false and fraudulent alterations of testimony, declined to take any action in the premises, but used the following remarkable language in reference to the same: ence to the same:

I have not in my possession here the documents which would be required to elucidate the points, which are not stated clearly and precisely in your letter, but it strikes me that the errors or alterations of figures, values, &c., in certain tables do not, as recorded in your letter, bear out the accusation of intentional and systematic fraud, for while some are errors by less, others are errors by morc.

It will here be seen that Mr. Delfosse does not dispute the allega-It will here be seen that Mr. Delfosse does not dispute the allegations of falsehood and alterations, but seeks to avoid their force by a weak attempt to discuss the weight and effect of the false evidence, and by the intimation that errors, being some "more" and some "less," correct each other. This is a characteristic remark and criticism, to be expected from one who accepted a place upon the commission after he had been objected to by the United States; but it shows more clearly than anything else could the baseless character of the award. His remarks prove that he was so fatally ignorant of the Case—the proof, the points involved—that it made no difference to him as an impartial index whether the testimony produced hefter him was true proof, the points involved—that it made no difference to him as an impartial judge whether the testimony produced before him was true or false. His reply proves that he did not understand or comprehend that the false and fraudulent alterations making amounts "less" and others making amounts "more" were each designedly made for the express purpose of belittling the advantages to the Canadians and enhancing the advantages to the United States.

Eighth. That the existence and proof of such false and fraudulent alterations and testimony was afterward communicated to said British Commissioner Galt, and he was asked in the following remarka-ish Commissioner Galt, and he was asked in the following remarkaish Commissioner Galt, and he was asked in the following remarkable language to be addressed by one British official to another, each of whom were actors in the proceedings of said commission, "to press inquiry into the matter without fear or favor," "to initiate an open inquiry into this uncondoned offense, which, as it stands, is fraught with grave consequences to millions of your countrymen, and threatens to undermine the harmony and good relations which at present exist between the neighboring people of the United States and Canada."

Sir A. T. Galt was also cautioned that "Canada alone will suffer from the duplicity with which you have now been familiar since November, 1878." * " "She" (Canada) "has become the victim of nefarious work, which has a growing tendency to unsettle and impair the peaceful relations between her people and those of her great pair the peaceful relations between her people and those of her great and powerful neighbor. The direct consequences which Canada has to fear, unless atonement be made—none knowing this better than yourself—lie in the direction of retaliatory measures, which may per-meate and disturb the industrial and political status of the country throughout many years to come."

Sir A. T. Galt peremptorily declined to take any steps toward this monstrous wrong, and it is believed attempted to silence this great national scandal by the hand of power, as would seem to appear from the closing sentence of one of his letters hereafter referred to.

Ninth. That it is believed that proof can be produced that the existence of these false and fraudulent alterations and testimony was communicated to the British Government in England, who also declined to atone for this great national wrong or to bring the perpe-Tenth. That the evidence of the truth of these charges is in existence ready to be produced.

The full history of these false and fraudulent alteration of statistics, and public documents of the Dominion of Canada, and their discovery, and the attempts that have been made to have the same investigated and proven true or false by said Commissioner Delfosse, and subsequently by said Galt and the British Government, and their refusal so to do, are fully detailed in the following letters and

1. Open letter of Professor Henry Youle Hind, compiler of the index of the documents and proceedings of the Halifax fisheries commission, appointed and paid conjointly by the British and United States

This and following letters are part of the correspondence in relation to this matter:

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, March 27, 1880.

This and following letters are part of the correspondence in relation to this matter:

Windson, Nova Scotta, March 27, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that I have received from Washington a copy of a resolution introduced into the United State Senate by the honorable Mr. Brains, which resolution was adopted. I gather that this intimation of inquiry is the natural outcome of the discoveries made by me during the discharge of the duties with which I had been jointly intrusted by the British and United States representatives during the late international contention at Halifax, and that the responsibility now rests with me to deliver proof of my allegations.

You have been directly made aware, through verbal and written communications extending over a period of sixteen months, that the result of the examination of the documents and proceedings of the Halifax commission, officially placed by the mutual consent of the litigants in my hands for analysis and indexing, resulted in the discovery of numerous and gross falsifications of the fishery records of the Dominion government, in quantities, in denominations, and in prices; also, in the adoption and use of these falsified statistics in a contention with the Government of the United States equally with great Britain in this matter, I have announced my intention of presenting myself at Washington when requested, to answer questious, and supply proof of the truthfulness of all my statements, and to circumscribe and limit, while time and opportunity permit, the inseparable evils which arise from dishonest dealing by one class of representatives in a peaceful contention between two foremost nations.

It is quite unnecessary for me to refer to the unwearied steps I have taken during the past two years to have the falsified statistics presented in the British "Case" and the use made of them, properly examined by competent authorities either in Canada or in England. I regret to say that I must attribute mainly to your influence the disregard of my warnings and av

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any information in possession of the Government touching the alleged false statistics and fabricated testimony imposed upon the Halifax commission and used as the basis of their award in the matter of the fisheries.

before you wrote the extraordinary paragraph above quoted, the exports of Nova Scotia amounted to about three millions of dollars, while the total value of the catch of Upper and Lower Canada reached only $832,646. (P. 242-3, Vol. II.)

I venture now to ask you to bridge the gap between 1862 and 1877, turning your attention to the paragraphs numbered 1, 2, and 3 in the "Reply on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's Government to the answer of the United States of America," in the late contention at Halifax. 'These paragraphs are thus introduced:

attention to the paragraphs numbered 1. % and 3 in the "Reply on behalf of Her Britamic Majesty's Government to the answer of the United States of America," in the lato contention at Halifax.¹ These paragraphs are thus introduced:

"The commissioners will readily perceive, on referring to the table appended to the 'Case'—

"1. That the increase of catch by British subjects consists principally of those kinds of fish which are not affected in any way whatever by the remission of the United States customs duties under the treaty of Washington, trasmuch as fresh fish was admitted for ome time previously.

"2. That the cargragate annual value of fish caught by the British subjects increased in much greater ratio for the four years preceding the complete operation of the treaty than for succeeding years.

"3. That the value of the British catch in 1872—the year before the treaty took effect as regards customs duties—amounted to more than double that of 1869, while the value of 1875 was considerably less than that of 1873."

In order that you may 'readily perceive' "the effect of this table, I will take the last paragraph first, for when its bearings are pointed out the intentions of paragraph No. 2 will become manifers.

"Case." "The value of the British catch in 1872 amounted to more than double in the "Case." "The value of the British catch in 1873 amounted to more than double that of 1862. "The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true in so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true. In so far as it concerns the figures given in the "Case." The statement is true. The statement is the state of the state of the sta work.

Paragraph No. 1 calls your attention to the fact that the table in the "Case" shows "that the increase of catch by British subjects consists principally of those kinds of fish which are not affected in any way whatever by the remission of the United States customs duties under the treaty of Washington, inamuch as fresh ish was admitted free of duty into the United States at the time of the treaty of Washington, and for some time previously." The attention of the commissioners is therefore especially called to the items "fresh fish" in the table in the "Case." Now there are only five enumerations of "fresh fish" in this table. These are:

1871 1874 1875 1874 1869	Fish used Sea-fish Sea-fish Herring Salmon	181 tons 2, 200 pounds 20 barrels 19, 341, number	$146, 700 7,157 110 100 19, 341

These items are utterly insufficient for any comparison such as would require the attention of the commissioners, and they are thrown back upon those fish which are charged as fresh fish, such, for instance, as salmon in ice, haddock at six cents a pound, sea-trout at six cents a pound, halibut at six cents a pound, &c. By way of illustration let us take haddock. You are told in the table in the "Case," to which your attention is specially called, that in 1870 there were caught in the Dominion of Canada 1,747 barrels of haddock and 24,000 fish. This is a delusion. By reference to the fishery reports for 1870, (page 312.) you will find that 11,000 quintals of haddock were left out, and 11,000 quintals of haddock reduced to the form of "fresh fish" represents 3,300,000 pounds. You are told that there were caught in 1873, 1874, and 1875 the following quantities of haddock at six cents a pound:

1873	1, 892, 726 4, 104, 532 4, 695, 928 15, 073, 100	$113, 563 56 246, 271 92 281, 755 68 904, 386 00

The table for 1876 was put in the "Case," and it professed to show that the 15,073,100 pounds of haddock was really a fish-catch worth $904,386, whereas subsequent records show that it was chiefly marketed as cured fish at a price very much less than the official recorded price. Now, if you take the 11,000 quintals left out of the enumeration of 1870 and reduce it to the form of fish at six cents a pound, it will change the aspect of the haddock catch in 1870. These omissions and methods of charging alter legitimate conclusions. In 1877, when the "fresh fish" illusion was no longer necessary, the Canadian returns sink suddenly from 15,073,100 pounds, at six cents, in 1876, to 129,048 pounds in 1877, the remaining portion of the catch being recorded as hundred-weights, at $3.50 per hundred-weight, or one and one-half cents a pound for green fish.

The haddock produce of 1876 and other years is shown to have been marketed in the West Indies, Brazil, Spain, &c., as cured fish, although the record of the catch appeared in the fishery report with a "fresh fish" price.

In a similar manner 127,320 boxes of smoked salmon falsely recorded as produced in 1874, and 57,880 boxes of smoked salmon in 1875 sink to one box in 1870 and one box in 1875 are inventions which disappear in succeeding years.

This illustration ought to afford you an insight into the real value of paragraph No. 1, to which your attention and that of the other arbitrators was especially directed in the "Reply." These three paragraphs in the "Reply" disclose a part of the use to which the falsified table in the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" was put in influencing the minds of the arbitrators, and one illustration of the method employed in defeating the argument of the United States agent by its use must suffice for the present.

The British "Reply" to the United States "Answer" says as follows:

"With regard to the statement in page 10 of the "Answer." that for a number of years past the value of the mackerel in Eritish waters by Canadian fisherme

Mr. Tache's table, which is the correct enumeration, shows a marked decline in the products of the mackerel fishery. It is the same with regard to barrels of herring as recorded in the "Case." The comparison between the true statement as embodied in the fishery reports and the false statement as given in the table in the "Case" shows an opposite conclusion, namely, a decline in the herring catch for the years named.

¹ Mr. Tache, the deputy minister of agriculture, was deputed in 1876 by the then minister of marine and fisheries to prepare a series of tables from the fishery reports showing a true exhibit of the Canadian fisheries. This exhibit embraces twenty-two tables and was printed in 1876. A portion is reprinted in my papers (Part I, page 43, and Part II, page 55) prepared for the commission. Part I, containing the important portion of Mr. Tache's tables, was given by Mr. Ford, the British agent, to Mr. Foster, the United States agent, near the close of the proceedings; and thus Mr. Tache's paper became public property. In Mr. Tache's enumeration of the mackerel catch "cans of mackerel" are reduced to barrels. But the "cans of mackerel" at fifteen cents a pound, and seem to have relation to the subject of "fresh fish," noticed in Paragraph I.

4 One hundred thousand barrels are fraudulently added to the official returns in this enumeration.

When the falsified table in the "Case" and the statistics put in as evidence, and the ase made of them are contrasted with available testimony, as they will probably be during the inquiry, more startling illustrations of malfeasance will be revealed. It will be shown that the true table was rejected and the false table chosen.

No more searching and convincing argument of the effect of the falsified table in the "Case" can be found or can be created than the simply expressed conviction of its supposed merits, and the deductions drawn from those supposed merits, contained in the official report of Professor Spencer F. Baird, the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, to Mr. Secretary Evarts. Professor Baird says: "Accurate statistical information is the one essential foundation on which protective legislation must rest." The reference is in a foot-note.

The United States Commissioner of Fisheries accepted these statistics, which are identical with those given in the "Case" in good faith as records of government, and he generously commended them as stated in the foot-note. They were presented to the Dominion Parliament in 1878, and constitute the leading feature, specially referred to, of the fishery report for 1877.

Suppose that the United States Commissioner of Fisheries had found out during the sittings of the commission that these records of government were falsified throughout in quantities, denominations, and prices, what would have been the effect of paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 in the "Reply," to which your attention as arbitrator was especially directed!

I have given you a few illustrations of the use to which some of the immoral and illegal artifices introduced into the Reitigh "Case" were part in its management.

I have given you a few illustrations of the use to which some of the immoral and illegal artifices introduced into the British "Case" were put in its management. It is unnecessary here to add more instances of so degrading an exhibition of diplomacy in an international contention. But for your prevailing influence, I cannot doubt that my proofs would have been readily received and examined at the foreign office in 1878.

doubt that my proofs would have been readily received and examined at the foreign office in 1878.

Silence will afford no shelter from the evils which the acceptance of these dishonest means for obtaining an end is certain to invite, but which might have been avoided if my efforts had been met with encouragement in place of repulse. Every facility and chance was offered you for creditably fulfilling this daty.

I deeply regret to be compelled to notice that there is a startling contrast between the parting words you are reported to have very recently used in relation to the United States in your farewell speech as "high commissioner for Canada in England" and the wise counsel Lord Dufferin kindly offered when he separated from the peeple he had governed so well.

His Lordship feelingly referred to the cordial relations it should be the highest endeavor of Canada to maintain with "the generous people of the United States," and he said:

"A nobler nation, a people more generous or hospitable does not exist."

You have recently delivered your opinion, as the representative of Canada, that British skill and labor "should not, from the want of proper encouragement, be permitted any longer to swell the ranks of a hostile, or, certainly, if not a hostile, at least of an unifriendly nation."

For can I gather any signs of accord between your successful endeavors to prevent me from laying before the foreign office in December, 1878, the matter of this letter and the memorable words addressed to me by those who subsequently aided in placing my efforts on record there: "Gold is a bust as compared with hooks?

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, March 22, 1880.

DEAR SIE: In drawing your attention to the enormous discrepancies between the alleged value of the Dominion fish-catch, as given in the "Case," and the value of the imports, I am only repeating what Mr. Tache did in his memorandum. Mr. Tache called attention to the population. Compare the differences between 1869 and 1874, amounting to not far from seven millions of dollars. This fact alone points to some extraordinary measures taken to increase the apparent yield of 1874 and diminish the yield of 1869. I have a copy of the printed table the fishery officers were obliged to use in making their returns up to 1877. Since 1877 a great change has taken place in some items. These are among the numerous facts which require Too much cannot be said in commendation of the very thorough method in which the Canadian Government regulates and protects its fisheries. There are a great number of other dishonorable features apart from direct faisification, which I do not wish to trouble you with, as I hope, for the sake of honest dealing, there will be an inquiry. Very truly, yours,

HENRY Y. HIND.

Windson, Nova Scotia, January, 1880.

Six: Two years have elapsed since I finished the Analytical Index of which the accompanying correspondence is an outcome. You will find it referred to in No. 63. The work was paid for by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States in equal portions. The documents handed to me were duly taken from the records of the commission by its Secretary, who was appointed under the treaty, and whose services were rewarded at the joint expense of both governments. By one of those extraordinary occurrences which do happen—it is not necessary to suggest under what guidance, for that is a matter of unobtrusive faith—the copy of the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" given to me by the Secretary turned out to be a proof copy of Her Majesty's agency at Halifax.

In this proof copy all the corrections made in Canada in the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" were either recorded in ink on the margin, or as erasures, or disclosed in consequence of their being printed on different paper and in a different type from the unaltered portions.

The proof copy contained also a duplicate sheet of the statistics referred to in the "Case" with corrections in writing.

The correspondence as a whole (a small part only being sent to you) discloses every step I took and which was taken by others in relation to this matter, as far as known to me, since the 15th of June, 1878, shortly after the discovery of the falsified statistics in the "Case."

This being an imperial matter, I went to England in November, 1878, for the express purpose of delivering the proof copy of the "Case" and the duplicate copy of the corrected table of statistics, (the only really important document,) with all other necessary papers, into the hands of the proper authorities at the foreign office, having previously described the extent and bearings of the falsifications in several communications, and given notice of my intention to bring to England the incriminating document.

No opportunity was permitted me to present this beyond human foresight, and which changed silence and inaction into fresh endeavors.

As an outcome of this unforeseen event, I received a letter from one high in position and influence, which contained the following passage:

"MONEY IS DUST IN THE SCALE AS COMPARED WITH HONEST DEALING IN THE RELATIONS OF THE TWO COUNTRIES."

In consequence of this letter I remained in England, and after a short period measures were taken by those gifted with the will and endowed with the power to deliver into the hands of the proper authorities a formal remonstrating record of the whole matter.

Proper inquiry in England will probably reveal what followed. The correspondence inclosed speaks for itself, and for its publication I alone am responsible in thought, word, and deed. Apart from the fact which none can doubt that "money is dust in the scale as compared with honest dealing in the relations of the two countries," there has to be met all that is involved in the presentation of falsified records of government to the Imperial and to the Dominion Parliaments.

It is my earnest endeavor to be at all times an undoubting believer in the providence of God. As such it has been and still is my conviction that the will to do the things which this correspondence discloses, coupled with the delegated power to use them and enjoy their fruits, are utterly inconsistent with a general acknowledgment of our dependence as a great imperial nation upon that providence. They are equally irreconcilable with undoubted obligations (apart from any definitions by solemn treaty) to a kindred people, to whom the nation is linked in bonds of closest intimacy.

I must believe, too, that the subordinate issues of uncondoned dishonest dealing are equally irreconcilable with undoubted obligations (apart from any definitions by solemn treaty) to a kindred people, to whom the nation is linked in bonds of closest intimacy.

I must believe, too, that the subordinate issues of uncondoned dishonest dealing, as far as relates to Canada, will in this, as in other matters of State, inevitably bear and ripen baneful fruit, if permitted among us.

Therefore, it remained for me, as an enforced custodian of a record of public fraud, to exercise my judgment as to the duty which this responsibility imposed. The correspondence will reveal the direction of thought and events which finally led me to submit these matters to the tribunal of English-speaking people.

More than four months ago, I announced to the proper authorities my intention to pursue the only course left for me to take, coupling the intimation with the words I now repeat:

"In such a matter the bright sunlight of public opinion is surer and better than the dark paths so frequently trodden in the practice of modern diplomacy, as the brief history I have been compelled to relate sufficiently proves.

"This course will anticipate by a very brief period the exposure which must occur, but it will beckon to the front, to be heard in self-defense, those whose tactics have been, of all things, best calculated to undermine and wreck the principles upon which the treaty of Washington is based, and to shake confidence in positions of public trust.

"I shall look for a just interpretation of the step I am about to take, from those who in singleness of heart 'love their country' and believing in the providence of God, strive to do His will."

I am living here in comparative isolation, without sufficient access to published exponents of different shades of opinion. Hence I shall regard it as a favor if those whose position and duty as leaders of cultured thought impel them to comment on this matter will be pleased to forward their criticisms here, in order that I may continue to take a well-informed part in the dis

For this is a very far-reaching question, which will test men's principles and try their souls. I submit it without fear to English-speaking people as to those who have courage to discuss that which relates to their honesty, and whose history shows that they possess the determination to insist upon the right in matters concerning the State.

Your obedient servant,

HENRY YOULE HIND,
Compiler of the Analytical Index to the documents

STEAMER PERUVIAN, November 23, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I gather from your manner and conversation during the voyage that you are unaware of the correspondence which has been going on since 15th June last in relation to the frauds in the statistics of the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" presented to the Halifax fishery commission, at which you officiated in a judicial capacity.

If, upon your arrival at the foreign office, you should then first be made aware of the discoveries made by me of falsifications and frauds in those statistics, and of the part I have taken in tracing them out, you might justly consider that, under the circumstances, I ought to have informed you of what was going on.

Therefore, I now beg leave to state to you that I am conveying to the foreign office the first printed copy of the statistics of the "Case," with corrections in writing, embodying proof beyond all doubt of the extent, approximate date, and apparent intent of the frauds therein perpetrated.

The table of statistics thus framed and submitted to you and your associates in your judicial capacity, having served its degraded purpose, was preserved uncorrected, and subsequently presented to the Imperial Parliament in the record of the proceedings of the Halifax fishery commission for the information of that august body.

It is reprinted in the United States congressional documents. It is also reprinted.

body.

It is reprinted in the United States congressional documents. It is also reprinted in a blue book at Ottawa, and although known to be false was presented to the Dominion Parliament for the information of that body and the governor-general. Being apprehensive that, when the fraud should be known, an outburst of taunt and indignation from the American people would be greatly detrimental to international relations, immediately after their discovery, in June last, I informed Sir A. J. Smith, subsequently the Marquis of Salisbury and then the Earl of Dufferin. I am bringing with me printed and written proof, from which there is no escape, that these frauds were conceived and perpetrated so early as the year 1875, or before

I have strongly urged on Sir A. J. Smith that they reflect on the honor of the mation, the dignity of Her Majesty's Government, and imperil the vast interests of the British North American fisheries.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

HENRY Y. HIND.

SIT ALEXANDER GALT, G. C. M. G.

[No. 63 of said correspondence.]

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, September 2, 1879.

Windson, Nova Scotia, September 2, 1879.

Sir: I have the honor to request your excellency's attention to the inclosed copy of the statistical table in the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" presented to you at Halifax, Nova Scotia, on the 15th day of June, 1877, for your judgment as presiding arbitrator in the recent contention between Her Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States.

The corrections in ink on the face of this copy of the table, jointly with other sources of information, led me to the discovery of extensive fraudulent alterations of official records of government in the statistical data forming part of the "Case of Her Majesty's Government," and formally presented to you as a correct statement, in a contention with the United States for a pecuniary compensation.

The table now submitted for your scrutiny as president of the Halifax commission, and to the scrutiny of your colleagues, was placed in my hands, in a copy of the "Case of Her Majesty's Government," by the secretary of the commission.

These documents were officially given to me in compliance with the joint instructions of the agent of the United States and the agent of Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the minister of marine and fisheries of the Dominion of Canada.

My instructions were to prepare a complete analytical index of the documents and proceedings of the commission, which index was printed in January, 1878.

Mr. Bergne was appointed by your excellency to the office of secretary of the commission, in accordance with the twenty-fifth article of the treaty of Washington. His expenses were paid by the two governments in equal moieties, by virtue of the same article of the treaty, and his duties were "to assist the commissioners in the transaction of the business which may come before them."

The corrections in writing on the face of the document officially given to me by the secretary of the commission, and now submitted for examination to yourself and your colleagues, point to the pro fied table, and it remains as a consequence still in my possession, imposing the gravest responsibilities.

Your excellency will perceive that this misrepresenting document, coming officially from the secretary of the commission over which your excellency presided, implies a knowledge on the part of that gentleman of the origin and object of the corrections it carries on its face.

But it has a wider bearing. If your excellency will refer to page 111 of the Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission, printed at Washington, you will find in the column of total quantities, opposite the words "mackerel, barrels," the number, 840,122; whereas in the imperial blue book, entitled Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission, printed in London, the addition of the same totals is given on page 78 as $33,0923, which corresponds with one of the corrections in writing on the copy of the same table now submitted to the arbitrators through your excellency.

If this were a temporary matter, merely affecting a money compensation between individuals in a commercial transaction, I might be justified in leaving it as it now stands; but it concerns an arbitration between nations, which has to be renewed in one form or another within the short period of five years, and which was originally designed in good faith, by a solemn treaty, to avoid or lessen discord and disputes between the British American provinces and the United States.

It is therefore invested with an importance difficult to express in words, because falsified records of government wreck the most carnest attempts at international arbitration in matters leading to such disputes.

Your excellency is familiar with the troubles which for the past half century nave been associated with the North American fisheries, and it will not escape your notice how much the increase of ill-will and discord between neighboring peoples is likely to be enhanced—if explanations be not speedily made—upon the discovery that these frauds have been intentionally perpetrated in an international contention, for a money compensation arising out of those disputes.

That the frauds cannot escape discovery is evident, not only from their nature, but also from the circumstance that they consist of altered official records of government. These are easily accessible, and now form the only recognized official basis of economic and scientific inquiry on a subject of great international import. The ground I have taken in pressing for a thorough examination of the whole matter may be thus briefly stated:

Apart from the dishonorable and illegal nature of the transaction, the good relations and harmony of the United States and the British North American provinces should not be placed in jeopardy by the unlawful acts of two or three individua made.

The tenor of this letter will be communicated to Sir A. T. Galt and the Hon. Ensign Kellogg, your excellency's co-arbit ators in the contention.

I have already informed the Marquis of Salisbury of the nature of the step left for me to take in the disposal of this document.

I have the honor to be, your excellency's obedient servant,

HENRY YOULE HIND.

His excellency Monsieur Maurice Delfosse.

WINDSOR, Nova Scotia, September 20, 1879.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that on the 2d of the present month I transmitted to the Marquis of Salisbury a categorical risumé of the reasons which have constrained me to return to the custody of the president of the Halifax fisheries commission a certain document, taken from the records of the commission and officially given to me, which bears upon its face proofs of premeditated frauds in the alteration of records of the Canadian Government, of their use in a contention with the United States for a money compensation, and which also points to promoters and patrons of these frauds.

On the 12th instant I placed this document in the hands of Mr. Charles Mali, Belgian consul in New York, for transmission to his excellency M. Maurice Delfosse. It is the same I was conveying to England in November, 1878, for the scrutiny of the Marquis of Salisbury, as secretary of State for foreign affairs, from which department the document emanated and which it also intimately concerns. I have received from Mr. Mali a consular certificate of his reception of the document, and of his compliance with my request to transmit it, with an accompanying explanatory letter, in one envelope, to his excellency M. Delfosse, minister plenipotentiary of the King of the Belgians, and lately president of the Halifax fisheries commission.

I have informed his excellency of the bearing of the document thus transmitted to him enveloped to the first order.

explanatory letter, in one envelope, to his excellency At Denosee, minister plenties commission.

I have informed his excellency of the bearing of the document thus transmitted to him, and of the fruitless efforts made to secure an examination of the corrections in ink it carries on its face; also, of certain relations which Mr. J. H. G. Bergne, of the foreign office, holds to this document, in his joint capacity as secretary to the Majesty's agency at Halifax and secretary of the Halifax fisheries commission. The reasons why this document is imperatively restored to the custody of M. Delfosse, for the joint scrutiny and judgment of the several arbitrators appointed under the treaty of Washington, or their representatives, are succinctly stated in the letter I have addressed to his excellency.

It will be within your recollection, that when on board the steamer Peruvian I delivered to you a letter on the 23d November, 1878, describing the object of my voyage to England and its relations to yourself as one of the arbitrators of the Halifax fishery commission.

It is obviously unnecessary for me to enter into further particulars respecting past proceedings in this matter, because you are already familiar with all that took place during your stay in England in November and December, 1878; and you have subsequently been in a position to inform yourself of whatever may have occurred there, in connection with this subject, up to the date of my last communication to the Marquis of Salisbury.

Since it is not probable that any intimation of the reference to yourself in that communication could have reached you before leaving England, it is proper for me to mention that, considering the circumstances under which you acted as one of the arbitrators at Halifax, considering the tenor of myletter of the 23d November, 1878, and the evil consequences to Canada inseparable from malfeasance in the proceedings of certain members of the commission to which that letter referred, I have affirmed the belief that you were bound in duty and conscience to insist upon the reception and examination of the proffered proofs of international frands in the reception and examination of the proffered proofs of international frands in the of an international tribunal.

What becomes of the principle upon which international arbitration or arbitration of any kind is based, if the assumption I have made be not correct? What becomes of the principle upon which international arbitration or arbitration in accordance with justice and equity?

What becomes of the principle upon which international arbitration or arbitration in accordance with justice and equity?

NEW YORK, September 26, 1879.

Sir: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant.

Neither in your letter of 23d November nor in your present communication have you stated what was the precise nature of your charge against Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne. But from my knowledge of these gentlemen, I am convinced they are utterly incapable of any act derogatory to their character as men of honor, and I am quite sure that any investigation that may be made into their conduct before the commission will entirely exonerate them.

On the occasion of your delivering to me your letter of 23d November, I stated to you that my connection with the subject had ended with the rendering of the award. I again repeat this, and decline assuming any authority or responsibility which I do not possess.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A. T. GALT.

H. Y. HIND, Esq., Windsor, N. S.

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, October 6, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, and to thank you for a prompt reply to my communication.

The tenor of your statement places me under the obligation to refer to details which ought to be unnecessary, considering the opportunities long within your reach for obtaining full information on the subject.

My letters of November 23, 1878, and September 20, 1879, directed attention in the most positive manner to the presence and use of grossly fraudulent statistics in the "Case of Her Majesty's Government," submitted to your judgment at Halifax. This was a distinct charge, and concerned the Government of the United States, together with Her Majesty's Government. Who the perpetrators were was a secondary consideration, and concerned Her Majesty's Government only.

Hence, to raise a seeming objection that I have not made any precise charge against Mr. Ford or Mr. Bergne is to advance a side issue, which leaves the main feature in the background.

You cannot believe that the character of the nation is sinking to the degree which would tolerate fraud, by whomsoever committed, in a contention whose first principles are proclaimed to be those of justice and equity?

Your chief personal interest in the inquiry relates to the evil consequences likely to result to Canada from malfeasance in the premises upon which you had to adjudicate, irrespective of the perpetrators, and this is a responsibility which I believe rests with you.

I shall not shrink from the task, when duly demanded, of furnishing an exact definition of the position in which Mr. Ford has placed himself as Her Majesty's agent before the Halifax commission, or Mr. Bergne as secretary to Her Majesty's agency at Halifax, and subsequently, but jointly with that office, as secretary of the Halifax commission.

The definition will be based on the documents to which your attention was called on the 23d November, 1878, in the following words:

"I am bringing with me printed and written proof, from which there is no escape, that these frauds were conceived and perpetrated so early as the year 1875, or before."

I observe that you make no attempt whatever to dispute the nature or bearing of the fraudulent details wormed into the statistics of the "Case" upon which you had to adjudicate, but confine yourself virtually and inferentially to the opinion that Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne were unconscious of their presence.

Notwithstanding your refusal last November, and its repetition at the present time, to take part in or insist upon

An announcement so inconsistent with a refusal to examine evidence declared toprove the contrary, as stated in a subsequent paragraph, suggests a strained conception of honor, greatly at variance with generally received opinions of that virtue, because questioned honor challenges proof, but conduct open to mistrust fears it.

Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne have been aware of the statements I have made since July, 1678, and you know that the matter has been discussed at the foreign office, which was fenced against the vidence I had to offer.

I must carnestly protest against the closing paragraph of your letter, for it appears to me impossible to shake off responsibility for consequences to the State which might have been averted by timely and decisive action.

To decline assuming responsibility in a grave emergency, imperiling the honor of your country and the interests of millions of your countrymen, is to yield obedience to the biddings of fidelity or disloyalty with equal mind.

With like indifference or self-regard I might have smothered the promptings of Knowledge which had been made, perhaps exclusively, my own. I might have treated its acquisition as casual or providential, according to the bent which defines it, and, passively conspiring, have permitted the evil coasequences such knowledge forbodes to be secretly worked out on the indefensiole ground that their creation and nurture was no affair of mine.

But in either case I should have been a consenting witness to the perpetration of crime, and to the sowing of seeds of mischief to public interests and of suffering to large communities.

As a silent looker-on I should have carried the consciousness that upon discovery of this turpitude there would arise among its consequences, unless atonement be previously proffered, the wrecking of the principles and purposes of the treaty of Washington; the shaking of faith in good government; the certainty that there would seed not such as a subject of the major and proposes of the treaty of Washington; the shaking of fa

MONTREAL, October 11, 1879.

MONTREAL, October 11, 1879.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of 6th instance.

After my distinct statement in writing that I would not discuss the subject of your previous letter, you cannot expect me to depart from that decision.

There is, however, one allegation in your present letter which I desire to correct. You assert that I took "highly important action" on the subject at an interview with the Marquis of Salisbury, in December, 1878. I did nothing of the kind; but only tried to do you a friendly service in preventing your objects as a scientific mambeing injured through what I considered were your absurd charges against Mr. Ford.

I do not wish to be discourteous, but correspondence on this subject must now be at an end.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A. T. GALT.

HENRY YOULE HIND, Esq., Windsor.

GIVERNY, DEPARTMENT EURE, FRANCE, October 19, 1879.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 2, (forwarded to me here.) with the table inclosed referring to the decision of the late fishery commission of Halifax.

I have not in my possession here the documents which would be required to elucidate the points which are not stated clearly and precisely in your letter, but it strikes me that the errors or alterations of figures, values, &c., in certain tables do not, as recorded in your letter, bear out the accusation of intentional and systematic fraud; for, while some are errors by less, others are errors by more as well.

well.

The "Cases" presented by either government, however, are distinct from the evidence, and could not alter nor impair the value and weight of such evidence as heard before the commission.

The powers of the commission, however, being at an end, I can only receive your letter as intended to convey information concerning the communication addressed by you to the governments interested. It will be for them to appreciate this matter and decide as they think fit.

I keep at your disposal the document which was inclosed in your letter.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

MAURICE DELFOSSE.

P. S.-I shall be back to Washington, I expect, in a few weeks.

INo. 70.1

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, November 10, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 11th October.

I have delayed my reply waiting for an answer from Mons. M. Delfosse. That answer I have just received. His excellency totally misunderstands my letter, and, neglecting the object for which it was sent, closes his own with the remark:

"I keep at your disposal the document which was inclosed in your letter."
His excellency's arithmetic is so bewildering that I have not attempted to respond. As to his remarks on the effect of evidence—which has nothing to do with the matter under review—the evidence of angels would not have effaced the brand which marks the presence of falsified records of Government in the Imperial "Case," or wiped away the stain it leaves, or averted some of the evil influences it imparts which marks the presence of falsified records of Government in the Imperial "Case," or wiped away the stain it leaves, or averted some of the evil influences it imparts.

I have written to his excellency, requesting him to be so good as to return to me the document he has placed at my disposal. By the time this letter reaches you I shall be once again the sole custodian of the proofs of my "charges," and shall know what to do with them.

This communication will be long and decisive, because, according to your dictum, it must be final. To abbreviate it, I have referred to earlier letters by numbers in brackets. The number of this letter is 70, being the seventieth in the series relating to the falsifications in the "Case of Her Majesty's Government," and dating from June 15, 1878, five months before the award was paid.

I do not desire to say anything that may look like a neglect of courtesy, or appear to show a want of respect or feeling, but I am compelled by the gravity of the subject and the turn it has taken to make my reply cover details which can only be referred to with profound regret.

Therefore I ask such indulgence as you can give, in consideration of the position in which your refusal to move in this matter places me, being mindful of what has already been said and done.

I have first to show that my charges were very far, indeed, from being "absurd," and if in so doing illusions are dispelled, you cannot have any cause whatever to accuse me of harshness or insensibility should such illusions seem to have been cherished after the manner of those who cry "peace, when there is no peace."

Subsequently, it will be my duty to revert to your letter of the 11th October.

I will be my endeavor to arrange the argument now to be presented under three periods:

Second period—During the sittings of the commission, (June 15, 1977, to November 23, 1877.)

Third period—Subsequent to the award being declared (Novembers time.)

FIRST PERIOD-BEFORE THE PRESENTATION OF THE "CASE."

(August 25, 1875, to June 15, 1877.)

If you will be so good as to place any one of the seven editions of the table in the "Case," upon which chapter 1 is based, before you, and glance at the details I now point out, there will be conveyed to you certain impressions which cannot be resisted by any one, even in a small degree conversant with the Canadian fisheries and the Canadian fish markets.

THE MINOR FALSIFICATIONS APPARENT ON THE FACE OF THE TABLE IN THE "CASE.

Roughly dividing the annual values of the items named below by the annual quantities given in the table in the "Case," it appears, according to this document, that—quantities given in the table in the "Case," it appears, according to this document, that—

1. A box of smoked herrings varied in average price, during the years 1869 to 1875, from 143 cents a box to $1.52 a box.

2. A pound of mackerel varied in average price during the same period, from 12 to 15 cents a pound,

3. Haddock varied from 6 to 12 cents a pound.

4. The yield of haddock, as given in pounds, varied from 75,000 pounds in 1871 to 4,693,928 pounds in 1875.

5. Boxes of smoked salmon varied from 15 cents to 25 cents a box.

6. The "yield" of smoked salmon in boxes varied from 540 boxes in 1871 to 137,320 boxes in 1874, sinking in value to 15 cents a box in 1874 and 1875.

7. Berrels of "mixed fish" varied from 93 cents a barrel to $5 a barrel.

8. Eels varied in price from $8 to $17.88 a barrel.

9. Shad varied from $3 a barrel to $8.54 a barrel.

10. "Finnan haddies," or smoked haddock, cost in 1871 $20 a barrel.

These are "facts" deduced from the details on the face of the table presented to you on the 15th of June, 1877. They require no evidence, no reference; they appeal for their truthfulness or falsity to common sense, and they are the only interpretations possible of the items as they are presented. They are among the details upon which chapter 1 in the "Case" is based, and are submitted with that chapter in proof of the statements it embodies.

Whether common sense vouches for the truthfulness of these items will soon appear.

Is the smoked herring market in Canada so unstable that while the average price appear.

Is the smoked herring market in Canada so unstable that while the average price per box was $1.52 in 1870, it fell to less than 15 cents in 1871—a fall of a thousand per cent. in one year?

Is any class or variety of mackerel, taken in Canadian waters, so valuable a fish that its average price was 12 cents a pound in 1872 and 15 cents a pound in 1871, 4873, 1874, and 1875?

Is "smoked salmon" so abundant in the market that the average price of 125,785 boxes was 17 cents (nearly) a box in 1873, and the average price of 137,320 boxes fell to 15 cents each in 1874?

Are barrels of "mixed fish" so variable in value that the annual yield was worth, on an average, 32 cents a barrel in 1871, and $4 a barrel in 1869, 1870, 1872, and 1873; rising to $5 a barrel in 1874 and 1875?

When and where, in Canada, were finnan haddies sold at $20 a barrel?

Did the take of oysters spring suddenly from 600 barrels in 1869 to 42,000 barrels in 1870?

Did the take of oysters spring saddenly from 600 barrels in 1860 to 42,000 barrels in 1870?

I submit that these illustrations of the condition of the table upon which chapter 1 is based were sufficient to stimulate inquiry in the mind of any one whose attention had been officially directed to the subject of the Canadian fisheries and documents relating to them for many months in the necessary preparation and study of details for use in a great international arbitration.

It was more than sufficient to stimulate inquiry in the mind of a responsible agent, in whose hands a great trust had been placed for the benefit of a numerons people, whose material interests depended in a great measure upon that trust being guarded in a manly and upright manner.

But what is the interpretation of the appearance of these items in an official document of the greatest importance? In order to answer this question we must refer to No. 30 of the "documents filed with the secretary of the commission in support of the 'Case,'" namely, the "Canadian fishery reports for the last ten years."

These can be examined separately or as they are embodied in the "Sessional document of the greatest importance? In order to answer this question we must refer to No. 30 of the "documents filed with the secretary of the commission in support of the 'Case,'" namely, the "Canadian fishery reports for the last ten years."

These can be examined separately or as they are embodied in the "Sessional Papers" of the Dominion Parliament.

The Sessional Papers contain all the material necessary for a full comparison of the table in the "Case" and the authorities from which the statements on its face are alleged to be taken.

They embrace the fishery reports, and on pages 16 to 21 of supplement No. 5 to the Teuth Annual Report of the minister of marine and fisheries (1877) the table of the "Case" is given in full, with the cutch for Ontario and the catch for the years 1876 and 1877 added.

The details for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Quebec for the years 1889 to 1875, inclusive, there shown, are an exact transcript of the table given in the "Case," with this exception, namely, thesum total of the catch of mackerel from 1869 to 1875 is correct in supplement No. 5, according to the items there given; but it was not corrected in the copy from which the United States reprint is taken, as will be subsequently shown, and this copy must have been identical with the copy of the "Case" presented to the arbitrators.

There is probably no responsible officer in the Dominion more thoroughly familiar with the annual official documents called "Sessional Papers" than yourself. The constant necessity for consulting these documents, involved by the various official positions you have held since your first election to Parliament, thirty years ago, has made you master of their arrangement from time to time, so that the reference, which is difficult to many, is easy to you. Hence it will be needless for me to particularize with greater detail than to state the date of the Sessional Paper, when substantiating any statement, in case you have not the separately printed fishery reports at hand.

Both Mr. Ford and Mr.

INTERPRETATION OF THE ITEMS REFERRED TO

Socia and New Brunswick are not given in the years 1869 and 1871.

INTERPRETATION OF THE ITEMS REFERRED TO.

1. The item "smoked herrings." Referring to the departmental fishery report for 1870, (Sessional Paper No. 5, anno 1871, page 302.) we find that, in order to obtain the value given in the "Case" for that year, viz. $112,327.25, the 60,200 boxes of herring from New Brunswick must have been charged in the "Case" at the rate of $1.70 a box. In 1871, we discover, in the same manner, that 10,300 boxes of smoked herrings from Nova Scotia were charged in the "Case" about 10½ cents a box; from which it appears that smoked herrings were worth, according to the table in the "Case," $1.70 a box in New Brunswick in 1870; 10½ cents a box in Nova Scotia in 1871.

2. The item "pounds of mackerel." "Pounds of mackerel "are returned for one year only in the fishery reports, namely, 1871. In all the other years of the table the item "pounds of mackerel." should read "cans of mackerel." The returns for Nova Scotia are correctly given as "cans of mackerel." The returns for Nova Scotia are correctly given as "cans of mackerel." The returns for Nova Scotia are correctly given as "cans of mackerel." The returns for Nova Scotia are correctly given as "cans of mackerel." The returns for Nova Scotia are correctly given as "cans of mackerel." The paparent reason for this change may be noticed further on.

3. The item "haddock, pounds." Reference to the fishery reports shows that 75,000 pounds of haddock and 40,000 pounds of haddock, as given in the table in the "Case," should read 75,000 fish and 40,000 fish. Hence 75,000 fish are charged at the rate of six cents a fish, being a singular contrast with the same species "smoked," which is introduced as "finnan haddies," worth $20 a barrel. In the fishery reports the same quantity is enumerated under the denomination of "hundred-weight."

4. The item "salmon, (smoked.)" Reference to the fishery reports reveals the fact that, for "boxes of smoked salmon," the arbitrators should have r dies," &c.? These minor falsifications appear to have been introduced for the purpose of concealing the major falsifications which follow.

THE MAJOR FALSIFICATIONS WHICH ARE NOT APPARENT ON THE FACE OF THE TABLE IN THE "CASE."

In order to understand the bearing of the falsifications which are now about to be enumerated, it is necessary to remind you that special attention was given in the text of the "Case" to the pursuit by the Americans of two species of fish, namely, mackerel and herring.

We read in the "Case" as follows:

"In recapitulation of the above it is estimated that each United States fishing-vessel will, on a moderate computation, take within British Canadian waters three thousand six hundred dollars' worth of mackerel and two thousand dollars' worth of other fish, or a total of five thousand six hundred dollars worth ofish of all kinds as an average for each trip." (Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission, page 64; Record of the Proceedings of the Halifax Fisheries Commission, page 66.)

The quantity of herrings taken by American fishing-vessels within British Canadian waters are estimated at 300 for each trip "during the intervals of mackereling." (Ibid., pages 64 and 66.)

The item "barrels of mackerel." When we compare the enumeration of the annual quantities and values of the mackerel catch, the produce of Canadian fisheries, given in the table of the "Case," with the enumeration in the fishery reports, from which the details are alleged to be taken, we find that the year 1869 falls 2,000 barrels short in the "Case," amounting in value, at $10 a barrel, to $1,020,300.

This quantity, namely, 102,030 barrels of mackerel, was docked from the official returns in formulating the table in the "Case," upon which chapter 1 is made to depend. But evidently the spollation was not done at one time; it extended over two periods, and the proof of this is contained on the face of the document.

One hundred thousand barrels of mackerel were first taken from the official returns of the year 1871, and then the total Dominion catch of mackerel, having a value of $8,937,676.

This total is reprinted in the "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," published at Washington; it occurs consequently, in th value of $8,937,676.

This total is reprinted in the "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," published at Washington: it occurs, consequently, in the "Case," as presented to the arbitrators; but in the imperial blue book, entitled "Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission," and in the imperial "Record of the Proceedings of the Halifax Fisheries Commission," the total number given is different. In these imperial documents you will find the total quantity of mackerel caught in Dominion waters is stated to have been $38,092\frac{1}{2}$ barrels. (Pp. 78 and 80.)

The comparison between the United States record and the British record of the same proceedings stands thus:

United States record, barrels of mackerel. British record, barrels of mackerel.	840, 122½ 838, 092½
Difference, barrels	2,030

Item.	Year.	Quantity.	Value.	Average price per barrel.

The "Case" should say, according to Hon. Peter Mitchell's table and the Fishery Report for 1869:

Item.	Year.	Quantity.	Value.	Average price per barrel.
Mackerel in barrels Mackerel in barrels	1869 1870	53, 011 92, 213	$530, 110 1, 099, 202	$10. Nova Scotia, $12; Quebec, $10; New Showing a difference in these three years—1869, 1870, and 1871—between the statements in the "Case" and the revised official reports of 102,030 barrels of mackerel and a value of $1,526,237.

Adding plus and minus quantities together, we find 91,000 barrels of herring more in the "Case" than in the official reports.

DID MR. FORD KNOW OF THESE CORRECTIONS IN WRITING ON THE FACE OF THE TABLE REFORE IT WAS REFRINTED IN CANADA?

I now beg your particular attention to what follows:

The total catch of herrings during the years 1869 to 1875, inclusive, is recorded in the "Case" as amounting to 2,202,725 barrels. But in the first printed edition of the table brought to Canada, a copy of which, with corrections in ink, I took to England in November, 1878, and which I was not allowed to exhibit at the foreign office, the sum total, given in type, is 2,117,25. This is crossed out, and in ink is written on the margin 2,202,725 (barrels.) The difference between these quantities is 91,000 barrels, which is the difference, as stated above, between the true official records and the statement in the "Case."

Therefore, after the table was formulated, and the annual products correctly added, some person must have docked 9,000 barrels from the returns of 1872 and added 100,000 barrels to the returns of 1874; but when this was done the corresponding alterations in the totals was omitted. The resulting error in the total was subsequently corrected in writing, as on the face of the copy given to me by Mr. Bergne, and on the copy pasted into Mr. Ford's proof copy of the "Case." These corrections must have been made before the presentation of the "Case." These corrections that have been made before the presentation of the "Case," because the corrected total, 2,202,725, appears in the United States "Documents and Proceedings of the Hallfax Commission," and the "British Case," there reproduced, must be, in this particular, a transcript of the "Case" made by erasure of certain words in Mr. Ford's proof copy, which words are not found in the United States reprint, or in the imperial Blue Book, or in the imperial Record. And there are several whole pages printed on different paper and in a slightly different type to the origi be cited.

When the copy of the "Case," without the table, was submitted to me at Ottawa in May, 1877, I pointed out to Mr. Bergne, among other anomalies, that codfish did not enter the bays of the Magdalen Islands for the purpose of spawning. (See original copy of "Case," page 28, 7 and 9 lines from the bottom.) That they spawned free in the sea, in cold water, their spawn floating. The word "cod" on the ninth line from bottom is crased in this proof copy.

On the twenty-ninth page, I pointed out to the same gentleman that the climate on the seaboard of Canada is not "dry." In the proof copy the word "dry" is erased.

on the seaboard of Canada is not "dry." In the proof copy the word "dry" is erased.

On the thirty-first page I pointed out that the superiority of the Canadian cured codish was not "due in a great measure to the 'dryness' of the climate." The word "dryness" is erased from the proof copy.

These passages are to be found in the United States "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," on page 33, 31 lines from the top. In the original copy the words are "mackerel, cod, halibut capelin, and launce abound." The word "cod" does not appear in the United States copy of the "Case," nor in the imperial copy. (Correspondence, &c., page 66, top line; Record, page 68, top line.)

The word "dry" does not appear in the United States documents, page 93, 11 lines from the bottom.

The original reads: "In a dry and salubrious climate."

The proof copy has the words "dry and" erased in conformity with my suggestion in May, 1877, and the United States documents read, "in a salubrious climate."

These passages occur in the imperial reprint of the "Case" as in the United States reprint. (Correspondence, &c., page 66, 15 lines from top; Record, page 68, 55 lines from top.) Similarly, the words "dryness and," erased in this proof copy, do not appear in the United States copy. (Page 94, 7 lines from the bottom; imperial Correspondence, &c., page 67, 4 lines from top; Record, page 69, 4 lines from top.)

It appears from the foregoing statements that Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne were aware of the corrections in ink on the face of the statistical table formerly in their possession before the "Case" was reprinted in Canada under their supervision, and previous to the assembling of the commission at Halifax.

But being aware of the corrections, it would be unreasonable to suppose that they did not understand their meaning and bearing, as I shall have occasion to notice further on.

In the official Report of the Commissioner of Fisheries for 1875, bearing date

But being aware of the corrections, it would be unreasonable to suppose that they did not understand their meaning and bearing, as I shall have occasion to notice further on.

In the official Report of the Commissioner of Fisheries for 1875, bearing date Ottawa, 31st March, 1876, (Sessional Papers No. 5, A, 1876; Supplement No. 4, to the eighth Annual Report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the year 1875, page 13, it is stated that Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne came to Canada in the autum of 1875. The passage is as follows:

"Sir A. T. Galt, G. C. M. G., was therefore appointed as British commissioner, and F. C. Ford, esq. Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires at Darmstadt, was appointed as British agent. The last-named gentleman arrived at the capital, accompanied by an assistant, Mr. J. H. G. Bergne, of the foreign office, during last autumn.

"They addressed themselves promptly and diligently to preparing for the business of the commission at Halifax, where it was expected to assemble about the commencement of winter. The following eminent legal counsel were retained and consulted regarding the claim to be submitted to such tribunal: Joseph Doutre, esq., Q. C. Montreal: S. R. Thomson, esq., Q. C., of St. John, N. B.; R. L. Weatherbe, esq., of Halifax, N. S., and Louis H. Davies, of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. These gentlemen, together with Messrs. Ford and Bergne and the undersigned, met and conferred with you (Sir A. J. Smith) at St. John, N. B. It proved impossible, however, to effect any further progress, because of failure on the part of the American Government to appoint their commissioner. Her Majesty's agent and his companion consequently proceeded from St. John to New York, and returned thence to England."

thence to England."

The interval of a year and a half between these arrivals at Ottawa and conference with Canadian authorities gave ample time to consider the matter and the "supports" of the "Case."
Numerous alterations were made in the "Case" at Ottawa after Mr. Ford's arrival there in May, 1877, and the "Case" was reprinted then and there.

THE METHOD OF MANIPULATION, OR "COOKING."

I shall first call your attention to a point of great significance, which is, that, notwithstanding the numerous alterations in the records of government, alleged to be truthfully presented to you, the sums total at the bottom of the column, showing the total value of the catch in some years, is made to agree with the sums total recorded in the fishery reports.

You know what this means and what it involves.

Not including 24,228 pounds, or 121 barrels.

I have derived all my information from the table in the "Case," and its "supports," the annual fishery reports, having had no other documents or sources of information than those possessed by yourself during the five months and nine days between June 15, 1877, and November 24, 1877, you sat as arbitrator. The corrections in ink on the table given to me by Mr. Bergne have been my guides, and, like finger-posts, have pointed to where the leading falsifications were to be found. Let us take the years 1870 and 1871, because the fishery reports supply the means for comparison without further inquiry. The table in the fishery reports bearing the name of Hon. P. Mitchell, then minister of marine and fisheries, and found on page 54, of Sessional Paper No. 3, A. D. 1873, may be compared with the table in the "Case."

The title of Mr. Mitchell's table is:

Difference, $67,897.50 more value in the "Case."

Adding the plus and minus quantities we find, from a comparison of these tables, that there is a sum of $89,103.75 to be deducted from among the values of the other items in the "Case" in order to make the sums total agree and amount to $6,312.410, neglecting the difference of eighteen cents.

Is there any trace of such a deduction and distribution of values?

The item "scalefish" may furnish an illustration which strikes the eye at once. In the "Case" the value of "scalefish" for the year 1870 is returned as 92,513 cwt., valued at $323,795.07. In the Fishery Reports (Sessional Papers No. 5, 1871, page 306) the item is given as follows: "92.513 qtls. scalefish, at $3.50, $323,795.50." A correct statement, then why should the "Case" have $323,795.07?

It was impossible to introduce smoked herrings at $152 a box, 560 cwt. of pollock as equivalent to 500 cwt. and 120 barrels, (Sessional Papers No. 5, 1871, page 303.) 330 barrels of hake as 330 cwt.. &c., without some adjustment of values.

It was impossible to dock $29,426 from the value of codfish, $6,564 from the value of mackerel, and put on $77,202.25 to the value of herring and $67,897.50 to the value of salmon without that nice adjustment which would prevent the results of these changes from appearing in the total results of the year's catch.

This is technically called "cooking," and it appears to run through every year, in one form or another, in the table presented to the arbitrators, but its extent and degree is not measurable by what I have pointed out.

I can only indicate a few alterations in the items of the year 1869, because I have not the means of comparison, prices not being given in the returns. Yet there is a correction in ink on the face of Mr. Bergne's and Mr. Ford's copy of the table, which points to some alterations of moment.

The "Case" gives, in the original printed table, the total yield of "smoked herrings" in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Quebec as amounting to 2.479,059 boxes.

Turning to the Fishery Reports—

169, 879 which is the number of boxes of smoked herrings given in the "Case." But it is not usual to add barrels to boxes, especially when a barrel contains from twelve to sixteen boxes, and the number 1,000 added requires explanation.

That this correction covers some alterations is clear from the fact that beside the docking of 2,000 barrels of mackerel from the official returns of the year 600 hogsheads of oysters are entered in the "Case" as 600 barrels and charged $3 a barrel; and the value given of salmon preserved in cans is just $100 short. Notwithstanding these differences in items the total values agree.

Now let us take the year 1871, bearing in mind that 100,000 barrels of mackerel had been docked from the returns as given in the "Case:"

Adding the plus and minus quantities, we find that there is a difference of $1,709,684 in the value of the items enumerated, between Hon. Peter Mitchell's revised estimate and the estimate given in the "Case." But—and this is an important matter—the sum total in the "Case," although the value of 100,000 barrels of mackerel had been docked, agrees with the sum total of the returns for the three provinces given in pages 53, 134, and 137, of the Fishery Reports for 1871, in which the 100,000 barrels appear, (Sess. Paper No. 5, A, 1872,) namely, $7,379,675.85. It will be remarked, however, that the returns for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are there given without prices attached, and those for Nova Scotia, amounting to $5,101,030.90 are uncertified by either the minister or the Commissioner of Fisheries, these being the only uncertified returns in the three years.

It appears as if the values in the "Case," after docking 100,000 barrels of mackerel, had been purposely taken from the uncertified returns without prices given, in preference to the revised returns, the summary of which is embodied in Mr. Mitchell's table, on page 54 of Sess. Paper No. 8, Anno 1873.

Can there be any justification for the selection of uncertified returns (to say nothing of docking 100,000 barrels of mackerel) in preference to those adopted after revision by the minister in power, and published in his official report, over his own name?

THE RESULTS OF MANIPULATION IN VALUES, IN THE TWO YEARS 1870 AND 1871.

The effect of the docking of 100,000 barrels of mackerel from the catch of 1871, and the arbitrary selection of the uncertified tables, is thus represented:

Hon. Peter Mitchell's revised table.

Total value of catch for 1871 Case."	7, 379, 675 85
Difference, less in the "Case"	1, 862, 370 15

A glance at the effect of these alterations in the values of the items enumerated for the two years, 1870 and 1871, will suffice to show that very notable results were produced, having a special bearing.

Adding the alterations made in both years together, we obtain the ferences between the "Case" and its "Supports:"	following dif

The effect of the alterations so far being to diminish the values of cod, mackerel, and herring by $1,710.750, and to increase the value of salmon, which fish does not come within the purview of the treaty of Washington, by $90,177. I have already shown the extent to which the quantities were reduced.

THE APPARENT OBJECT OF THE FRAUDS.

The APPARENT OBJECT OF THE FRAUDS.

It will be observed that the corrections in ink on the faces of the two copies of the table referred to relate only to those items which had been grossly falsified, namely: mackerel, herring, salmon, and codfish.

There are forty-six other fish and products of fish enumerated in the table, yet all of these have their total yield and value correct, according to the details there given, although many of these details are false; yet the total quantities of mackerel, herring, salmon, and codfish are altered in ink in Mr. Ford's proof copy, the values remaining undisturbed as given there.

This marked distinction between the important and unimportant items, coupled with the obvious effect of an alteration in aggregated quantities without corresponding alteration in aggregate values, would naturally suggest an examination of details to see if any mistake or omission existed.

It is contrary to all experience to credit the supposition that a skilled diplomatist like Mr. Ford, or a diplomatist in training like Mr. Bergne, both familiar with the effect of figures, and having a distinct and well-defined duty to perform, and nearly two years' time given them to do it in, should have failed to familiarize themselves with the leading points upon which the trust placed in their hands was known to be dependent for success.

Among the most important of these leading points were the wealth of Canadian waters in mackerel, herring, codfish, and salmon. The table in the "Case" was prepared for the purpose of illustrating this wealth, as stated in chapter 1. But it was so manipulated and deformed as to exhibit, not the true wealth of Canadian waters, but a lectitious wealth, having relation, first, to the enterprise of United Strates fishermen in those waters; second, to the fish trade of Canada with the United Strates.

First, With regard to mackerel:

From the table in the "Case" it appears that the actual annual Quantity of mackerel canned never rose above 80.460 cans; the official statement a "Case" the total quantity of codfish taken in Dominion waters was given as amounting to 3,780,310\(2\) cwt.

This enumeration is crossed out and corrected in ink in both revised copies of the table, the sum placed on the margin being 5,006,292\(3\), which is the correct addition of the items given.

With respect to salmon, the original printed total was recorded as 66,287\(\) barrels. This is crossed out, and on the margin is recorded 56,287\(\) barrels, being the correct addition of the items given.

But it must not be inferred that the values which are not corrected are the true values.

values.

Take the year 1871. The "Case" says that in 1871 there were produced 7,675½ barrels of salmon, valued at $80,073. The official reports for that year have the following items:

Page 53.—Queboc, salmon	3, 728 3, 885	barrels, at $16, $60,648. barrels, no value recorded.
Total barrels.	7, 613 7, 675 1
Difference	621	barrels
THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T	ALCOHOL: SALES	800 040 14 1 APR 040

Now, 3,728 barrels, at $16 a barrel, will not produce $60,648; it gives $59,648, a difference of $1,000.

Now, 3,725 barrels, at $16 a barrel, will not produce $60,648; it gives $39,648, a difference of $1,000.

But 62$ barrels, at $16, produces $1,000. Hence it appears that the compiler of the table in the "Case" added 62$ barrels to the Quebec yield, probably to rectify a possible error in the printing of the fishery report for that year. As to the value of the Nova Scotia salmon yield for 1871, we are confronted with the following picture of the quality of that fish in Nova Scotian waters.

Deduct $60,648, the official value of 3,728 barrels, plus 62$ barrels added, of Quebec salmon, from the total value of the salmon catch for 1871 given in the "Case," namely, $80,073, and there remain only $19,425 as the value of 3,885 barrels of Nova Scotia salmon, which is at the rate of $5 a barrel.

Therefore, according to the table in the "Case," the salmon yield of Quebec was worth $16 a barrel in 1874, while the salmon yield in Nova Scotia was worth only $5 a barrel, or not one-third of the value of Quebec salmon.

Similarly it is found that, according to the table in the "Case," the price of a barrel of salmon in 1869 was $16 a barrel in Quebec, $10 a barrel in Nova Scotia. In 1870, Quebec salmon, $16 a barrel; Nova Scotia, $15: New Brunswick, $18. The contrast in prices during five years is shown in the following table:

PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

When journeying from Ottawa to Halifax, early in June, 1877, one week before the commission met, with Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne, I furnished, at the request of these gentlemen, for their perusal then and there, so much of the manuscript of my paper on "The Effect of the Fishery Clanses of the Treaty of Washington on the Fisheries and Fishermen of British North America" as I had written. At this time I said to these gentlemen, "YOUR STATISHICS ARE WRONG," basing my criticism upon a large, separate sheet of statistics of the Canadian fisheries, which I afterward found to be identical with the table in the "Case" in all details as to the years 1869 to 1875. Both gentlemen instantly replied that they knew it, and that they were corrected, and at that time were being reprinted at Ottawa. Mr. Bergne was particularly excited, and descanted on the trouble he had had in "putting them right."

Neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Bergne asked me to point out the errors I had detected in this sheet of statistics or made any further reference to the matter.

This fact I have mentioned in the lotter addressed to the foreign office, bearing date London, December 12, 1878, (No. 51.) in which letter I declined to avail myself of your friendly services, stating the reasons for so doing.

I could not at the time furnish you with a copy of that letter, because you had already left England for the continent, and this I stated in my communication to the foreign office, presuming that a copy would then be sent to you.

You will now probably say, "If these fraudulent statistics in the table in the 'Case' upon which chapter I was based were so apparent to any one familiar with the Canadian fisheries, why did you not point them out before!"

I have answered this question a year and a half ago, (No. 27, pointing out the apparent means taken to guard the table from scrutiny and some incidental circumstances which prevented the discovery.

Among these are to be noticed that the table, although referred to in the 'Case' as "the subjoined statement," (ch

4. The British parliamentary copy of the "Case," as published in the Blue Book, entitled "Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission," with its corrected item before referred to.

These formed a chain of evidence from which there was no escape; but you would not even look at it.

There is, then, no absurdity in the conclusion at which I have arrived, that Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne, knowing of these corrections in the table before it was reprinted at Ottawa under their special supervision, accepted the transformations and thus became responsible for their appearance in the "Case" presented to the arbitrators.

printed at Ottawa fluor their special supervision and thus became responsible for their appearance in the "Case" presented to the arbitrators.

The view I have taken of this matter is as follows: If Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne did not accept these frauds, they would have compelled the restoration of the table to a condition of purity before reprinting it; but because they permitted it to be reprinted for presentation to the arbitrators, with all its impurities intact, they became accomplices in the objects of the frauds.

This connivance removed the responsibility to the shoulders of Her Majesty's agent, to whom the "Case" had been intrusted by Her Majesty's Government. On him the duty and honor of laying the "Case" undefiled before a judicial assembly representing the two foremost nations in the world, by act of royal grace, had been imposed.

It is now very nearly a year and a half since I called attention to these mutilations, with every necessary particularity and minuteness of detail. I have offered to submit myself to any kind of cross-examination as to the facts presented, sources of knowledge, and motives for communicating it—journeying to England and remaining there four months for that purpose—but all in vain.

I now pass to the second period, during which the commission was sitting.

Period during which the Commission was sifting—June 15 to November 23, 1877.

The conduct of the "Case" implied a knowledge of the frands, for it involved the arrangement and classification of evidence according to such method that the hidden transgression should not be disclosed. It was Mr. Ford's especial work, as he states himself in his dispatch to Lord Derby, (Blue Book, dated Halifax, June 16, 1877.) to arrange and classify the documentary evidence.

How would it be possible safely to steer a ship under full sail through a strait known to be beset with torpedoes, unless guided by a finger which pointed to where the hidden dangers lay!

The closing paragraph of the first protocol states that "Mr. Ford then presented to each of the commission a copy of the 'Case of Her Majesty's Government' and duplicate copies to the United States agent, accompanied by a list of the documents to be filed with the secretary in support of the 'Case.'"

Among these documents are "No. 30—Canadian Fishery Reports for last the years." Is it possible that Mr. Ford can have presented documents in support of the "Case" about which he knew nothing, and yet which were the foundation of the most important chapter in the "Case," namely, "Chapter I—Extent and value of Canadian fisheries?

These documents illustrated the extent and value of these fisheries. The table Mr. Ford presented to you magnified the wealth of those branches which did not come under the purview of the treaty of Washington, and diminished the value of those far more important branches which were subject to the treaty. There was no relation except a fictitious one between the table in the "Case," and the supports, and yet, as we shall see presently, Mr. Ford called Lord Derby's attention to the fact that the portion of those supports relied on, being "the documents alluded to in British 'Case,'" were arranged by Mr. Bergne for the nse of the commission.

In a dispatch to the Earl of Derby (No. 28, Blue Book) Mr. Ford states, under date Halifax, August 2, 1877:

"The documents alluded to in the British 'Case' which had been filed with the secretary were also read, and I have the honor to forward herewith copies of a reprint of the extracts and portions relied on; which has been arranged by Mr. Bergne for the use of the commission and for preservation in the archives."

Among the most important documents alluded to in the "Case" are the departmental "Fishery Reports," (page 78, Blue Book.) from which the table in the "Case" is alleged on its face to be taken.

Without these documents it would have been impossible to have had any "Case," for they embody the records of the Canadian Government respecting the Dominion fisheries.

Is it to be conceived that Mr. Ford presented these documents in the second contents of the canadian description.

fisheries.

« Is it to be conceived that Mr. Ford presented these decuments, which were the groundwork of the "Case," without informing himself of their contents, or that those contents supported the statements in the "Case?"

Would the manager of a bank, engaged to conduct an arbitration of great importance to the institution he represented, permit himself to present a balance-sheet without being satisfied that its details would bear the test of scrutiny? Would he not be considered to have neglected his duty and recklessly risked his frust if he had thus failed to make his position and that of his claimants secure?

WAS MR. FORD INFORMED OF THE FALSIFICATIONS IN THE TABLE AT ANY TIME DURING THE SITTINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

Confining attention to a leading fraud in the statistics of the "Case," namely, the docking of 100,000 barrels of mackerel from the return of 1871, will you be so good as to ponder the following facts, because you will remember that the catch of mackerel was the main subject of inquiry, as far as fish were concerned, during the sittings of the commission.

There was prepared, in June and July, 1877, at Halifax, under the same roof as Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne, a printed document, being an appendix, with the title "Memorandum concerning Article XXI of the treaty of Washington."

On page 6 of this memorandum the following passage occurs; in explanation of the prices of mackerel from the year 1881 to the year 1876:

"These figures would have been still more conclusive but for the extraordinary catch of 1871, which was 50 per cent. larger than any previous year recorded, and in consequence of which mackerel fell in price from $18 in June, 1871, to $7 in August, September, and October, subsequently rallying in January, 1872, to from $12 to $15. This immense catch and the consequent decline in prices considerably reduced the average prices between 1867 and 1873. They further prove that the prices depend upon the laws of demand and supply, rather than upon fiscal regulations."

This extraordinary catch of 1871, being docked to the extent of 100,000 barrels in the "Case" its immense.

prices depend upon the laws of demand and supply, rather than upon fiscal regulations."

This extraordinary catch of 1871, being docked to the extent of 100,600 barrels in the "Case," its immensity did not appear there in consequence.

Yet this very fact was virtually pointed out in the printed document prepared by Mr. Miall, under the same roof as Mr. Ford, during the early part of the sittings of the commission, in an important paper showing the relation between prices and catch; a subject necessarily most intimately connected with the conduct of the "Case," and therefore with the statements in that "Case."

Mr. Ford thus speaks of Mr. Miall in his dispatch to the Earl of Derby, dated foreign office, December 17, 1877, (Blue Book, No. 44:)

"Mr. Miall is an English gentleman at present holding a high situation in the department of internal revenue at Ottawa, and to his uniform willingness to assist me in every way in which his services might be available or his talents turned to account, I wish to speak in terms of the highest recognition. To his knowledge of statistics, and accuracy in dealing with them. I ascribe in a great degree the success of that important part of the British 'Case' which depended on a true and clear exposition of figures, and I feel greatly indebted to the Canadian Government for having placed that gentleman's services at my disposal."

Please contrast this avowal to the Earl of Derby of the importance of a "true and clear exposition of figures" with the presentation to you and the other arbitrators of the fraudulent document upon which chapter I of the British 'Case' was made to depend.

I should not have made any allusion to Mr. Miall, or to the document from which I have quoted, had not that gentleman's name appeared so prominently in Mr. Ford's dispatch to the Earl of Derby, that it was noticed by one of the British 'Case' was

I should not have made any allusion to Mr. Miall, or to the document from which I have quoted, had not that gentleman's name appeared so prominently in Mr. Ford's dispatch to the Earl of Derby, that it was noticed by one of the British counsel, (Mr. Weatherbe, now Mr. Justice Weatherbe,) in an official letter to the minister of marine and fisheries, which letter, in some unexplained manner, appeared in the Boston Commercial Advertiser in the spring of 1878. There are incidents referred to in that letter relating to witnesses which may receive new light from what I have stated in relation to the table in the "Case."

In order that the weight to be attached to a "true and clear exposition of figures" in this matter may be realized, I will add a synoptical table of some of the transformations presented to you, which are distinct from the leading alterations of the records of the Canadian Government in quantities and values already enumerated. It furnishes jointly with the illustrations which have preceded it a frightful commentary upon "a true and clear exposition of figures."

These illustrations of the condition of the "Case of Her Majesty's Government" presented to the arbitrators forbid any moral appreciation of that unqualified praise you conceived it to be your duty to accord to Mr. Ford at the successful close of the proceedings.

Your testimony is thus recorded in your dispatch to the Earl of Derby, dated Halifax, November 24, 1877. (Blue Book No 33:)

"I should be wanting in my duty if I omitted to state in the strongest terms my appreciation of the manner in which the British "Case" has been conducted by Mr. F. C. Ford, to whose intelligence, zeal, and tact the measure of success obtained must be mainly attributed."

These unrivaled sea fisheries were won by the sword and held by the sword through many generations of men. in fair and manly conflict, face to face.

They were won by men who held their lives and bonor in open palm. The men of the sea, who hold them now, have used them to build up a marine which ranks fourth in the world, and is rapidly winning its way to the third place—the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada. The territorial rights these fisheries cover, and the national growth of which they are the promise, demand the excercise of a high order of "intelligence, zeal, and tact" to cherish and maintain them. This can be done, and was meant to be done, in fulfillment of every international obligation, without a trace of such a record as these pages disclose.

Period From The 23d November, 1879, To The Date Of Your Last Letter, Octo-

Period from the 23p November, 1878, to the date of your last letter, October 11, 1879.

I now beg leave to revert to your communication of the 11th October, 1879.

After I had handed to you my letter of the 23d November. 1878, (No. 45,) mentioning therein no names, and making no mention of names in conversation, you were enabled within a few days to individualize the charges and to frame a judgment that those against "Mr. Ford" were absurd. (No. 68.)

Thus to individualize and designate grave charges in a weighty matter as "absurd," without looking at the proofs, involved great responsibility, for it implied partial inquiry into the matter and the adoption of one-sided conclusions.

There is only one other "highly important action" (Nos. 67, 68) you could have taken in this matter, and that would have involved a full examination of proof and the adoption of just conclusions.

It was impossible for you to have known without inquiry that I alluded to Mr. Ford, and it was equally impossible that you could deede anything as to Mr. Ford's relationship to these falsifications without examining the proofs I was prepared to offer.

There was sent to me in August, 1878, (No. 39,) an answer from the foreign office, in which the following passage occurs:

"The table in question was prepared at Ottawa under the supervision of Mr.

Whitcher, the Canadian commissioner of fisheries, from the official records of gov-

"There is therefore no ground whatever to question the accuracy of the figures referred to, and no blame can in any way attach to Her Majesty's agent in the matter."

As it stands, this reply is magnificent in its deluding simplicity, but, like an enchanting mirage, it fades before the sunlight of truth. It would be grandly strong if it rested upon what it assumes; it is sadly weak, because it assumes what is not if it rested upon what it assumes; it is sadly weak, because it assumes what is not true.

In November, 1878, you could have aided me in correcting the dangerous inaccuracies it embraces, and reversed the erroneous conclusions based on them. (No. 51.) But, with all your knowledge of the subject and opportunities for knowledge, you soothed your conscience with the delusion that the charges were "absurd" in relation to "Mr. Ford."

You could have satisfied yourself in five minutes' time, by looking at what I had to offer, that they were founded on fact, and that there was no escape from them. And during any period within the past year, by proper inquiry at Ottawa, you could have ascertained the exact relation which Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne bore to the acceptance of the frands, and the object of their presence in the "Case."

The quotation from the letter referred to above (No. 32) would then have been corrected, and it would read as follows:

"The table in question was reprinted in Canada, under the supervision of Mr. Ford, Her Majesty's agent, who neglected to correct the falsified records of the Canadian Government it embodied.

"There is therefore ground to question the accuracy of the figures referred to, and blame must attach to Her Majesty's agent in the matter."

The onus of the transaction would not then have been thrown sltogether upon Canada, and the legend so meanly won,

"Auspicium melioris ævi,"

would have lost none of the hope and trust it inspires.

Canada, and the legend so meanly won,

"Auspicium melioris ævi,"

would have lost none of the hope and trust it inspires.

That your passive acceptance of the situation seriously affected the future position of Canada in this matter may be illustrated by a record which is to be found in the proceedings of the Legislature of Newfoundland on April 18 and 19, 1879.

In the reply of Hon. W. V. Whiteway, Q. C., premier and attorney-general of Newfoundland, to the vote of thanks recorded by both branches of the Legislature for his services upon the Halifax fisheries commission, the following statements by Mr. Whiteway are recorded:

"Had the commission found nothing in our favor, what would have been the effect hereafter in British negotiations with the United States and with France?

"Let us for a moment suppose the case of Great Britain proposing to us to give the French a free right of fishing all along our coast, with a view to the solution of our so-called French shore difficulty. We know that this course would prove our ruin, but the argument of Great Britain to us would have been unanswerable;

"You have had the opportunity of a solemn inquiry before a disinterested tribunal sitting in the very center of your fisheries, when every facility was at band for fully investigating their value, and the conclusion arrived at after six months' inquiry by that tribunal was, that a right to fish along-your coast was not worth anything."

Also to be found in a pamphlet published in London in 1879 bearing the title:

"Yote of thanks recorded by both branches of the Legislature of Newfoundland, for his services upon the Halifax fishery commission."

"Extract from report of proceedings of the Legislature, April 18 and 19, A. D. 1879." (Whitehead, Morris & Lowe, printers, 167 Fenchurch street, E. C.)

When this matter comes to be discussed between Canada and the mother country, should the responsibility implied in the first quotation from the views entertained at the foreign office be accepted, their relative positions will b

RETALIATION.

In my several communications to yourself and others, it has been necessary to allude to the consequences which may spring from the presentation of a deliberately falsified record to arbitrators, in a contention for a money consideration between two powerful nations, whose people are free to discuss what is due to themselves.

Prominent among these consequences were the masures of retaliation such unwarrantable malfeasance was likely to invite, unless atoned for.

Similar ideas, though springing from a very different basis, are introduced into the "Case." (Correspondence, &c., page 68;) they are also to be found in the dispatch of Her Majesty's agent, (Correspondence, &c., page 18,) and especially in your own memorable speech before the commission on September 6, (Correspondence, &c., page 190,) in which you instance actual and threatened retaliatory measures on the part of the United States and Canada, which ultimately led to the treaty of Washington.

These references to consequences are so pointed and important that they may be fittingly introduced at length.

"In addition to the advantages above recited, the attention of the commissioners is respectfully drawn to the great importance attaching to the beneficial consequences to the United States of honorably acquiring for their fishermen full treadom to pursue their adventurous calling without incurring constant risks, and exposing themselves and their fellow-countrymen to the inevitable reproach of will-fully trespassing on the rightful domain of friendly neighbors. Paramount, however, to this consideration is the avoidance of irritating disputes, calculated to disquiet the public mind of a spirited and enterprising people, and liable always to become a cause of mutual anxiety and embarrassment.

"It was repeatedly stated by the American members of the joint high commission at Washington, in discussing proposals regarding the Canadian fisheries, that the United States desired to secure their enjoyment, not for their commercial or intrinsic value, but for the purpose of removing a source of irritation.' This commendable desire evidently was reciprocated by the British commissioners in assenting to the proposition that the matter of disagreement as regards a money equivalent 'should be referred to an impartial commission.' "Very serious inconveniences may arise from the point so ably stated by Sir A. Galt in his speech, namely, that by the interpretation thus placed on the treaty by the United States the right of their fishermen to any use of Canadian ports or shores for any purposes save those of fishing, landing to dry their nets, and curing their fish is distinctly renounced and abandoned.

"Were any dissatisfaction to arise in these colonies, particularly in Newfoundland, with regard to the eventual award, the colonial authorities may, not unnaturally, feel that while United States fishermen have for some years already enjoyed the benefit of all privileges without question, advantage has been taken of a rigid construction of the treaty of Washington by the United States Government to escape the payment which was probably contemplated by that treaty; and it might well happen that a disposition should be shown to re-enforce the suspended statutes against any use of their coasts by United States fishermen, except for the specified purposes, thus debarring them from the privilege of purchasing balt, ice, and supplies, and especially of transhipping their cargoes, which last is a most valuable advantage. It is needless for me to point out the very grave difficulties to which any restrictive policy in this direction might give rise.

"The decision, however, removes any reasons which the United States might advance for repudiating the award on the ground of the commissioners having acted ultra vires."—Correspondence, dc., No. 33, page 18.

No. III.—Speech of Sir A. T. Galt before the Commission, September 6, 1877.

"These were complaints which were made in the annual message of President Grant in 1870; and he concludes by suggesting to Congress the course that should be taken in reference to this matter, in the following words:

"'Anticipating that an attempt may possibly be made by the Canadian authorities in the coming season to repeat their unneighborly coaduct toward our fishermen, Irecommend you to confer upon the Executive the power to suspend by proclamation the operation of the laws authorizing the transit of goods, wares, and merchandise in bond, across the territory of the United States to Canada; and further, should such an extreme measure become necessary, to suspend the operation of any laws whereby the vessels of the Dominion of Canada are permitted to enter the waters of the United States.

"It is therefore plainly evident that disagreements were in existence at that time with regard to the fisheries and that the fear that they would produce serious complications between the two countries was present in the minds of the President and Government of the United States. Well, the history of the case goes on to show that these complaints made by President Grant were the foundation of the negotiations which led to the adoption of the Washington treaty," &c.

The ever-present consciousness that all I have described was done with serious apprehensions of the results to which it must eventually lead greatly aggravates the situation; and in view of the outlook so forcibly depicted by yourself the peace and good-will of two great nations rise paramount to every other consideration and justify under the circumstances the appeal which I shall presently make.

I am grateful for whatever you may have said to the Marquis of Salisbury in my behalf as a scientific man having certain information of economic home value to present, although I refused for stated reasons (No. 51) to accept the fruits of your kind offices.

But I cannot feel grateful for the opinions you virtually express of the labors of scientific men, when you offer friendly facilities for adding to the knowledge upon which the permanency of a great industry is based, and accept at the same time the criminal alterations of records of government upon which such knowledge in

But I cannot feel grateful for the opinions you virtually express of the labors of scientific men, when you offer friendly facilities for adding to the knowledge upon which the permanency of a great industry is based, and accept at the same time the criminal alterations of records of government upon which such knowledge in great part rests.

Of what avail would be the work of any "scientific man," as opposed to the motives and power which, for a temporary purpose, dare sweep—or dare countenance the sweeping—from records of government 100,000 barrels of mackerel, or add 100,000 barrels of herring to those records, or alter at the promptings of unlawful expediency the same authorized records of prices, denominations, and quantities. Of what avail would be the conscientious work of any man, under any circumstances, if liable to be opposed by such unscrupious authority—omnipotent within the sphere of its unresisted influence? And what right have you to assume that your countrymen would be content to sacrifice the guidance of correct principle and the interests of self-respect to a craven fear of "being injured" (No. 68) in the objects of their work in life? Let me give you an illustration.

A year and a half ago it was announced that Professor Baird, the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, was engaged in elaborate inquiries into the annual catch of mackerel since that industry attained importance. Indige of the character of his conclusions should he base his results upon the statistical table, bearing the impress of the Imperial Government, presented to the arbitrators during the late contention.

That falsified document subverted all known facts respecting the abundance, periodicity, and fluctuations of the fish in British American waters, and as long as it maintains its authoritative status it render suscless all previously acquired knowledge derived from Canadian records of government, and it impairs the ground-work for future negotiations.

The presence of this falsified table in the "Case of Her Majesty's shown its consequences better than yourself in your speech of the 6th of September, 1877.

In the remarkable letter of Mr. Secretary Evarts to his excellency the American minister, Mr. Welsh, (correspondence respecting the award of the Halifax fisheries commission, October 10, 1878, Blue Book), this danger is pointed out in language not to be misunderstood.

That letter, too, when read by the light of what I have advanced, seems also to indicate a knowledge of the fraudulent statistics in the "Case."

You will bear in mind that what I have described was done in the name of Her Majesty's Government, sanctioned, according to the evidence herewith offered, by Her Majesty's agent, who received his appointment direct from Her Majesty. It was done under the authority of the treaty conceived and framed to remove international irritation and prospective difficulties between two kindred and foremost nations.

The witnesses, some eighty-two in number, on the British side were examined most nations.

The witnesses, some eighty-two in number, on the British side were examined on oath or solemn affirmation.

The treaty guaranteed that the judgment should be made according to justice and equity; not justice alone, but in unison with that higher standard of human reason and sense of right which, guided by a relief in the attributes of the Almighty, rises superior to the technical imperfections of the law.

Considering, therefore, that silence and inaction are equivalent to a renunciation of principle and a blind acceptance of whatever consequences may gather strength to influence the future; that the longer open inquiry is deferred the greater will be the difficulty of proving responsibility, thus provoking recriminations; that Canada, and particularly the maritime provinces thereof, whose territorial rights and leading industry are the occasions of disputes, will probably be made most to feel the effects of retaliation, should atonement not be made; considering, too, that inaction lays as a foundation for the next international discussion of the fisheries question a record of fraud, which places the imperial cause under vast discavantages, and can only tend to unsettle the friendly relations between England and Canada on the one hand, the United States on the other, there is left for me, as the sole custodian of available proofs, but one course, seeing that all others have failed—an appeal to PUBLIC OPINION.

In such a matter vox popult is vox Dei, which alone appears competent to grapple with this great difficulty and insist upon a speedy and proper solution. For, in a day of advancing civilization, of general education and of thanksgiving, it cannot be possible that among English-speaking people, an unreconciled witness of the agency of fraud in a peaceful international contention, or for any other purpose, should be permitted to remain among the records of national councils for whose guidance by the Almighty the church of the State authoritatively prays.

These are antagonistic and irreconcilable conditions. To accept such a witness would be to sustain immoral expediency in opposition to truth. It would imply a disregard of religion, and show that honor was lightly esteemed. It would involve submission to a principle which would gradually close the door to collective rights and open the way to dangerous personal power; for if the principle were admissible in one form it would become possible in many forms, and thus destroy an inestimable security for the preservation of good government.

As for myself—for what I have written and done—I must look forward to very diverse Sir ALEXANDER GALT, G. C. M. G., Lately British Commissioner, Halifax Fishery Commission, Montreal.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I received the printed paper I hold in my hand, which is entitled "Falsified Departmental Reports." It contains far more specific and definite statements of the false and fraudulent testimony and alleged forged and fictitious governmental and department tables at that time used and since prepared doubtless for future use. And what is more to the point, it stamps the same with deliberate, dishonest intention, and proves the falsity by showing the cool, villainous intentions with which the whole is designed. I have but time to read a few sentences, but ask leave to print the same as part of my remarks.

In this letter is shown by minute details how the false tables are made up, how skillfully dishonest and knowingly false they are. And the keen perspicuity with which each separate fraud and forgery is pointed out is worthy of all praise.

Falsified Departmental Reports.

A., compiler of the Analytical Index to the documents of the Halifax faheries commission; goologist to the Red River expedition of 1857; in charge of the Assinbione and Saskatchevan expedition of 1858; author of Narrative of the Canadian expeditions to the Northwest, 1860; Explorations in the interior of the Labrador Peninaular, 1863; official reports on the geology of New Brunswick, 1865; official reports on Waverly, 1869; Sherbrooke, 1870; Mount Uniacke, Oldham and Renfrew gold districts of Nova Scotia, 1872, de. FALSIFIED DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, November 23, 1880.

My Lord: The veracity of the departmental reports presented annually to the governor-general of the Dominion is of the highest importance to the State. When known to embody fallacious details, the subsequent use of these details for any purpose whatever, necessarily carries with it the most weighty responsibilities.

any purpose whatever, necessarily carries with it are most weighty responsibilities.

I respectfully ask permission to point out to your excellency, firstly, the condition in which the annual reports of at least two departments of the Government have been presented to the governor-general and the Legislature during a series of years; secondly, to indicate in part the subsequent use made of details in these reports for State purposes.

I am compelled to take this step in consequence of the recent reappearance of important statistical statements, known to me to be grossly false, over the signature of a Dominion official occupying a high position.

These false statements are used to influence public opinion in a very grave matter and they are the rebash of similar statements previously and successfully employed in a great international contention.

Mr. Whitcher, the promulgator of these statements, is the Dominion commissioner of fisheries, and he closes his communication, which is appended to this letter, with the assurance that it is "founded on published information accessible to everybody."

ter, with the assurance that it is "founded on published information accessible to everybody."

I propose to show your excellency that this "published information" is gleaned or falsified from the annual trade and navigation returns of the customs departments, and the fishery reports of the department of marine and fisheries; also, that during a series of years many of the details embodied in the official reports of these departments of government are of such a doubtful character as to excite the gravest suspicions of their truthfulness, and in some instances to induce a belief that the entries are fictitious, misleading, and premeditated.

The figures used by Mr. Whitcher represent the averages of Canadian fish exports and imports during different fiscal periods extending over the last seven and twenty years. Previous to the appearance of Mr. Whitcher's letter it had fallen to my lot, as an outcome of official duties, to inquire into the accuracy of some of these averages. I found them to be fallacious in the extreme, and to involve in their preparation and use the gravest offenses against morality and law. The renewed public use of these forged statistics necessarily compels me to call your excellency's attention to them chiefly on the ground that they are of Canadian origin, that they consist of the falsified representations of vast international commercial dealings; also, because they serve as records of government for the basis of legislative enactments as well as of imperial diplomacy, and are in a measure based upon Canadian public records of tainted character, officially presented to the governor-general and the Parliament of the Dominion.

I shall first make some general remarks on the averages Mr. Whitcher presents, and then refer to the details they embody, and their relation to the annual trade and navigation returns of the Dominion, and the annual Dominion fishery reports.

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE AVERAGES

CENERAL CHARACTER OF THE AVERAGES.

The table from which Mr. Whitcher takes his averages up to the year 1876, was presented in evidence to the Halifax fisheries commission, upon oath, by Mr. James Barry of the customs department, Ottawa, on the 18th of September, 1877. It is printed on page 435 of the British Evidence, and on page 1071 of the "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," published at Washington. The averages are printed on page 418 of the Imperial Blue Book, entitled "Correspondence respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission," and the argument there based on them is credited by the counsel to Mr. Miall. Hence Mr. Whitcher is so far correct in his avowal that his communication is based upon "published information accessible to everybody."
My analysis of these averages revealed the fact that in the enumeration of Canadian imports and exports of fish and fish products, the following artifices have been employed:

SECTION I.—Fish imports by Canada from the United States.

First. During the duty period, from 1867 to 1873, the items oysters, (excepting the year 1873,) whale oil, lobsters, preserved fish, furs and skins of marine animals, &c., are omitted, but in framing the averages from 1874 to 1877 all these items are introduced.

Second. In the customs returns for 1874, the item "furs, skins and tails, undressed"—a terrestrial item—amounting to $110,258, is changed to "furs and skins of MARINE animals," and introduced as such into the alleged average imports of fish and fish products from the United States.

Third. The prices and quantities of imports of fish and products of fish from the United States, as stated in the customs returns from 1874 to 1877, are in many instances absurdly high and enormously large, suggesting false entries.

Fourth. The imports of Manitoba and British Columbia are included in the imports of the year 1877, but in no other year; these provinces not being included in the treaty of Washington.

Fifth. While whale oil is rejected during the duty period, it is introduced in the free period, and "crude oil," a terrestrial product, is introduced as a marine item during the duty period, but rejected during the free period.

The effect of these various artifices in framing the averages of imports from the United States during different fiscal periods is to lessen enormously the apparent value of Canadian importations of fish and fish products from the United States during the duty period, and to increase enormously the apparent imports of fish and fish products from the United States during the free period, or since the working of the Washington treaty.

SECTION II .- Fish exports from Canada to the United States.

First. In framing the averages of Exports of Canada to the United States during the duty period, 1867 to 1873, the compiler lessened the official record of exports from Prince Edward Island to the United States, and increased the official record of exports to other countries. In some cases this alteration of records of government was made to very large extent.

Second. The prices given in the customs returns of fish exported to the United States, when compared with the prices charged to other countries, are so widely different and so much less during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876 as to suggest certain conclusions respecting the origin of these differences.

Third. Certain large items of fish export to the United States are absent from the customs returns during different years.

The effect of these artifices is to diminish to a very large extent the record of exports of fish and the products of fish from Canada to the United States during both the duty period, from 1867 to 1873, and the Washington-treaty period.

SECTION III .- Fish exports from Canada to other countries.

SECTION III.—Fish exports from Canada to other countries.

First. In framing the averages of exports to other countries, the compiler has thrown out a very large proportion of the exports of the Province of Quebec in the year 1874.

Second. By the introduction of manifestly absurd entries into the customs returns the fish exports to foreign countries are largely increased. The object of this article appears to be antagonistic to the object of the preceding alterations, but it is susceptible of satisfactory explanation.

Third. The compiler has largely increased the fish exports of Prince Edward Island to other countries and lessened the official record showing exports to the United States.

The effect of these artifices and frauds is to increase the apparent exports of fish and fish products to other countries in comparison with the exports of the United States.

I will now proceed to give illustrations of each of the artifices enumerated in the three preceding sections, commencing with the details in the Trade and Navigation Official Returns:

The tables of trade and navigation of the Dominion of Canada.

The tables of trade and navigation of the Dominion of Canada.

Reference to page 369 of the Trade and Navigation Returns for the year 1874, showing the "general statement of imports for the Dominion," will reveal two items, designated as follows:

1. "Furs or skins, the produce of fish or marine animals."

2. "Furs, skins, and tails—all other, undressed."

The first is a marine item, the second a terrestrial item.

Further reference to the trade returns of the several provinces, as given on pages 49, 115, 170, 217, 255, and 291 of the same volume, develops the fact that in grouping these items for the general statement of Dominion imports on page 369 they have been rearranged and by far the larger portion transferred from "furs, skins, and tails, undressed," to "furs or skins, the produce of fish or marine animals," and these items are made there to read:

Furs or skins, the produce of fish or marine animals. Furs, skins, and tails—all other, undressed	$246, 535 41, 826

Again, although the items are correctly given in the summary statement of imports of each province on pages 388, 399, 410, 420, 427, 433, yet in the summary statement of the Dominion they are once more transposed, and the marine product, instead of being represented by $1,051, is represented as before by $246,535.

This grouping of the items does not consist of a mere transposition of values from one heading to another, but it involves the separate acts of selection and addition of marine items and terrestrial items to form the value of $246,535, and this occurs in the trade and navigation returns of the Dominion, and was repeated in 1876. Now for the application of this transformation.

On page 418 of the "Correspondence respecting the Halifax fisheries commission," we find the imports of fish and fish-oil from the United States into the Dominion of Canada given as amounting to $725,921 in the year 1874.

This sum, $728,921, is made up of the following details:

This artifice is repeated in the year 1876, and was detected by the proof-reader, with, however, the loss of thirty-two thousand one hundred and ninety dollars' worth of "furs and skins of marine animals," which disappear, according to the "errata," from the imports of British Columbia.

2 Sea fish, other—fresh (page 367) 22,093, includes $13 from Prince Edward Island.

The first question which suggests itself, after contemplating these figures, relates to the presence and character of the details of symmetrical quantities in the records of the far distant provinces of Nova Scotia and Ontario; Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; Nova Scotia and Quebec.

How did it happen that these figures, representing certain fish items, fit and make equal wholes?

The second question relates to the astonishing importations of fresh fish from the United States by Nova Scotia, and Ontario during the season of 1874, which form the bulk of these figures.

There could be no fiscal reason for the enormous importation of fresh fish in 1874, after the commencement of the Washington treaty, for fresh fish were free during the duty period.

Leaving for future consideration the answer to the first question, I beg to direct your excellency's attention to the following tables, which show the quantities, values, and prices given in the trade and navigation returns for that year, of the fresh fish imports of Nova Scotia:

Imported from the United States during 1874, for home consumption.1

Item.	Quantity.	Value.	Price.
Fresh mackerel Fresh herring Fresh sea-fish, other Fresh oysters Fresh salmon Fresh cod, haddock, ling and pollock	1, 612, 560 lbs No quantity. 8, 619 lbs. ² 2, 863 bbls. 6, 742 lbs. 19, 325 lbs.	$79, 791 7, 961 17, 355 6, 864 1, 210 2, 147	5 cts. a lb., nearly. $2 a lb., nearly. $2.40 a bbl., nearly. 18 cts. a lb. nearly. 11 cts. a lb. nearly.
Total value of fresh fish		115, 328	William American

Without stopping to inquire whether it is in the remotest degree probable that the fishing province of Nova Scotia imported these quantities of fresh fish from the United States at the prices named, I will compare the entries of the most unlikely imports in the different provinces, which I take to be fresh cod, haddock, and pollock. These stand thus:

Imports of fresh cod, haddock, and pollock from the United States, year 1874.

Province.	Quantity.	Value.	Price.3
Ontario . Nova Scotia . New Brunswick .	294, 515 lbs. 19, 325 lbs. 5, 175 lbs.	$13, 737 2, 147 671 60, 450	$0 04½ per pound. 11 per pound. 13 per pound.

By reference to page 502 (1874) it will be seen that New Brunswick exported to the United States 109,786 pounds of the same fish at a shade over one cent a pound, and she imported at the rate of 13 cents a pound. This is what the trade and navigation returns tell us.

The fishing provinces paid, one more than double, the other nearly three times as much, for fresh codish from the United States as was paid by the inland province of Ontario. This is scarcely probable.

It is paralleled, however, by the exports of fresh cod, ling, and pollock from Quebec to South America, the British West Indies, and Italy. The entry is as follows, page 472, Trade and Navigation Returns for 1874:

Exports of codfish from the province of Quebec, including ling and pollock, fresh.

Country.	Quantity.	Value.
Great Britain South America British West Indies Italy	3, 978 lbs. 451, 848 lbs. 150, 132 lbs. 70, 800 lbs.	$684 63, 5084 25, 0225 11, 8006
Total	676, 758 lbs.	101, 014

This is at the rate of fresh codfish to South America at 14 cents a pound; to British West Indies at 16\$ cents a pound; to Italy at 16 cents a pound. And in grand contrast stands the entry on page 502.

New Brunswick, 1874, exported to the United States fresh cod, &c., 109,786 pounds, value \$1,106, or at the rate of ONE cent a pound nearly. Also in 1875.

*Quebec exported 21,490 pounds weight of the same article to the United States at 1.4 cents a pound, (page 570, year 1875,) and in 1877 we find that Ontario exported to the United States codfish, including haddock, ling, and pollock, fresh, 283,000 pounds, value \$3,502, or at the rate of about 3 cents a pound. (Page 518, 1877.)

I pause for a moment to consider the entry—South America, 451,848 pounds, 863,508.

Was it to Costa Rica to Rescale to Pataconic or to COMM check.

Was it to Costa Rica, to Brazil, to Patagonia, or to Chili, that the province of Quebec exported, in the year 1874, 451,848 pounds of fresh codfish, &c., at 14 cents a pound, as recorded on page 472 of the Dominion Trade and Navigation Returns for that year?

On page 473, we may also need that Online

On page 473, we may also read that Quebec exported 35,963 cwt. of dry salted codfish, &c., to "South America" for $174,839, or within a fraction of $5 a hundredcodish, &c., to "South America" for $174,839, or within a fraction of $5 a hundred-weight.

Common sense rejects the statement that the province of Quebec exported firesh codish to "South America" or the British West Indies at 14 and 16 cents a pound, or that the large quantity, representing more than one hundred thousand dollars' worth of fresh cod, ling, and pollock, was ever exported from Quebec to the countries named. It is to be observed that the item "fresh codffsh" is exclusive of the exports by Quebec of the same species "dry salted," "wet salted," and "pickled." Therefore it cannot be a misprint, and it is on a par with the imports of fresh codfish, &c., from the United States by Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at 11 and 13 cents a pound, and also on a par with similar astonishing fish exports and imports during the years 1875 and 1876.

The items are used, too, in the preparation of the tables from which Mr. Whitch er's averages are taken, which were employed for specific purposes.

Trade and Navigation Returns for 1874, pages 168 and 169.

Importations of fresh fish from the United States.

In order to show that the importations of fresh fish and fish products by different provinces from the United States in 1874 are not only abnormal, but excessive in quantity and price, I subjoin comparative tables showing how particular items stand out in bold relief when arranged in order:

Table showing the imports from the United States of fresh fish by the provinces of Ontario and Nova Scotia during a series of years for home consumption, (not including oysters.)

Year.	Ontario.	Nova Scotia.	Total.
1872 1873 1874 1875 1876 1877 1878	$9, 896 12, 553 99, 4361 30, 871 23, 407 12, 034 9, 945 15, 820	$3,378 0 108,464 1,033 7,109 2,081 309 767	$13, 274 12, 553 207, 900 31, 904 30, 516 14, 115 10, 245 16, 587

We learn from this table that in 1874, Ontario imported more than three times as much fresh fish in 1874, and Nova Scotia more than fifteen times as much fresh fish as in any year of the series of eight years given in the table, either before or after. We will now take the imports of Quebec as concerns the item "pickled fish" enverated among the symmetrical numbers on page 10.

The prices of "fish oil, other" stand out in the same unequal measure in 1874 for Quebec. They are as follows:

1874	$1 18 per gallon.
1875	39 nearly.
1877

The amount of fish oil imported by Quebec in 1874 from the United States is very large, and makes a considerable difference in the imports at the price named. The item is: Fish oil, other, 16, 696 gallons; value, $19, 789.

The value of the reported catch of salmon in the province of New Brunswick in 1873 and 1874 is also in marked contrast with the catch of other years. Strange to say, too, the exports of salmon during those years do not conform to the catch. Tabulated, these details are as follows:

which shows that the item fish, all other, $79,759, referred to fresh fish. Vide also pages 367 and 449, for "sea-fish, other, fresh."

What can have become of the enormous quantities not exported, amounting in value to $431,327, and $448,973 for New Brunswick alone in 1873 and 1874? The same remark applies to the dominion exports of salmon in that year.

Hitherto I have confined my remarks chiefly to the year 1874, but similar anomalies are to be found in the years 1875, 1876, and 1877, and in articles of a totally different class. The following comparison of the annual imports of oysters by the province of Ontario is suggestive:

THE REAL PROPERTY.	Although the total values of imported oysters by Ontario are excessive 1876, and 1877, it is the price charged per barrel in the trade and navigation which excite astonishment. These are as follows: Year, 1875:	returns

	The disgrepancies in the charges for "overtone in harmale "during 1975	and 1000

The discrepancies in the charges for "oysters in barrels" during 1875 and 1879 for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec is very striking when taken in connection with other discrepancies pointed out. All of these abnormal entries cannot be mistakes, because in relation to IMPORTS they are all in excess, and, as I shall now proceed to show, similar anomalies in the exports to the United States are all in defect.

Exports to the United States.

In order to illustrate the extraordinary differences which exist in the export prices of certain articles to the United States during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876, compared with the export prices charged to other countries, I append the subjoined table:

Prices of "codfish, dry salted," exported from Nova Scotia to the Spanish West Indies and to the United States.

Year.	Spanish West Indies.	Difference.	United States.
1873	$3 82 4 14 4 88 4 80 4 38 4.04 3 89	$3 60 2 62 3 77 3 78 3 69 3 42 3 36	Less $0 22 1 52 1 11 1 02 40 62 53

It will be observed that this remarkable depreciation of price put upon the EXPORTS of codfish to the United States occurs in the same years as the extraordinary increase of price and quantity of IMPORTED items from the United States. It ceases crease of price and quantities involved are large, and the United States is served with codfish, &c.. at the rate of $3.57 per cwt., while "South America" and British Guiana are charged over $5 per cwt. The figures are, (page 472:)

Dominion exports of dry salted codfish, 1876

United States, 42,323 cwt., at $3.57 per cwt	$151,770
South America, 57,850 cwt., at $5.10 per cwt	295,258
British Guiana, 31,130 cwt., at $5.07 per cwt

From this we learn, according to the trade and navigation returns, that 31,130 cwt. of dry coddish, &c., sent to British Guiana brought more money than 42,323 cwt. sent to the United States.

In 1874, New Brunswick is actually recorded to have sent 9,863 cwt. of cod, haddock, ling, and pollock, dry salted, to the United States at the rate of 76 cents per cwt., (page 502,) and to Italy 2,060 cwt., at $4 per cwt. The entries are: Coddish—including haddock, ling, and pollock, dry salted—exported to the United States, 9,863 cwt., valued at $7,586 Italy, 2,080 cwt., valued at 8,320

And what can the following entry mean?

Exports of Prince Edward Island. Codfish-salted, (p. 516.)-1874

Great Britain United States British West Indies	13 30 24	$3,098 00 10,708 00 9,402 00

From this we learn that in 1874 Prince Edward Island exported 37 cwt. of salted codfish to Great Britain and the British West Indies for $12,500, and 30 cwt. to the United States for $10,708. The aggregate exportation being at the rate of $344 per cwt. for salted codfish.

It is the same with regard to herring. The following table shows that, while in one province a reasonable export price was recorded, in another province a remarkably low export price was charged for exports to the United States.

Exports of pickled herring to the United States

In 1877 Prince Edward Island is recorded to have exported to the United States 1,210 barrels of pickled herring for $3,855, or at the rate of $3.18 a barrel, a difference of $1.39 per barrel between the import and export price of pickled herring for the province of Prince Edward Island, being more than the total value per barrel charged by Quebec in 1874 and 1875 for similar articles exported to the United States.

States.

This importation of six thousand eight hundred and eight dollars' worth of pickled herring by Prince Edward Island from the United States in 1877 is most surprising. The price, $4.77 per barrel, is unparalleled. In order to show how this abnormal importation stands out in a series of years, I introduce the total importation of fish and fish oil of all kinds by Prince Edward Island from the United States, from 1856 to 1876. The quantities are given in the printed table from which Mr. Whitcher takes his averages.

Total fish importations of Prince Edward Island from the United States.

Of which $6,808 is credited to "pickled herring" at $4.77 per barrel. The following is the comparison of prices:

Province of Quebec.

In 1875 the province of Quebec exported pickled herring to the United States at $1.07 a barrel; two years later the province imported the same article from the United States at $4.78 per barrel, or more than four times as much as she sold her own produce for, according to the trade and navigation returns. The other provinces imported at reasonable charges.

Smoked herring.

In 1876 Nova Scotia sent smoked herring to the United States at a trifle over one cent a pound, but to Danish West Indies and Hayti at about two and one-fourth cents a pound. New Brunswick, in 1877, sent smoked herring to Great Britain at over seven cents a pound, to British West Indies at two and four-tenths cents a pound, and to the United States at one and six-tenths cents a pound.

Similar distinguishing export charges are observed in relation to canned salmon. The United States as usual being supplied with the cheap article.

In 1876 the export price of canned salmon to the United States was charged

In 1877, New Brunswick exported 752,126 pounds of preserved lobsters to Great Britain at 11.8 cents per pound, but to the United States she sent 186,722 pounds at 6.1 cents a pound. (P. 563.)

In 1875, Prince Edward Island sent eight thousand nine hundred and two dollars' worth of preserved lobsters to Great Britain, at 15 cents a pound, and sixteen hundred dollars' worth to the United States, at 16 cents a pound, but in 1876 Prince Edward Island sent twenty thousand four hundred and ninety-four dollars' worth of preserved lobsters to Great Britain, at 30 cents a pound, and five thousand seven hundred and sixty-six dollars' worth to the United States, at 50 cents a pound. (P. 462.) The price is higher, but the quantity is very much less. The price, compared with 1875, is astonishing.

Exports of halibut to the United States.

There is, however, another feature to be noticed in our exports to the United States. Certain items during particular years disappear from the record—one item in one year, another item in another year—and there is no knowing how far this practice has been carried. By way of illustration I will take the province of New Brunswick.

rts from New Brunswick to the United Stat

1877	50, 162
1878	35, 259
1879	16, 191

These important items thus disappear from the record in 1876 and 1877, and the question arises, What became of the prolific yield of the growing winter fisheries of New Brunswick in those years?

Price of exports of "sea fish, other, fresh" to the United States.

Price of exports of "sea fish, other, fresh" to the United States.

New Brunswick:

1874—4,123,900 pounds, $22,486, at the rate of one-half cent a pound nearly.

1875—1,335,400 pounds, $23,484, at the rate of 17.1 cents a pound nearly.

1876—no "sea fish, other, fresh" exported to the United States.

The contemplation of these omissions, coupled with the remarkable prices, the introduction of excessive alleged importations to hot, foreign countries of commercially impossible articles, throws a doubt upon all the fish entries, both export and import, during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876.

It will be remarked that while our imports of fish and fish products from the United States are excessive in quantity and absurdly high in price during these years our exports to that country are exceedingly low in valuation, and in some instances disappear altogether. These features wear the aspect of design to a degree impossible to escape attention, and suggest premeditated and concurrent action.

The transformation of "furs, skins, and talls, undressed," into a marine product, involving the selection and addition of marine and terrestrial items, coupled with the subsequent use of the transformed items, gives vivid color to this supposition.

THE CHANGE IN THE YEARS 1878 AND 1879.

The following deduction from the figures supplied by Mr. Whitcher in his communication to the Toronto Globe will illustrate better than any enumeration of details the effect of the anomalies I have pointed out in the trade and navigation returns during the years 1874, 1875, 1876, and 1877, upon our supposed fish-trade relations, and the sudden return to a very different state of things when the entries ceased to exhibit an abnormal and perplexing character.

Mr. Whitcher informs us that "under the reciprocal provisions of the Washington treaty Canada has imported from the United States an annual average of six hundred and sixty-eight thousand one hundred and seventy-six dollars' worth of fish products." This is the average of six years' experience, and covers, therefore, a total importation amounting to $4,009,056 during that period, or from June 30, 1873, to June 30, 1879. By reference to page 418 of the "Correspondence respecting Halifax commission," presented to the Imperial Parliament in 1878, it appears that the annual average of Canadian fish imports from the United States for the four years ending June 30, 1877, amounted to $721,637. Multiplying this number by four we obtain the total value of importations during that period, namely, $2,886 548. Deducting this sum from $4,009,056, we find the value of importations during the fiscal years 1878 and 1879 to have amounted to $1,122,508, or at the rate of $561,254 per annum. The record stands thus:

ì	Average annual imports from the United States.
١	During 1874 to 1877, inclusive	$721, 637 561, 254
ı	Average annual decrease since 1877	160, 383

Average annual accrease since 1877. 100, 383 or about 29 per cent.

A similar comparison between Mr. Whitcher's figures, showing our exports to the United States, and the "published information accessible to everybody," exhibits a like extraordinary change in our commercial relations with the United States as concerns our exports of fish and fish products. Mr. Whitcher says: "In the six years which have transpired since the removal of duties under the Washington treaty, from 1874 to 1879, these exports have averaged $5.971,887, of which one million seven hundred and twenty thousand one hundred and fifty six dollars' worth was imported into the United States, and four million two hundred and fifty-one thousand seven hundred and thirty-one dollars' worth found other markets."

The value $1,720,156 multiplied by six gives $10,320,936, which represents our total exports to the United States of fish and fish products from 1874 to 1879. On page 419 of the "published information" before referred to, we find the average annual exports to the United States from 1874 to 1877, inclusive, given as amounting to $1,505,888, or in the aggregate to $6,023,559. Deducting this amount from $10,320,-936 there remains $4,297,384, which represents our exports to the United States for the years 1878 and 1879, or at the rate of $2,148,692 per annum.

Tabulated the difference is this:

Average annual exports to the United States.
 During 1878 to 1879, inclusive.
 $2, 148, 692

 During 1874 to 1877, inclusive.
 1, 505, 888

Average annual increase since 1877......or about 30 per cent.

or about 30 per cent.

Therefore, according to Mr. Whitcher's figures, compared with the "published information" to which he refers, our average annual imports of fish and fish products from the United States have diminished by $160,383 during the past two years, and our average annual exports to the United States have increased by $642,804. According to these figures the direction of our fish trade with the United States has turned immensely in our favor during the past two years.

The effect of this great change, if it exists, in the fish trade of the Dominion, according to Mr. Whitcher's figures, may be gathered from the following "summary statement of the exports of Nova Scotia" for the year 1879.1

Item.	Produce.	Not pro- duce.	Value.
The fisheries The mine The forest Animals and their products Agricultural products Manufactures Miscellaneous articles	332, 272 509, 225	$139, 382 6, 667 329 16, 437 6, 563 195, 594 13, 234	$4, 638, 377 342, 652 797, 032 348, 709 515, 788 669, 347 14, 113

From this statement it will be seen that the fisheries greatly exceed the aggregate of all other sources of industry in the province of Nova Scotia; therefore all questions relating to her fisheries are of vital interest to the province.

It is indeed of immense importance to all the fishing provinces to know whether it be true that their import fish trade with the United States has diminished 22 per cept. during the past two years, and their export fish trade to the United States has increased 30 per cent. during the last two years.

If it be not true, then the data from which these numbers flow must be fallacions.

The dilemma.

But the inevitable conclusion derived from Mr. Whitcher's figures involves a most serious dilemma, from which there is no escape.

The dilemma in which the country is placed is this: If the figures found in the trade and navigation returns, which form the bases of the averages Mr. Whitcher employs, are true, then the conclusions to which they lead must be accepted also.

If, because they are "records of government," handed to and received by the governor-general and the parliament of the country, they are ex officio, as it were, indisputable, then we must believe that we did export a very large quantity of fresh codifish, at fancy prices, to South America, to the British West Indies, and to Italy. We must believe that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick did import cod, &c., from the United States at 11 and 13 cents a pound, and salmon at 18 cents a pound.

We must have faith in the assertion that we bought large quantities of dry salted cod, &c., from the United States at a much higher price than we sold our own productions to that country.

We must have faith in the record that Ontario paid $11.38 per barrel for oysters from the United States, at the same time that Nova Scotia procured them in the same market for §3.73.

We must believe that Quebec and Ontario together spent $53.350 in barreled oversers at $10.29 a barrel, while Nova Scotia and New Brunswick together purchased the same article in the same market for §3 a barrel, or nearly for one-third the price.

We must treat the phenomenon as real, that Nova Scotia purchased seventy-nine chased the same article in the same market for $3 a barrel, or nearly for one-third the price.

We must treat the phenomenon as real, that Nova Scotia purchased seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and ninety-four dollars' worth of fresh mackerel from the United States at nearly five cents a pound, and that Ontario at the same period bought seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars' worth of nameless fish, which, dove-tailed with forty-one dollars' worth of whale oil at an abnormal price, produce a surprising concurrence of the same figures supposed to be recorded in localities a thousand miles apart.

We must treat the phenomenon of the dove-tailing items, some of which involve a great stretch of credulity, as an accident of commercial business life, which ought not to stagger us.

We must accept without cavil all the anomalies which we find in our trade and navigation returns for those four years, and we must acknowledge the commercial comclusions which flow from such a belief in these "Records of Government" and the vast benefit the country has derived during the last two years from the treaty of Washington. There is no escape from these conclusions according to the premises presented by Mr. Whitcher, based on the trade and navigation returns of the country.

But if our common sense revolts against such a strained commercial record, one series of questions to be answered is: How did these marvelous entries find a place in our trade and navigation returns? Who put them there? Was it done in the province whose industry they are supposed to represent, or where the records of those industries are gathered and grouped together? Was it done at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Toronto, Charlottetown, or—at Ottawa?

The number $1,137,839.

The number $1,137,839.

I now ask leave to call your excellency's attention to another of Mr. Whitcher's average numbers and the conclusions which flow from its analysis and its use, for it is the use of this average number which gives color and force to the interpretation which may be put upon the anomalies in the trade and navigation returns—an interpretation from which one would otherwise shrink.

Mr. Whitcher says: "The average yearly value of fish exports from Canada during the seven years between the termination of the reciprocity treaty and the fiscal operation of the trade of Washington, from 1867 to 1873, was $4,003,375, of which one million one hundred and thirty-seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine dollars' worth was imported into the United States, and two million eight hundred and sixty-five thousand five hundred and thirty-five dollars' worth was absorbed and sixty-five thousand five hundred and thirty-five the save by other markets."

The number $1,137,839 hides the key to the history of much which, for the sake of the honor and interests of the country, ought to be speedily unveiled. This number we find by referring to page 418 of the "correspondence respecting the Halifax fishery commission" is made up from the following items:

For the sake of brevity I will select one of these yearly numbers and submit it to analysis as a type of the whole. I take the year 1872, in which the recorded value of our exports to the United States is stated to be $933,041.

This number is made up of the following items:

The question naturally arises, for what reason and by what authority were the Prince Edward Island "Records of Government" altered in framing the averages Mr. Whitcher uses?

The Prince Edward Island records.

Mr. Whitcher uses?

The Prince Edward Island records.

The liberty taken with the public records of Prince Edward Island present some very repulsive features. They are, indeed, of so gross a character and involve such a menace to the rights and privileges of provinces, and so defiantly uphold false witness in the face of truth, that I advert to them with profound regret.

On the 6th August, 1877, a senator of the Dominion, Hon. G. W. Howlan, testified upon oath before the Halifax commission that 111,512 barrels of mackerel had been exported from Prince Edward Island to the United States in 1872, and that he had obtained his information "from the journals of Prince Edward Island-from a table I prepared myself when I was a member of the government." (pages 75 and 77 "British Evidence," and pages 387 and 391 "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," published at Washington.)

On the 18th September, 1877, Mr. James Barry, member of the civil service, statistical branch, customs department, Ottawa, testified on oath that the tables from which Mr. Whitcher obtains his averages "cover all the ground and give all the information which is to be gained from the returns of both countries." (The Dominion and the United States.) Mr. Barry's figures for 1872 embody the statement that the total exports of fish and products of fish exported by Prince Edward Island to the United States amounted to $92,838, as opposed to the honorable Senator Howlan's testimony that the value of the mackerel alone, exported to the United States in 1872, amounted to $11,512. Mr. Barry's summary is printed on page 435 of the British Evidence, and the details are printed in a document in which the "attention of the commission" is invited in the text.

The utter helplessness of individual warfare against official work of this stamp manifests itself upon a comparison of Mr. Barry's figures with the official figures sent to Hon. Peter Mitchell, on the 19th of February, 1873, by the custom-house officer of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Isla Exported to the United States in the year 1872.

In this independent official statement we observe Senator Howlan's figures for mackerel not only correctly given, but the total amount of fish exported to the United States in 1872, returned by the custom-house officer at $137,746, in place of Mr. Barry's ninety-two thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight dollars' worth. In effect, a senator of the Dominion produces upon oath, before a court of justice, the records of his own work and his own government in a distant province, when that province possessed jurisdiction over her trade and navigation returns. Subsequently, in the same court of justice, an officer of the Dominion customs department at Ottawa produces upon oath an alleged statistical statement of the same details, but differing altogether from the senator's statement, and he delares that he has derived his results from the same source as the senator himself.

The thing is done in such a manner that the officer of the customs department ¹Trade and Navigation Returns for 1879, page 734.

Now, if we subtract $394 from $1,307, the value of New Brunswick imports of whale oil, there remains $713, which is the value of the imports by New Brunswick of "furs, skins, and tails, undressed"—a terrestrial item—from the United States, and which appears to have been split up by the compiler, and $119 given to Ontario and $594 to New Brunswick, as shown on page 8.

But how did it happen that the two added numbers, $594 plus $713, which ought not to have been introduced, make up $1,307, the value of New Brunswick importations of whale oil? And how did it happen that marine and terrestrial items were selected and added together to make a new number for the general statement of Dominion imports, as given on page 369 of the trade and navigation returns for 1874 and subsequently used, as exemplified on page 8 of this letter? The answer to these important questions may be simplified by an examination of other items.

I will once again group together the series of dovetailing numbers so far discovered in the trade and navigation returns for 1874, which suggest manipulation as their origin, on account of their character, bearings, associations, and uses, with some brief remarks on these several points.

The item "whale oil "—100 gallons, $41, or at the rate of 41 cents a gallon—was alleged to have been imported by Nova Scotia from the United States in 1874, at the same time that New Brunswick imported 1,572 gallons for $1,307, or at the rate of 82 cents a gallon. (Pages 169 and 220.)

The item "ish, all other, $79,750" imported by Ontario from the United States, without mention how they came or in what quantity, fitted to $41 for Nova Scotia's importations of whale oil, at 41 cents a gallon, makes exactly the sum paid for Nova Scotia for fresh mackerel, namely, $79,791.

This item, fresh mackerel, stands thus on the record:

"Imported from the United States for home consumption: Nova Scotia—Fish, mackerel, fresh, (1,612,560.) in British vessels; value, $79,791.

The assertion that Nova Scotia imported 50 tons of fre at Ottawa triumphs in this court of justice, and use is made of his falsified figures. The two statements cannot be true, and the senator's statement is susceptible of The two statements cannot be true, and the senator's statement is susceptible of verification.

I shall ask leave still to offer one more illustration of the value of Mr. Whitcher's averages, because it exhibits the manner in which the item "whale oil" has been used in framing the fallacious table from which he takes his figures.

The fish imports of the Dominion from the United States in 1872 are stated, on page 418 of the correspondence before referred to, to have amounted to the sum of $123,670. This sum is made up of the following items:

Ontario

Ont An examination of the details given in the trade and navigation returns of the several provinces shows that the item "whale oil" has been in all cases omitted, and the item, "oils of all kinds, crude, except whale oil and others elsewhere specified," introduced. But this is a terrestrial product, as may be seen by reference to the record of 1873, pp. 22 and 76.

The effect of the omission of "whale oil" and the introduction of "oils, crude, &c.," is noteworthy.

The total importations of whale oil in 1872 were as follows:

 Ontario, (p. 43)
 $4,287

 Quebec, (p. 97)
 9,943

 Nova Scotia, (p. 147)

The terrestrial item, $3,777, was added to the fish importations of 1872, and the marine item, whale oil, amounting to $19,485, was rejected, thus diminishing the value of the imports of fish and fish products by about 8 per cent. This feature frequently occurs during the enumeration of our imports in the duty period. But "whale oil "forms an important item in the subsequent free or Washington treaty period, when it was desirable to increase the imports from the United States.

THE VERACITY OF THE TRADE AND NAVIGATION RETURNS. No. II. Nova Scotia, fresh herring. $7,961
Prince Edward Island, pickled herring. 18 I beg now to direct your excellency's attention to a very important matter which concerns every man, woman, and child in the dominion—namely, the veracity of our records, particularly the trade and navigation returns.

For this purpose I must again advert, at the risk of repetition, to the imports of New Brunswick from the United States for the year 1873, the close of the duty It is to be noticed that there is no record to say how these fresh herring were imported, whether in United States vessels or British vessels; no price is given. The bare fact is simply stated that in 1874 Nova Scotia imported seventy-nine hundred and sixty-one dollars' worth of fresh herring for home consumption from the United States. The total imports of fish of all kinds, fresh and salt, from the United States by Nova Scotia in 1873 amounted to $1,375 less than the alleged importation of fresh herring alone for home consumption in 1874.

The similarity in the three sets of figures—all sevens and nines—for these imported abnormal items is startling.

The seventy-nine hundred and sixty-one dollars' worth of fresh herrings, at one cent a pound, amounts to about four hundred tons of fresh herrings imported by Nova Scotia in 1874 from the United States. They must have come in schooners, but whether British or foreign, is not recorded.

They have come, too, with seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and ninety-one dollars' worth of fresh mackerel, at five cents, nearly, a pound, and with seventeen thousand three hundred and fifty-five follars' worth of fresh "sea-fish, other," at $2 a pound, and they came with fresh salmon, at eighteen cents a pound, and with fresh cod, &c., at 11 cents a pound, and with whale oil at 41 cents a gallon, and all from the United States for the consumption of the fishing people at Nova Scotia.

No. III. New Brunswick from the United States for the Jeriod.

The imports of that province from the United States are given in the table from which Mr. Whitcher takes his averages as amounting to $5,959. This number is obtained from our trade and navigation returns, by adding together all the fish export items, which amount to $4,504 exclusive of whale oil, which was imported to the value of $125.

To this sum there was added the item "oils of all kinds, crude, except whale oil and others elsewhere specified, $1,455."

The two make a total as subjoined—

 There is nothing recorded to show how these "fish, all other" came to Ontario; There is nothing recorded to show how these "fish, all other" came to Outario; no quantity is given.

There is nothing recorded to show how these "sea-fish, other" came to Nova Scotia. The quantity, 8,619 pounds, is introduced into the summary statement on page 410; the price, $2 a pound, is marvelous, and the questions arise, how did the quantity is not found in the general statement of the provincial imports from the United States—find its way into the "summary statement" of the provincial imports; and how did the character "fresh," which is not found in the general or summary statement of the provincial imports, find its way into the general statement of the Dominion imports? "Fish, all other, pickled" $14, 352 "Fish, all other, fresh" 6, 068 Difference Nova Scotia: ¹Page 181-Trade and Navigation Returns for 1878-Sessional Papers. Anno 1 Page 181—Trade and Navigation Returns for Ico.

2 According to the trade and navigation returns New Brunswick imported considerably more cysters in barrels in 1874 than Ontario. We only know the quantity of cysters in barrels imported by Ontario by an inductive process, for the general statement of Ontario's imports does not give the number of barrels. But the Dominion general statement (page 367) makes the total for the five provinces to be 11.542 barrels valued at $51,639. Therefore, subtracting the given quantities for the other provinces from this amount we find that Ontario imported 2,904 barrels against New Brunswick's 3,353 barrels. But how is it that the general Dominion statement contains information which the provincial statement does not contain? Where did the information comesfrom?

There is nothing in the record to show how the "fish, all other," fresh and pickled, came into Quebec—no quantities given, and consequently no price can be obtained; but by reference to page 13, it will be seen that the item "fish, all other, pickled," as an importation from the United States to such a large amount, stands alone in the year 1874 for the series given.

Now, if we suppose that these symmetrical groups of numbers, involving abnormal items, represent the faithful record of commercial transactions, we must recognize a remarkable fortuitous concurrence of numbers in no less than five different countries many hundred miles apart. For we observe—First. That the items are nearly all excessive and unprecedented.

Second. Most of them lack two important elements, namely, how they came and in what quantity.

Third. Most of them involve the separate addition of numerous smaller items. This is best exemplified by considering that 1,612,560 pounds of fresh mackerel imported by Nova Scotia is about eight hundred tons, which required large numbers of fishing schooners to bring them from the United States, and consequently numerous entries at the custom-houses. The entire quantity is recorded as having been brought in British vessels, and imported from the United States at 5 cents a pound, nearly.

Again, the seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars' worth of nameless fish imported by Ontario from the United States during the same fiscal year must have come in numerous vessels or at different periods by rail, and entries must have come in numerous vessels or at different periods by rail, and entries must have come in numerous vessels or at different periods by rail, and entries and have come in the custom-houses; but it passes belief that numerous separate entries in the customs records of Nova Scotia and of Ontario, embracing abnormal commercial products to an enormous extent, wholly unprecedented, should exactly agree in total amount. The same remark applies to the other symmetrical numbers to which attention has been drawn.

But if it be difficult to suppose that the fortuitous concurrence of many separate entries of figures, representing abnormal items, should result in the same numbers when added together in provinces far apart, how much more difficult it is to believe that four similar phenomena should occur in the separate abnormal entries of four different provinces when similarly treated.

Should they be found in these records of the different provinces, not only will all the phenomenal conclusions towar

FOREIGN OFFICE, August 12, 1878.

Sir: I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 17th and 18th ultimo, calling attention to certain inaccuracies which you state that you have discovered in a statistical table annexed to the "Case" presented on behalf of Her Majesty's government at the Halifax fisheries commission, and I am to inform you, in reply, that the table in question was prepared at Ottawa under the supervision of Mr. Whitcher, the Canadian commissioner of fisheries, from the official records of Government. There is therefore no ground whatever to question the accuracy of the figures referred to, and no blame can in any way attach to Her Majesty's agent in the matter.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

Henry Y. Hind. Esg. Windsor. Nova Scotia.

HENRY Y. HIND., Esq., Windsor, Nova Scotia.

It remains for me now to point out the method by which Mr. Whitcher's averages showing "exports to other countries" have been diminished in one particular year, namely, the opening year of the treaty of Washington—the year 1874.

On page 1071 of the "documents and proceedings of the Halifax commission," and also on page 435 of the original copy of the British evidence, there will be found the following figures in the summary statement of imports and exports:

	Imported from the United	Exported—		The same of the sa
Year.		To United States.	To other countries.	Total.
1874	$728, 921	$1, 612, 295	$2, 892, 283	$4, 504, 578

According to the official trade returns these figures have been distorted to the following extent:

The imports from the United States are about $110,000, or 16 per cent. in excess of the trade returns. (See page 8.) The exports to other countries are more than half a million dollars, or 24 percent. less than the trade returns. The total exports are consequently more than half a million dollars short in 1874.

The several provinces have been defrauded by the compiler of this table to the following extent:

FORGED ITEMS IN THE TRADE AND NAVIGATION RETURNS.

The questions which naturally spring from this subject are among the most important which can be asked or answered in relation to the commercial integrity of the country. How did the abnormal items to which I have called attention find a place in commercial records of different provinces far removed from one another; and for what purpose were they put there?

Hitherto I have relied upon a process of inductive reasoning to show the existence of foul play in the manipulation of the trade and navigation returns of the different provinces. I now venture to submit to your excellency proof positive, from which there is no escape, that this manipulation was intentional and perpetrated at Ottawa.

The items mentioned on page 11, enumerating the details of the shipment of a very large quantity of fresh codfish, &c., at fancy prices from the province of Quebec to South America, the British West Indies, Italy, and Great Britain, are foregrees, and forgeries associated with the transformation of imported "furs, skins and tails, undres-ed" into marine products, and the subsequent introduction of these transformed items into a record of the country's industry, which record was submitted in evidence under the sacred shield of an oath during a friendly contention with a great neighboring state.

The quantities inserted tell their own shameful tale, and one for which history must be keenly scrutinized to find a parallel. They are as follows:

It is therefore probable that the same officer who grouped, adjusted, and transformed the "furs, skins, and tails, undressed" into a marine product inserted at the time the fictitious items relating to the exportations of fresh codfish to South America, &cc., into the exports of the province of Quebec, taking his numbers from the details before him.

The year 1876 is not less striking for its forged items in the trade and navigation returns of the Dominion.

Turning to the xports of the province of Quebec one is not startled with the spectacle of resh codfish exported in large quantities and at high prices to South America, but he eye catches at once an extraordinary export of salted codfish, &c., to Great Sitian, South America, Portugal, Newfoundland, Italy, and British West Indies. This voluminous table is stated on its nental fishery reports for the above-named years."

In a printed letter, addressed to Sir Alexander Galt, bearing date Windsor, Nova Scotia, November 10, 1879, in reply to a letter addressed by Sir Alexander Galt to myself, I have shown that this table, alleged to represent the produce of Canadian fisheries from 1869 to 1877, is a gross forgery; that it not only alters the quantities, the prices, and the denominations of the items in the fishery reports from which it is falsely alleged to be taken, but it presents in the aggregate a shamefully concocted contrivance framed to deceive. I have shown that, among many other falsifications, it cuts off more than a million pounds of haddock from the catch of 1870, annihilates 100,000 barrels of mackeral in 1871, adds 100,000 barrels of herring in 1874, introduces cels at $1.78 a pound, alters quantities, denominations, and prices, and is "cooked" throughout from 1869 to 1875.

The use to which this false table was put during the Halifax convention, I have in part indicated in printed letters to Sir A. T. Galt, and to Mr. M. Delfosse, copies of which are inclosed. In the department of marine and fisheries, at Ottawa, my letters on this subject to Sir A. J. Smith are on file, and date from June 15, 1878; the closing letter relates to the presentation of the false statistical table of Canadian fisheries to the Parliament of Canada.

It is a very noteworthy feature in Mr. Whitcher's letter, that he should defiantly furnish, in an unsolicited communication to the public, grounds for the strongest suspicions of the wide-spread dishonesty which is velled by the figures he uses.

The amazing apparent increase in the fish exports of the country to the United States during 1878 and 1879 stand out in such bold relief that they court and demand elucidation for the sake of the provinces whose interests they pretend to portray. This is the record:

Fish exports of Canada to the United States, exclusive of Manitoba and British Columbia.

The sudden advance of our fish exports to the United States from THIRTEEN HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS in 1877 to over TWENTY-ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS in 1878 is astonishing; but it loses all its force as a commercial phenomenon because we find it linked to the false record of years in which the wandering creatures of the land were transformed into the products of the sea, and slipped into our imports from a friendly and neighboring people.

It ceases to inspire confidence and becomes worse than misleading when, stripped of its illusions, it stands forth as the work of unskillful and vicious meddling, which hazarded the best interests of loyal provinces on the success of juggler's tricks.

But worse than all this is the dark formlocking record in the success of juggler's The sudden advance of our fish exports to the United States from THIRTEEN HUN which hazarded the best interests of loyal provinces on the success of juggler's tricks.

But worse than all this is the dark, foreboding record it leaves of the first years in the life of a young and emancipated state.

Our imports and our exports, claiming to be the faithful records of a vast industry extending over three thousand miles of seaboard, appear to have become healthy and reliable witnesses only when the records of provinces ceased to be tampered with, and the manufacture of shrines for the great goddess Diana no longer continued a lucrative trade.

But Mr. Whitcher's recent revival of the stale forgeries embodied in the averages he uses creates suspicion that the false worship is not dead, but merely transferred from Diana to Ceres, or to swift-footed Mercursus, messenger of the gods.

As far as we know from the trade and navigation returns for 1879, the fisheries are the source of 40 per cent. of the entire home production export rade of the maritime provinces. Forty per cent. of the whole exported fruits of the industry of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island are represented by the great fisheries alone. But the government records of this grand and perilous industry, which trains so many fearless and skillful seamen for the brave service of their country, are liable to be curtailed or augmented—altered into monstrosities or converted into Chinese puzzles—by subordinates at Ottawa, for purposes which are neither occult nor legal, manly nor wise.

The motive inspiring, and the use made of the frauducint fast-trade tables.

On page 417 of the "Correspondence respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission." there will be found the following passage, and on succeeding pages the yearly imports and exports and the averages Mr. Whitcher again uses in 1880:

"I now propose to deal at length with two questions of VITAL IMPORTANCE IN THIS INQUIRY, namely:

"The minuteness with which this method is carried out is illustrated in report of Mr. Whitcher, commissioner of fisheries for the Dominion of Canada, which for the year ending December 31, 1877, contains a series of very exhaustive tables showing in details the results of the fisheries in every province of the Dominion. Too much cannot be said in commendation of the very thorough method in which the Canadian Government regulates and protects its fisheries. Accurate statistical information is the one essential foundation upon which protective legislation must rest."

The tables so generously praised are identical with the tables presented in the British "Case" as far as the details of the maritime provinces are concerned, for the years 1869 to 1875, both inclusive, and they are falsified in the manner described in the text.

"Second. Upon whom is the incidence of duties levied upon fish exported by Canada into the United States, the producer or the consumer?"
Reference to the arguments given at length on pages 418 to 421 of the Blue Book named above, or to pages 1876 to 1880 of the "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," coupled with an inspection of the figures there displayed, will amply explain the motive which inspired and the use which was made of these forged trade tables.

Credit is there given to Mr. E. Miall for his "valuable assistance."

Her Majesty's agent, Mr. F. C. Ford, also recognizes the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Miall. He says in his dispatch to the Earl of Derby, dated December 17, 1877:

"Mr. Miall is an English gentleman, at present holding a high situation in the department of internal revenue at Ottawa, and to his uniform willingness to assist me in every way in which his services might be made available, or his talents turned to account, I wish to speak in terms of the highest recognition. To his knowledge of statistics, and accuracy in dealing with them, I ascribe in a great degree the success of that important part of the British 'Case' which depended on a true and clear exposition of figures, and I feel deeply indebted to the Canadian Government for having placed that gentleman's services at my disposal."

These pages explain the venal character of "a true and clear exposition of figures which Mr. F. C. Ford considered it proper to commend to the Imperial Government.

INCIDENTAL CONSEQUENCES.

Not the least troublesome results of the handiwork of Mr. Whitcher and his conferes are the unexpected issues, which, like mushrooms, must spring up from the congenial soil they have prepared.

Mr. Whitcher alludes in his letter to the duty imposed by the United States Government on "tin cans," but he omits to state what he was doing at the very time the committee of the privy council were using their best endeavors to assist the trade of the country.

On the 30th of April, 1875, a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council was approved by his excellency the governor-general for transmission to the secretary of State for the colonies, relative to the imposition of duties by the United States Government on tin cans containing fish imported from the Dominion.

to the secretary of State for the colonies, relative to the imposition of duties by the United States Government on tin cans containing fish imported from the Dominion.

The committee, in their report, urge that "the trade between Canada and the United States in fish, including oysters and lobsters, inclosed in hermetically sealed cans of tin, is large and important," &c. Justat the time when the honorable the privy council were making a great effort to remove this serious restriction on the trade of Canada, the commissioner of fisheries was passing his pen through records of government which obliterated 153,710 cans of mackerel from the aggregate trade of the country by altering the denomination from "cans" to "pounds," as may be seen by comparing the statement on page 78 of the "Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission," with the official details from which that statement is falsely alleged to be taken. A similar and subsequent obliteration of cans of mackerel may be recognized by comparing the statement on page 19 of the Fishery Report for 1877, with the details from which that statement is also falsely alleged to be taken.

The coincidence in point of time between the efforts of the honorable the privy council and the first obliteration or fraudulent change in denomination is proved by the dispatch of Lord Derby to Mr. F. C. Ford, dated August 27, 1875.2

The Catholic countries bordering on the Mediterranean, and those of South America are the best customers for Canadian codfish, haddock, &c. It has recently been the endeavor of the government to open negotiations with Spain and Brazil for increased commercial intercourse.

Curiously enough, Sir Alexander Galt was the agent in the one case, Mr. F. C. Ford in the other. What facilities could these gentlemen expect to gain by parading before the eyes of the courteous ministers of these countries the figures which display the quantities of fresh codfish sent to them?

What possible use could Mr. Francis Clare Ford make of his fish tables of

Although the "published information accessible to everybody" from which Mr. Whitcher draws his averages is a record of deliberate official dishonor and crime, yet its importance to the people of Canada fades before the greater evil which I have endeavored to portray.

The falsification of the business records of the different confederated provinces by subordinates at the central departments, coupled with the deliberate falsification for State purposes—and also at the central department—of the printed and published records of government belonging to any one of the confederated provinces, overrides all other considerations and all consequences arising out of their public announcement.

During a period now extending over two-and-a-half years I have with unwearying efforts exhausted all available methods for quietly arresting the use of the frauds partly described in preceding pages.

Their recent renewed application forces upon me the manifest duty of publicly informing your excellency, in order that proper steps may be taken to insure open inquiry under the auspices of the governor-general and the parliament of the country, into the character and use of the tainted official documents presented to them.

In reply to my statements to Sir A. J. Smith respecting the falsified fish statistics, I was informed in writing bearing date July 11, 1878, that my letter has been sent to Mr. Miall (!) for a report.

On the 23d of November, 1878, and on the 10th of December, 1878, Sir Alexander T. Galt refused to look at proofs which established complicity, and from which he had been told in writing there was no escape, a moment's glance sufficing—with his thirty years' experience of Canadian public documents—to show that there was and is no escape. Yet, on the 26th of September, 1879, he declared to me in writing that he believed Mr. Ford and Mr. Bergne to be stainless in the matter, tightly shutting his eyes when confronted with proof.

As for Mr. J. H. G. Bergne, the neutral secretary of the Halifax commission appointed under Majesty's Government." The corrections in writing subsequently led me, when the table was officially placed in my possession, to the discovery of many of the forgeries.

I can summon it from safe custody, and produce it before a committee of the house of commons, and compare it with the Sessional Papers of the house of commons for 1878, which embrace it. It is found on pages 18 to 21 of supplement No. 5, Sessional Papers No. 1, session of 1878.

Mr. Francis Clare Ford was duly informed by me of its falseness before the commission assembled for which it was prepared, yet with full knowledge of its criminality and its repelling breach of faith he allowed it to remain unchanged and permitted it to be ignobly used, although it carried on its face the sacred impress of a royal name.

Why did Mr. Whitcher, in the year of grace 1880, revive the stale fish trade forgeries, and offer the base coin to the public as the genuine metal, also bearing upon its face the country's impress and the seal of its authority.

There is an ill-defined unwritten chapter in the record of the forged trade tables which makes the responsibilities of these gentlemen measureless and dark.

There lie behind what I have stated in this letter facts which have no manhood in them, and which must some day froth to the surface in the interests of the maritime provinces, and the grand bulwark to the empire they confront; which are injurious to international comity and to good relations between neighboring people of the same history and blood.

The evil influences of the practices involved in what I have described, upon the industry, credit, and integrity of the country are so apparent, that it is quite unnecessary, and indeed it would be unbecoming in me, to enter upon their consideration. It is equally evident that the offspring of the frauds to which reference is now made are ghosts which will never be laid until atonement be made.

And I feel sure that your excellency will be the first to see that the fraudulent alteration of the official records in attributing to the power of those most deeply concerned the failure of my efforts.

I am aware that the revelations made in this letter will astonish and grieve your excellency; but I must appeal to the correspondence (a synopsis of which is inclosed) and to the abuse of masked influence for a justification of the method I have chosen to employ.

When I was in England, in 1878, vainly endeavoring to bring these matters under the notice of the imperial authorities in their proper relation, the question was asked, "What's his motive!" I may freely express it here: it is to check the growth of protected crime; to counteract misrule, as exemplified by the matter of this letter; to assert the rights of truth against fraud; to oppose the tyramy of which I have spoken; to advance, by just means, the interests of my country; to assist in preserving good relations between neighboring and kindred people, and to resist the false worship of "SUCCESS" as the only god.

I beg leave to close this letter with the avowal that neither in the preparation of its details, nor in the sources of the information to which I have had access, have I used, in any form or shape, other than self-obtained knowledge, derived from "published information accessible to everybody," or printed information embodying the announcement that it was intended for the Halifax commission.

The statements herein made are the outcome of official and neutral work; the consequences must rest with those who, preferring their own aggrandizement to the interests of their country, have accepted the aid of dishonest dealing and repelled or countermined all efforts in the direction of honor, integrity, manliness, and truth.

I have the honor to be, your excellency's most obedient servant.

Compiler of the Analytical Index to the documents of the Halifax Fishery Commission.

MR. WHITCHER'S LETTER.

The Fisheries question—Exportation of fish from Canada to the United States—Importations from the United States to Canada under the Washington treaty.

SIR: In view of promised action by the American Government to restore import duties on certain products of the Canadian fisheries, it may be interesting to consider the probable effect of such legislation on the fish trade of the Dominion. The New England fishing interest seems to have persuaded the authorities at Washington that the very existence of this industry depends upon free access to United States markets. It is assumed, therefore, that the reimposition of customs duties against Canada will be a substantial, as it is a vicarious, sort of retaliation for alleged injury sustained by United States citizens at Fortane Bay, in Newfoundland. A careful examination of the trade returns of the United States and Canada, before and since the Washington treaty, shows the results of practical experience in quite a different light.

The average yearly value of fish exports from Canada during the seven years between the termination of the reciprocity treaty and the fiscal operation of the treaty of Washington from 1867 to 1873 was $4,003,375; of which $1,137,839 worth was imported into the United States and $2,865,533 worth was absorbed by our markets. Thus, under a tariff meant to be prohibitive, 28 per cent. was marketed in the United States and 72 per cent. in other countries. In the six years which have transpired since the removal of duties under the Washington treaty, from 1874 to 1879, these exports have averaged $5,971,887; of which $1,720,156 worth was imported into the United States and $4,251,731 worth found other markets. The percentage to the United States was a trifle over 28, and that to other countries was a fraction over 71. While the annual increase of fish trade during this latter period averages $1,968,512, only five hundred and eighty-two thousand three hundred and seventeen dollars' worth represents exports to the United States, the business with other markets having increased to the extent of $1,366,195 yearly average. This enlarged exportation to both European and American markets is a consequence of increasing production and demand, and bears no special relation to the remission of duties under the treaty. Between the years 1867 and 1873 the produce of the Canadian fisheries increased in value from about four millions to ten millions of dollars. The ratio of increased production was greater throughout the prohibitory than the free period. An extended market in the United States cannot therefore be credited with stimulating the fishing industry of Canada in any peculiar manner.

Comparing our fish trade for twelve years under the treaty of 1854, it is found that the treaty and the production was $2000.025, the relation to the found of the treaty and the production was greater throughout the prohibitory than the free period. An extended market in the United States cannot therefore be credited with stimulating the fishing industry of Canada in any peculiar manner.

prohibitory than the free period. An extended market in the United States cannot therefore be credited with stimulating the fishing industry of Canada in any peculiar manner.

Comparing our fish trade for twelve years under the treaty of 1854, it is found that while the average yearly bulk was $3,960,375, the relative proportion of exports to the United States was 35 per cent., and 65 per cent to other countries. There is therefore a comparative decrease under the Washington treaty, which may be accounted for in part by the transfer of attention to other markets, where an enforced experiment has become an established advantage. Such also was the case in respect of the lobster business, in which the export of canned lobsters to European markets increased between 1874 and 1879 from about three hundred thousand dollars' worth to nearly a million of dollars' worth, without materially decreasing the annual export to the United States, notwithstanding the notorious lobster-can tax. This cute dodge was resorted to in 1875 for the purpose of giving to United States citizens who were canning lobsters in Canada, because of the exhaustion and closure of the Maine and Massachusetts fishery, a monopoly of the United States market, to the disadvantage of Canadian canners. If the existing lobster regulations had been firmly adhered to at that time this discreditable bit of sharp practice might have been foiled of any appreciable benefit to its authors, and at the same time we should have economized our own resources and assured to Canadian packers and fishermen the permanent control of an almost exclusive source of supply.

Under the reciprocal provisions of the Washington treaty Canada has imported from the United States an annual average of six hundred and sixty-eight thousand one hundred and seventy-six dollars' worth of fish products, 74 per cent. of which is freed from duty, 26 per cent. being still dutiable. We could supply the greater part of this demand from Canadian instead of from American produce. The exclusive use

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, July 13, 1880.

Windsor, Nova Scotia, July 13, 1830.

Sir: A recent misleading communication to the public, by a Canadian official, relating to the effect likely to be produced on Canadian trade with the United States by the contemplated abrogation of the fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington, has compelled me to reveal harassing circumstances connected with the data upon which that communication is based, wholly apart from the now well-known fraudulent fish statistics.

These data consist of fallacious trade returns of twenty-six years, which were presented to the Halifax commission in evidence. The only inference that can be drawn from the systematic alteration of the figures comprised in these trade returns points to the conclusion that they were intended to mislead the arbitrators. Their recent revival and use for another public purpose is the primary cause of this open communication.

The Toronto Globe, in which the communication referred to appears, is a leading Canadian journal. It is conducted with ability and energy, possesses a large circulation, and is the recognized exponent of the views of a powerful political party.

The Toronto Globe, in which the communication referred to appears, is a leading Canadian journal. It is conducted with ability and energy, possesses a large circulation, and is the recognized exponent of the views of a powerful political party.

On the 9th instant the Globe notices editorially a letter I addressed to the editor, but which it does not publish, in reply to the misleading efforts of the Canadian official, and reference is made by the editor to you and to your letter to me bearing date October 19, 1879. In this letter you say:

"The 'cases' presented by either government, however, are distinct from the evidence, and could not alter nor impair the value and weight of such evidence as heard before the commission."

This quotation has been again and again referred to by the Canadian press in answer to my assertions respecting the falsified fish-catch introduced into the British "Case," and it is now repeated with reference to a far more serious fraud, about which you and the public knew nothing whatever a week ago, and might have known nothing for some years to come had the Canadian official not attempted to use the figures a second time for the purpose of guiding public opinion on a very important public question concerning trade relations.

It is now my duty to direct your attention to forged statistics used in evidence of a tenfold more important bearing than the false figures representing the Canadian she-catch which appeared in the British "Case."

The Canadian export and import trade returns, covering twenty-six years, and presented to you in evidence, are, in the main, forgeries. It is the public use of these forgeries by a Canadian official, within the past month, which compels me to call your attention to the evils which have in part resulted from the passage in your letter so frequently quoted, and to arrest, by this seemingly harsh proceeding, the growth of those evils.

Article 21 of the treaty of Washington is as follows:

"It is agreed that for the term of years mentioned in article 23 o

Any man of unbiased mind who chooses to form a comparison between the forged trade returns and the true trade returns for twenty-six years must arrive at the opinion that they lead to opposite conclusions. Hence the importance of arresting at once the new use and arguments, based on forged returns, which has recently been publicly advanced in relation to impending negotiations and international policy.

Hence, also, it will appear that the force of the reasoning embodied in the quotation from your letter in regard to evidence submitted to you falls to the ground, in so far as it concerns the twenty-first article of the treaty of Washington.

The importance of this matter, however, relates to the future; the award of the Halitax commission is a thing of the past, and with it I have nothing whatever to do; but I am bound by the knowledge of the subject I possess to prevent fresh use of these fraudulent trade tables for any purpose whatever, and expressly when that purpose tends to lessen the friendly intercourse and the mutual respect of neighboring nations.

In order to show you the nature and bearing of the forgeries, I will take one year out of the twenty-six, and one in which the true trade tables are easily accessible.

Similar discrepancies, though on a smaller scale, between the true trade returns and the figures presented in evidence occur in Nearly every year of the Siries from 1855 to 1874, and they are so systematically adjusted that they present a balance of advantages in favor of the United States during the reciprocity treaty and during the Washington treaty, and against the United States during the period of fiscal imports, namely, 1867 to 1873. All this is shown in the argument advanced on pages 1877 to 1880 of the "Documents and Proceedings of the Halifax Commission," and pages 417 to 422 of the "Correspondence Respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission," and it is shown once again in June, 1880, by the Canadian official in his recent communication to the Toronto Globe, wherein he uses the forged trade tables.

The true trade tables certainly do not point to these results, but they rather tend to strengthen the opposite conclusions.

The true trade tables.

The true trade tables certainly do not point to these results, but they rather tend to strengthen the opposite conclusions.

It is thus that in the year 1877 the twenty-first article of the treaty of Washington was made to appear to you prejudicial to Canadian interests, by means of fraudulent trade statistics submitted in evidence upon eath. In the year 1820, long after that dishonest but successful transaction, the public at large are sought to be moved by a Canadian official to concur in negotiations and in legislation which are indicated as advantageous by the same netarious process and a rehash of the same forgeries.

I have derived my knowledge of this matter from the documents officially placed in my hands by both contending parties in 1877, for the preparation of a fair and just analysis of those documents. I have received no aid from confidential documents or aid from confidential information of any kind whatever.

The Toronto Globe, unlike some other critics, says of my work: "He is in a position to speak with authority as to the matter of fact, for he was appointed after the award was made to index and otherwise prepare the documents in the possession of the commission for publication. But it does not necessarily follow that these discrepancies were purposely introduced with a view to 'cheating' the United States agent and deceiving the commissioners." This is a matter for inquiry. From the prominent official position you occupied as neutral arbitrator in relation to the origin and purposes of the frauds, and the consequences which I fear have arisen from that deluding passage in your letter which gave encouragement to the repetition of the crimes I have described, I trust you will consider it to be due to the position you then occupied, to your present station, and to the interests of humanity, to urge an open investigation of the whole matter.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

APPENDIX No. III. Letter to Sir Alexander Galt.

[No. 83.]

WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, July 18, 1880.

Sin: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter addressed by me to M. M.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter addressed by me to M. M. Delfosse.

Had you thought fit to use the opportunity and knowledge you possessed nearly two years since, the wretched repetition of the infamy which surrounds part of the work of the Halifax commission would not have occurred, nor would there have been any occasion for this letter.

I beg of you to gather from the inclosed communication that escape from the proofs of forgery and * * * for dishonorable purposes during the Halifax contention is hopeless, and that immediate publicity is the necessary result of recently renewed and encouraged attempts to use the same unlawful means again, with a view to direct and control opinion.

I withhold for the present any reference to a third species of very suspicious official work which envelopes the preliminaries of the same international contention. This doubtfal and farreaching effort frothed to the surface during my analysis of the forger's work.

The conscious enjoyment of the fruits of successful crime is fraught with moral and legal responsibilities to which I need not ask your attention, except for the sake of subordinates, particularly the young, among whom may be those whose instincts are not yet bardened, and who may be unaware of the danger of placing too confiding a trust in the influence of position and the power of superiors to afford shelter in time of greatest need.

I therefore trust that you will not, as heretofore, oppose my application to Lord Granville for a full, impartial, and open inquiry into the whole matter.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

HENRY YOULE HEND,

Compiler of the Analytical Index to the documents of the Halifax Fisheries Commission.

To Sir Alexander Galt, G. C. M. G., Lately Her Majesty's Commissioner at the Halifax Commission, &c.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the important, monstrous international wrong which I bring before this House and the country. The open charge, clear as noonday, that in an arbitration between two of the most civilized, most powerful nations of the globe, to settle grave disputed national rights, and provide for the elimination of every and all questions from which trouble might ensue in the future, false, forged, and fraudulent testimony was knowingly and designedly manufactured and produced by one party to his own advantage and the wrong of the other; that the governmental officials doing that dishonorable and most dastardly act have utterly refused even to investigate, much less to atone for such an international crime, although called much less to atone for such an international crime, although called upon so to do by British officials. But beyond that the government itself has received $5,500,000, the amount of that iniquitous award. Its agents accomplished the fraud, and the whole English nation is Its agents accomplished the fraud, and the whole English nation is enjoying the fruits of the ill-gotten plunder. Has national probity departed from England? Can England in honor retain what has been procured by fraud, false testimony, fraudulent alterations of public official documents, in a proceeding tainted by suspected fraud in the appointment of the arbitrators, carried to finality by conceded falsehood, established by a pretended adjudication assumed to be made by an illegal part of the tribunal to whom the case was submitted, and ended by the prompt payment of the disgraceful award by the Government against whom the wrong was perpetrated.

It is with no pleasure, Mr. Speaker, that I have brought before the country this wicked and disgraceful fraud. But within two or three years this whole question under this treaty will be brought up again unless meanwhile the treaty is terminated. The $500,000 a year to England will, as res adjudicata, be insisted upon as the measure of England will, as res adjudicata, be insisted upon as the measure of damages for the privileges of this treaty.

When the knowledge of these frauds, which were initiated by the British international agents who conducted the "Case" before the commission, was brought to the attention first of the Belgian and then of the British commissioners, then of the Marquis of Salisbury, and then of the British home government, it would naturally be supposed that the high sense of national honor supposed to obtain among English statesmen would have led to a full investigation and atone-English statesmen would have led to a full investigation and atonement, even to the setting aside of the award or the refusal to receive, or, if received, the quick return of money received in a proceeding so tainted by falsehood and fraud. Such, unfortunately, was not the case; and at the bar of international justice England must in the near future be compelled to stand and defend itself against this unheard-of crime, national perjury and falsification of public records, or by her silence admit her guilt. Punishment by England of the guilty authors of this crime and public disgrace at the hands of the British Government must follow all participants and promoters of the fraud, or the English Government and British statesmen must stand particips criminis. If this fraud is fully proven and prompt apology and atonement not rendered, all official communication or recognition should cease, as you would cease all relations with a convicted perjurer and thief.

I am pleased to say that the present party in power in England had no hand in this great scheme of national plunder, and that they feel keenly the disgrace brought upon their nation, and that they will gladly co-operate in undoing the wrong. Such at least are intimations that I have received.

But let it not be imagined for a moment that were it $50,000,000 or 500,000,000,000, and the fraud a thousand times more wicked and disgraceful, the money would be received back. Such is not the object to be accomplished here. No, but it is to fix this disgrace by an official investigation, to brand the criminals, to hold up to the nation and the civilized world the English statesmen then in power, now happily retired, in their true light, that they may feel the finger of scorn and find that under their leadership England has again earned its disgraceful name, "Perfidious Albion." But the disgraceful epithet will not remain. Under more high-minded, honorable statesmen we have reason to believe the wrong will be disclaimed and justice and right prevail

I have been asked if the present representative of the British Government accredited to the United States is in any way involved in these nefarious and wicked proceedings. It gives me great pleasure to reply that in not the least particular is he involved or any act of his, private or public, even questioned, nor indeed do I believe can be. His record is clear and unstained, and I trust he will be among the first to denounce, when it is proven, as it surely will be, this record retired.

Iask permission of the House that the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk may be referred to the committee along with the resolution presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer.] [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to be heard on this subject.
Mr. NEWBERRY. Let my preamble and resolution be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been alleged in the public papers, and quasi-official documents, well authenticated, that before the so-called "fisheries award commission" made in Halifax in November, 1877, false, fraudulent, simulated, and altered official statistics and documents, evidence and testimony were offered and introduced before the said commissioners, in order to procure said unjust and illegal award, all of which false and fraudulent statistics and evidence were well known to and were procured designedly and with corrupt intent by the officials and agonts of the British Government, and which said false and fraudulent statistics and evidence and said illegal award were subsequently brought before the House of Representatives of the United States, and were the foundation for the act of Congress appropriating $5.500,000 to pay said illegal, unjust, and fraudulent statistics and evidence a great public national scandal has been created; and

Whereas this state of facts was long since brought to the notice of Monsieur Delfosse, the joint commissioner, and of Mr. Galt, the British commissioner, and of the British Government in England, who have each and all declined to take any steps toward investigating this extraordinary state of facts; and

Whereas in relation to this matter a high-minded official and distinguished statesman in England used this remarkable language, "MONEY IS DUST IN THE SCALE AS COMPARED WITH HONEST DEALING IN THE RELATIONS OF THE TWO COUNTRIES;" and Whereas all the false and fraudulent statistics and evidence, and the award and action of Congress will be again involved in 1883, when said treaty must be terminated and some new convention be established or the payment of nearly $500,000 a year be taken as res adjudicata, as fixed damages, under said treaty if the same is not ended; and

Whereas it is believed and alleged that bribery has been used, that false statements and evidence have been corruptly purchased by the British authorities, and the promoters of a great national wrong, although known, have been rewarded by the same government for their infamous crime; and
Whereas it is also alleged and believed that there are men high in position in England who stand ready and have already taken steps to co-operate with statesmen of this country, as soon as a public inquiry is set on foothere, to take the necessary steps to right this momentous wrong: Therefore,
Resolved, That a special committee, to consist of —— of this House, be appointed, to whom this communication to the House shall be referred, with the accompanying letters, and that the same be printed in the Recomp; and that said committee have authority to sit at any time, and to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and to employ a clerk and stenographer, and may proceed to any other place to prosecute said investigation if deemed advisable by said committee at any time. And the expenses of said committee and investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to this resolution. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois desired simply to offer for reference to the regular committee of this House a resolution calling for information. This additional resolution of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] proposes, as I understand, to raise a committee—

Mr. NEWBERRY. My object is to have this resolution referred to the same committee to which the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois has been referred.

Illinois has been referred.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understood, the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois was introduced for reference; and it has been referred. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] then asked consent to make a statement touching this question, and the House by Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say a word on this subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that in order to perfect the record a word or two ought to be said giving a slightly different view of this matter. If gentlemen will allow me a moment, I wish to say to this

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the call for the regular order.
Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say that I more than doubt the wisdom of this proceeding, and of the language employed in connection with it. I speak for the honor of my country and this House, if nothing else. To the eternal honor of both people, the British and the United States Governments concurred in submitting to an international arbitration certain great questions. An award was made against the British at Geneva, and they paid it like men.
Mr. McCOOK. But they grumbled a good deal—
Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, among themselves; but they paid the money. Another question, the question concerning the Canadian fisheries, was

Mr. McCook. But they grumbled a good deal—
Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, among themselves; but they paid the money.
Another question, the question concerning the Canadian fisheries, was submitted to arbitration; and an award was made against us. We have likewise paid the money. Now, it is alleged in the public journals and the gossip of the world that in the latter case there was grossly fraudulent testimony against us. When such an allegation is made, I am willing to pursue toward a friendly nation the policy which I would pursue in controversies among private gentlemen. I would wait until the British Government has had time to hear whether it has been imposed upon, for courtesy requires we should take it for granted that whatever fraud there may have been was committed on that government primarily. I would wait until the British Government shall have investigated the matter; and if it should discover that it has been grossly deceived, I have not the shadow of a doubt it will come to us and ask that the question shall be reopened. I prefer that this matter shall rest for the present, where I am sure it can safely rest, in the hands of our Secretary of State.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Just one sentence in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. BLOUNT. This is simply a matter of reference, and I object to further debate.

Mr. BLOUSI.

to further debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the rules I believe I hold the floor for an hour, consent having been given for the introduction of the resolution which I presented. I do not desire that debate on a question of so which I presented. I do not desire that debate on a question of so great importance should be cut off by one objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to debate on a mere question of reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois simply stated that he wanted to refer his resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; and I moved the reference of the resolution, which is a debatable question.

The SPEAKER. Not in the present position of the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will be

Mr. NEWBERRY. I want simply to say that the British Government and its officials have had notice of this matter for sixteen, eighteen, or twenty months—probably two years.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the only question before the House is the question of reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the two resolutions, together with the documents furnished by the gentleman from Michigan, be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] went directly to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and then the gentleman from Michigan asked to be allowed some time to speak on the subject, to which the House gave its consent. its consent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire simply to say with the leave of the House that the British Government compel us to furnish in this case the same kind of proof that we did under the foreign-enlistment act, while they furnish no proof and take no steps in the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference of this second resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be read.
Mr. BALLOU. Perhaps I can briefly state the principal fact in relation to this subject, which will be preferable to reading the report, which is a voluminous one.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not object.

Mr. BALLOU. Mr. Chairman, it appears that George Wright, while in the employment of the Government, invented a linchpin for artillery-carriages in 1862, which was adopted by the Ordnance Department and approved by the Secretary of War in September, 1863, and that Wright obtained a patent for the linehpin in May, 1875, and applied to the Secretary of War for such compensation as might be awarded him for the past and future exclusive use of the same, which application for remuneration was refused by the Assistant Secretary of War, on the ground that Wright, when he made the invention, was in the employ of the Government; which decision, with remonstrance, was afterward presented to the Secretary of War, who decided that the claimant must apply to Congress for compensation, if entitled to it. if entitled to it.

if entitled to it.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that this linchpin was invented by him; that it was considered valuable to the Government; that it has been in use by the Government from the time of 1862 up to the present. The only question is, Was it invented by any one before Wright, or is an employé of the Government entitled to consideration or remuneration for an invention made while in its employ? I have asked the Department two or three questions, which, with their answers, I think will bring the whole subject before the House.

The Secretary of War, in answer to my letter, writes:

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, requesting the following information for the use of the Committee on Patents, House of Representatives, said committee having under consideration House bill 2414, for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright, namely:

First. Is the Department in possession of any official record showing that a similar linchpin was used or patented in this or any other country at the time of George Wright's invention of a linchpin?

Second. Was any law officer of the Government called upon for an opinion as to whether said Wright's claim for said linchpin was valid in law and just that it should be paid?

Third. Has the right of any employe of the Government to compensation for the use, by the Government, of his invention been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States; and if so, give the name, employment at the time of invention, and compensation allowed such employe?

In reply to the foregoing questions, I beg to inclose herewith copy of report of the Chief of Ordnance on the subject, which furnishes the information desired, so far as the same can be furnished by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. L. W. Ballou,
Of Committee on Patents, House of Representatives.

The letter from the Ordnance Office is as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 5, 1881.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War with the following replies to the questions propounded within, namely:

First. This department can find nothing on its files on the subject except the statement of Colonel Benton in his report on the first page of Senate report 28, Forty-first Congress, second session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that report is as follows:

Colonel Benton says, in the spring of 1863. Mr. Frances, of New York, called General Ramsey's attention to the fact that a similar linchpin was in use in France, and afterward sent him a sample, the drawing of which is herewith inclosed. Mr. Wright states that he was not aware of such pin, and has sworn to his statement in the patent which he took out for it on the 9th of May, 1865.

Mr. Wright claims that his pin is superior to the French pin, inasmuch as it is stronger from having no slot in the body. I believe it has given entire satisfaction to the artillery, and on the strength of this was adopted by the ordnance board in the fall of 1863.

I continue to read from the letter of the ordnance officer:

I continue to read from the letter of the ordnance officer:

Second. The only law officer called upon for an opinion touching the case was Judge Holt, Judge-Advocate-General, whose opinion will be found in Senate report 28, Forty-first Congress, second session. This bureau is aware of no law or regulation precluding the Government from contracting with one of its employés not in the military service. Paragraph 1002 of the regulations probibits the entering into a contract with any person in the military service by any military officer or agent, and paragraph 1003 provides that no such person shall receive any compensation for any service, &c., performed by him beyond his fixed pay, &c., unless the same shall be authorized by law and explicitly set out in the appropriation. This bureau has been informed by the Chief of the Ordnance Department that Wright, who is a master workman at the Washington arsenal, is in no manner connected with the military service. The provisions of the two paragraphs referred to would not therefore apply to his case; and it is accordingly concluded that the Secretary of War may lawfully compensate the party for the past use of his invention as well as purchase the right to use it exclusively for the future.

Third. The Supreme Court decided in the case of Burns vs. United States, that "if an officer in the military service, not specially employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements, devises a new and valuable improvement in arms, tents, or any other kind of war material, he is entitled to the benefit of it, and to letters patent for the improvement from the United States equally with any other citizen not engaged in such service; and the Government cannot, after the patent is issued, make use of the improvement any more than a private individual without license of the inventor or making compensation to him." (See 12 Wallace, page 252.)

S. V. BENÉT, Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance

I need only say a word in addition; that inquiries have been made where this linchpin has been used in the various places in the service, in the arsenals and in the yards, and the testimony is uniform that it has been valuable, and that it has been of great service to the Government. It is in use at this present day, and in estimating the compensation which should be made to this party for the use of it estimates vary from $2,500 to $20,000. The committee, by a majority, favored $5,000, but it was suggested that inasmuch as Mr. Wright had offered in the commencement, in 1862, to sell the right to the Government for $1,500, or asked that rather as a remuneration for his invention, that for the United States to pay that $1,500, with interest added for seventeen years, would be about a fair compensation, and that would make the amount about three thousand five hundred dollars, would make the amount about three thousand five hundred dollars, which received the unanimous approval of the committee. The committee have therefore recommended it, and it is hoped that the Committee have therefore recommended it, and it is noted that the Committee of the Whole will adopt it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the provision of the Constitution of the United States in reference to the constitution. this matter. In enumerating the powers of Congress the Constitution provides that-

It shall have the power to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

respective writings and discoveries.

Now, I ask you if there is any other power under the Constitution which would give the House authority over this matter, and if there is not, where is the authority for this appropriation at all?

Mr. BALLOU. But there has been a patent granted for this already. Mr. STEPHENS. We can buy anything we want.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood that it had not yet been patented. I misunderstood the statement of the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. VANCE. The facts of the case are that the Government used this man's property, which was very desirable and useful to the Government, and now it is proposed simply to pay him for the use of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to be informed positively upon this question. Had the party in interest here a patent on this improvement or not?

ment or not?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; he had a patent and the Government made use of it, and the committee thinks that he ought to be paid for the use of it

Mr. BALLOU. I move that it be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire before the question is put to say a single word upon this point. As I understand it from the statement of the gentleman from Rhode Island this man perfected this patent and the War Department used it and is continuing to use it up to this time. He received a patent on it and now the War Department has refused to pay him for the use of it, simply because it is said he was in the to pay him for the use of it, simply because it is said he was in the service of the Government at the time he invented it. That is to say he was a clerk drawing $3 a day from the Government, and because he was drawing a salary—the paltry sum of $3 a day as a clerk—the War Department says we will not pay him for this valuable improvement, although the Government has been using it all the time since it was not tracked with a say it.

ment, although the Government has been using it all the time since it was patented and is continuing to use it.

The man is dead, and the widow now comes to Congress and asks a reasonable appropriation for the use of this patent by the Government. Now, why should we not pay it? As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] well said when the objection was made by his colleague, [Mr. BLOUNT,] we can buy anything; we can buy this man's right. The Patent Office gave him the exclusive right, and if the Government has been using and has had the benefit of this patent, why should we not pay for it what is right?

The report of the committee, as I understand it, is unanimous. I understand further that in the Forty-first Congress a bill similar to this passed both Houses, but failed to become a law for want of time to receive the President's signature.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Government paid anything for this invention so far as it has had the use of it?

Mr. FINLEY. I understand not. I understand there has not been

Mr. FINLEY. I understand not. I understand there has not been one dollar paid.

Mr. WHITE. Is there not a report in this case? Back here we have not heard what has been going on, and we want to know something about this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island moves that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WARNER. Before that is done I wish to say a word. The report, I believe, was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report has not been read. When the bill came up the reading of the report was dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER. I have looked over the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I suggest that the report be read. Not one-fifth of the House heard the statement of the gentleman from Rhode Island. Let it be read, and then the gentleman from Ohio can be heard intel-

Mr. WARNER. I am quite satisfied to have the report read.
The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom were referred the petition and bill (H. R. No. 2414) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright, widow of the late George Wright, which ask for remuneration for the use of his patent linchpin, adopted and used by the United States Government, make the following report:

On May 20, 1862, while George Wright was employed as a master machinist in the Washington Arsenal, at a compensation of $3.73 per day, he invented a linchpin for field artillery carriages, which was adopted by the Ordnance Department and approved by the Secretary of War, under date of September, 1863.

On the 9th of May, 1895, the said George Wright obtained a patent for said linchpin, and shortly thereafter applied to the Secretary of War for "such compensation as might be awarded him for the past and future use of said invention or patent" as he might be considered "entitled."

This application was referred to the Ordnance Department, and by it to Major Benton, commanding at the Washington Arsenal, who returned it with an indorsement that Mr. Wright invented this linchpin without orders, but merely from a desire to correct a serious defect in the linchpin then in use in our field artillery. The invention was made while Mr. Wright was employed as master machinist at a compensation of $3.73 per day. It has given entire satisfaction to the artillery, and on the strength of this was adopted by the Ordnance Board in the fall of 1863. In transmitting Major Benton's report to the Secretary of War, W. Maynadier, colonel and Acting Chief of Ordnance, says:

"Taking into consideration the fact in regard to Mr. Wright's invention, as stated in Major Benton's report, herewith inclosed, the case is not, in my opinion, one which establishes a claim in equity for remuneration, the invention claimed having been made while Mr. Wright was in the employment of the Government as a master-machinist, and to which, consequently, his time and mechanical skill were due. Nor has Mr. Wright, in my opinion, any valid claim under his patent, as it was not taken out until after the linchpin had been for more than a year adopted for and put into Government use."

Upon this the Assistant Secretary of War indorsed:

"The views of the Chief of Ordnance are approved, and Mr. Wright will be so advised."

The petitioner, not accepting this view of his case, remonstrated with the Chief advised."

The petitioner, not accepting this view of his case, remonstrated with the Chief of Ordnance against the injustice of the foregoing conclusions. This remonstrance was submitted to the Secretary of War, who, under date of October 14, 1865, ordered that the claimant be informed that if he is entitled to compensation he must apply to Congress to get it.

On the 17th of March, 1866, the matter was again brought to the notice of the Secretary of War, as follows:

"In the matter of the application of George Wright for compensation for the use of his patented linchpin, the following points are respectfully submitted for your consideration:

"In The invention was educated by the Ordnance Department, with the appropraof his patented linchpin, the following points are respectfully submitted for your consideration:

"1. The invention was adopted by the Ordnance Department, with the approbation of the Secretary of War, in 1e63, and has been used by the Government ever since, which is conclusive of its utility and importance.

"2. The Ordnance Bureau has given no valid reason for refusing compensation to this inventor for the use of his linchpin.

"3. The objection that the invention was used one year before the date of the patent law allows an inventor to use his inventor, is entitled to no consideration, for the patent law allows an inventor to use his invention two years before applying for a patent, without prejudice.

"4. The applicant, though an employé of the Government, is not a public officer, and the patent law gives him the same protection that it does to patentees in individual employment. And, further, the Government guarantees him protection by the grant of a patent. With what justice, then, can it do violence to its own protection granted and guaranteed by the patent law by using without compensation Mr. Wright's valuable invention?

"5. The usage of the Department in making compensation for the use of patented inventions is of long standing, and, in the absence of statute law, may be properly regarded as the rule for the government of the Departments in making compensation to inventors for the use of their inventions.

"6. In Mr. Wright's own person, and within the last three years, both the Navy and War Departments have acted upon this rule by giving him compensation for another of his inventions—namely, his patented 'fuse-modd."

"7. It is presumed that, in view of this example, without allusion to the numbers of others on the files of the Department, the honorable Secretary of War will have no doubt of his authority to compensate Mr. Wright for the use of his invention.

S. Mr. Wright herewith presents an assignment of the patent to the Government.

"9. As the invention is conceded to be valuable, has been ad ment.

"9. As the invention is conceded to be valuable, has been adopted by the proper official authority, and put in use for the benefit of the Government, and as, from manifold precedents, the Department is authorized to compensate inventors for the use of their patents, with what justice, I would most respectfully ask, can compensation be refused the applicant?"

This statement was referred to the Judge-Advocate-General for his opinion on the following regions:

To which Judge-Advocate-General Holt replied:

"Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, with the following expression of opinion upon the questions referred by him to this bureau in the case of the within-named George Wright:

"This bureau is aware of no law or regulation precluding the Government from contracting with one of its employés not in the military service. Paragraph 1002 of the regulations prohibits the entering into a contract with any 'person in the military service, by any military officer or agent, and paragraph 1003 provides that no such person shall receive any compensation for any service, &c., performed by him beyond his fixed pay, &c., 'unless the same shall be authorized by law, and explicitly set out in the appropriation.' There are filed with your committee letters from five colonels commanding regiments of United States artillery. They regard the Wright linchpin as a meritorious invention; that it has answered its purpose in preventing such accidents as wheels coming off of field artillery in rapid traveling, or in traveling over rough ground. They are confirmed in this belief by their extended experience of the past war. Two of the communications are as follows:

He commanded a light battery during part of the war, and was also an inspector-general, so that he has had ample opportunities of judging of the merits of the linchpin referred to. "To the first query of Mr. Ballon, 'Did the use of "patent safety linchpin for field-artillery carriages" advance the public interests materially during the war of 1861?' I answer, it decidedly did, very materially indeed; and the public interests are being advanced by it at the present time.

"To the second query, as to an adequate compensation for its use by the United States, (since May 20, 1862,) past, present, and future by the United States, &c., it is difficult to give an answer, but I should say $20,000.

Under date of December 13, 1879, your committee submitted bill H. R. No. 2414 and the following interrogations to the honorable Secretary of War:

"First. Is your Department still using George Wright's patent safety 'linchpin' for field-artillery carriages?"

To which he replies in the affirmative.

"Second. Has the Department compensated said George Wright for the use of said invention by the Government?"

To which he replies in the negative.

"Third. If no compensation has been given, what would be an adequate sum embracing the claim for past, present, and future use of the same for the Government to pay for the use of said patent linchpin?"

To which he replies that $2,500 would not be excessive.

Considering the fact that said George Wright for inventing an improved mold for casting Borman fuses, which was adopted by the Army and Navy Ordnance Bureaus and extensively used during the

Mr. WARNER. It seems to be conceded, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, that this was a valuable invention; and second, that the Government did derive benefit from its use. But I am not quite clear on one point involved here and I have not been able to get just the light

I desire on that point from the reading of the report. I understand that all precedents are against the payment of claims of this kind where an employé of the Government and in the department with which his invention is connected and where he is using the material and implements of the Government is paid for his time. I say under such circumstances I understand the precedents are against paying for the use of patents.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHALMERS. Did the gentleman from Ohio not vote for the payment of the family of Admiral Dahlgren for the use of his gun by the Government? Or was the gentleman in Congress at that time?

Mr. WARNER. I did not vote for that. I was not at the time in Congress, and if I had been how I might have voted then would not settle this question, which must rest on its merits.

Mr. CHALMERS. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken in what he has said about precedents, and that he will find the greater number of precedents are exactly the other way.

Mr. BALLOU. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that this same gentleman, Mr. Wright, received $1,500 for the fuse which he invented, as stated in the report. There is therefore, in the case of this same man, a precedent for what is recommended in the bill before the committee. the committee

Mr. WARNER. And was he at that time in the employment of the Government in the Ordnance Department?

Government in the Ordnance Department?

Mr. BALLOU. He was.

Mr. WARNER. I fear the precedent we would establish by passing this bill to be a bad one. The employé of a company or of any employer who was paid for his time and used the material and implements of his employer to make an improvement on any piece of machinery could not claim a right of patent against that employer. He could not estop the employer from using such improvement in connection with that machinery, although of course he would be the owner of his invention or patent and have the benefit of it against all other persons except his employer.

all other persons except his employer.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Does the gentleman say that the employer in that case would have the right to use the improvement for him-

Mr. WARNER. Yes, he would have the right to use for himself that improvement.

Mr. MORSE. Never.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the man belong to any employer?

Mr. WARNER. Oh, no; but the employer pays him for his time in making the improvement; pays for the improvement.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. It seems to me this is a very plain case—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has

Mr. DE LA MATYR. It seems to me this is a very plain case—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has the floor. Does he yield?
Mr. DE LA MATYR. I thought the gentleman had finished.
Mr. WARNER. I say in that case the employer paying for the man's services and for the time employed in making the improvement would have the equitable right to the use of that improvement, although not of course a right in the patent otherwise. And I take it that the same rule should apply to an employé of the Government, provided he were employed in the department with which the improvement was connected and was paid for making that improvement.

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman is right in his last statement, but this man was not employed in that way.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill or some other member of the committee to state how Mr. Wright at the time was employed, for it seems to me to turn much on that

Mr. WARD. In the report of the committee this testimony ap-

This application was referred to the Ordnance Department, and by it to Major Benton, commanding at the Washington Arsenal, who returned it with an indorsement that Mr. Wright invented this linchpin without orders, but merely from a desire to correct a serious defect in the linchpin then in use in our field artillery.

It is thus shown that while this man was in the employment of the It is thus shown that while this man was in the employment of the Government he was an inventor as well as a workman, and that the invention for which compensation is claimed here and the use of which was so valuable to the United States was the product of the native talent and genius of this man, entirely outside of the line of his employment and without any direction from his superior officer.

Mr. WARNER. That is the information which I desired to elicit.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio this question: Does not the fact that this gentleman has had this invention patented determine his right to receive compensation for the use of it?

Mr. WARNER. Not necessarily against his employer.
Mr. BLOUNT. Against the Government or any other person?
Mr. WARNER. Not necessarily as against his employer. That would depend upon the facts of the case.
Mr. BLOUNT. Why not, if the Government gave him a patent?
Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish to delay the committee, but it seems to me that this is a claim that ought to be paid. It does not appear here that this man made the invention under the direction of any officer of the Government, and there is no law that limits his right to officer of the Government, and there is no law that limits his right to this patent. Congress has not seen fit to deprive a patentee of his this patent. Congress has not seen fit to deprive a patentee of his rights and privileges simply because he makes an invention when he may be in the employ of the Government.

Mr. FINLEY. Allow me to ask the gentleman—

Mr. ROBINSON. One moment. In sections 1672 and 1673 of the Revised Statutes Congress has enacted that a certain form of gun called the Springfield breech-loading musket shall be adopted by the Ordnance Department and manufactured by and for the Government. In the next section it is provided that no royalty shall be paid and no compensation for the use of any patent which may be made upon that gun by any officer or employé of the Government. That was manifestly because Congress knew that in the national armories, where a great number of skilled workmen were employed, during the time for which they were paid by the Government they might apply time for which they were paid by the Government they might apply their inventive genius to the making of improvements; and Congress enacted that compensation should not be given therefor in that par-

I say that simply because a man is a master workman, receiving a certain sum per day from this Government, he is not owned by the Government

Government.

Mr. WARNER. That is not claimed by anybody.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let gentlemen consider the nature of this invention for a moment. It consists simply in the application of the thought of connecting a hook over the top of the linchpin, reaching down below the axle so as to prevent the pin from jumping out of place. Now, gentlemen will see that from this man's brain this invention "jumped out" all equipped and armed for the emergency. He did not sit down in the shop of the Washington arsenal for days and weeks to study up and contrive that invention. It came right out of his brain, just as all our best inventions are the production of a fertile mind directed to the object. Perhaps it was all wrought out in five minutes' time, while the man was at home with his family or in five minutes' time, while the man was at home with his family or eating his dinner.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.
Mr. WARNER. Does the gentleman mean to lay it down as law that if a man is employed as a workman, as a master mechanic, in a railway shop, for instance, to make an improvement upon a given machine, and he afterward takes out a patent for that improvement, he can stop his employer from using it or claiming compensation for the use of it?

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman of course understands that the patentee of an improvement holds all the rights under it. is to be any controversy about it it must be in the Patent Office for the purpose of invalidating the patent. That question is not perti-

Mr. WARNER. That does not answer my question.
Mr. VANCE. I hope we will have a vote now.
The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

J. M. MICOU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4002) for the relief of the estate of J. M. Micou, deceased, reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. Samford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to pay the sum of $685.67, without interest, to the estate of J. M. Micou, deceased, for rent of storehouse in Montgomery, Alabama, from August 1, 1865, to April 2, 1866, used for storing quartermaster's stores, under contract with said Micou, at a monthly rental of $85 per month, and said sum of $685.67 is hereby appropriated to pay the same upon the presentation of proper evidence of the qualification of a legal representative of his estate.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be read.

Micow, August 1, 1865; that it was occupied under the said contract at a monthly rental of $50 per month until April 30, 1866; that Micow was paid $70.33, the amount accruing after April 2, 1866, and that there still remains due and unpaid $605.67, the amount named in the bill. They therefore recommend its passage."

Said bill, so reported afterward, passed the Senate and was favorably reported in the House of Representatives by the Military Committee in January, 1877, but was not acted upon.

After a re-examination of the case, your committee adopt and concur in the above report made to the Forty-fourth Congress.

The bill (8. No. 32) embraces the claims of sundry parties. Your committee have only considered the claim of the estate of J. M. Micow in this report, and report a substitute for said bill and recommend the passage of the substitute so reported, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the estate of J. M. Micow, upon presentation of proper evidence of the qualification of an administrator of his estate, the sum of $655.67 for rent of storehouse in Montgomery, Alabama, from August 1, 1865, to April 2, 1866, used for quartermaster stores under a contract with said Micow, at a rental of $65 per month.

Your committee recommend the passage of a bill accompanying this report for the payment of said sum to the representative of the estate of said Micow.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

SAMUEL I. GUSTIN.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4003) to pay Samuel I. Gustin for supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. SAMFORD.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to S. I. Austin the sum of $1,129 for supplies furnished by him under contract made with Government officials to the Army of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be read.

This board called before it witnesses, both civil and military, and reported the amount due to Samuel I, Gustin as $2,529, which included $1,400 as the value of the said building destroyed. This report was made after not only taking testimony but personal examination by the board, and was approved by Brigadier-General John T. Croxton, in command. On account of lack of funds it was not paid by the quartermsster, and nover has been paid. The board, in calculating the amount of $1,129, reduced all the fuel to cords, and calculated the amount due at the price at which the Army was purchasing similar fuel at the time under contracts.

"JS. H. WILSON,

Your committee coincide in the findings and conclusions of the committee of the last House of Representatives, and therefore report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STEPHENS. The name in the body of the bill is incorrectly printed. It should be "Gustin" and not "Austin." I desire further to say that a bill identical with this has passed the Senate and is now on the Private Calendar of this House. I move that the Senate bill be taken up and considered in lieu of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senate bill is in the House, and that would be the proper place to make the mo-

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senate bill is on the Calendar.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move in the House to take the Senate bill from the Calendar and consider it in place of this bill. Mr. STEPHENS. It is just as competent to make the motion here as anywhere. We have full control of the Private Calendar now.
Mr. SPARKS. Is the bill on the Private Calendar?

Mr. SPARKS. Is the bill on the Private Calendar?
Mr. SPARKS. It is.
Mr. SPARKS. Then the proposition is in order.
Mr. STEPHENS. Of course it is. I trust there will be no objection.
Mr. SAMFORD. The bill is on the Calendar. It was referred to the Committee on Claims and reported back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] moves that the Senate bill on the same subject be substituted for the House bill under consideration.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think that can be done in Committee of the Whole

Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a little doubt on the point himself.

Mr. WHITE. I understand this to be a bill to pay a gentleman in Georgia for cord-wood, fencing-boards, rails, &c., taken and used by the United States troops in 1865. The allegation is that the Government is liable because there was an armistice then pending between General Johnston and the commander of the United States Army.

That is the substantial and the commander of the United States Army.

That is the substantial and the commander of the United States Army. That is the substantial and the only substantial reason for the claim. It is perfectly clear that there would have been no ground for the payment of this claim if the property had been taken prior to that time. Now, I submit that the passage of this bill is a departure from the policy adopted hitherto by our Government in this behalf. The southern claims commission was organized in 1866 or 1867—perhaps later. I do not recall the precise date. For the settlement of all property and the settlement of all southern claims commission was organized in 1800 of 1867—perhaps later, I do not recall the precise date—for the settlement of all proper claims of this description. Of course the prerequisite to recovering a claim before that body was the establishment of the loyalty of the claimant. Now, as I understand, the claim is not made that this man was a loyal man. As I understand this is the claim of a gentleman who was disloyal to the Government for property taken by United States troops just at the class of the war.

States troops just at the close of the war.

Now I recall the fact that in the Forty-fifth Congress (if I remember correctly the date) there was introduced here a bill to proclaim ber correctly the date) there was introduced here a bill to proclaim that the war closed for all purposes of settling damages, &c., in 1865—the 4th of July, 1865, I think. The purpose of that was to make a formal statutory declaration of the close of the war, so that subsequently all property taken, all quarters occupied by United States troops should be paid for by the Government. Now, we know historically that the war did not legally close until April, 1866. That date was designated for the purpose of fixing a period within which claims of this character should not be made against the United States Government. This claim is for goods. &c., taken by the United States ernment. This claim is for goods, &c., taken by the United States ernment. This claim is for goods, &c., taken by the United States troops before that time.

If we pass this bill we take a new departure in this respect. We commit the Government of the United States to the payment of all this class of claims all through the South. I for one protest against it. We had repeated precedents against the passage of bills to pay even loyal claimants within the rebel States. Why, sir, I recall the case of the occupation by the United States of an Episcopal church building in Alexandria for hospital purposes. I recall the case of a wharf which was occupied there by the United States. In a number of cases the sense of the American Congress on this question has been declared. One bill came very near passing. I believe—perhaps did of cases the sease of the American Congress on this question has been declared. One bill came very near passing, I believe—perhaps did pass without being observed. But this is a new departure; and I want to raise my voice against the passage of this bill, because it is obnoxious to these criticisms. For the purpose of having a test vote on the question, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that after further reflection he thinks he cannot entertain the motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. The Senate bill has not been reached; and the proposition cannot be enter-ate bill has not been reached; and the proposition cannot be entertained except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, and the Senate bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass instead of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain that proposition.

Mr. WHITE. What is the motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Georgia has been reduced to writing and will be read by the Clerk for the information of members.

formation of members.

The Clerk read as follows:

That House bill No. 4003 be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, and that Senate bill No. 549 be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed instead of House bill No. 4003.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think that is in order. I raise the point that under the rules the motion is not in order in Committee of the whole, the Senate bill not having been reached.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is only by general consent that I ask it.

Mr. SPARKS. I presume it will require unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] will not object except upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. Let the question come up on its merits.

Mr. WHITE. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia knows how much I dislike to object to anything that he requests; but I think it proper to use any parliamentary means to defeat a bad measure.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will let the bill come up on its merits.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to speak to the merits of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands the facts of this case he will be as much in favor vania understands the facts of this case he will be as much in favor of the bill as anybody.

Mr. WHITE. No; I never can be in favor of a bill of this sort.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want to speak to the merits of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entirely mistaken as to the items which enter into the amount included in this bill. This claimant did suffer largely by the destruction of his property at the time General Wilson approached Macon; but every item of the sum which this bill proposes to pay—about sixteen hundred dollars, I think—is for wood and other supplies furnished under contract after, not before the surrender—furnished by agreement and by purchase, as General Wilson certifies. Will the Clerk read General Wilson's statement?

Mr. WHITE. I did not hear any certificate of that kind.

Mr. STEPHENS. The report was submitted to J. H. Wilson, late major-general, under whose order the wood was taken, who indorsed thereon the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

thereon the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boston, Mass., January 2, 1880.

I know Samuel I. Gustin, and believe him to be an honest and deserving man. Special Field Order No. 22 was issued by me. The proceedings of the board of survey seem to be regular and in order, and to fairly show that Mr. Gustin should be paid as recommended by the committee. Assuming all the facts to be as herein set forth, I have no doubt Mr. Gustin should be paid without further delay.

JS. H. WILSON,

Late Major-General Volunteers.

Mr. WHITE. My friend will understand me. I believe he is in error, which I say with all deference to his accuracy. General Wilson does not state that. According to military law a board of survey is appointed and organized to pass upon the value of property the Government is liable for, that is, after it has been taken, in order to do justice to the citizen. Such was the practice when I was in the Army. Mr. STEPHENS. So it was in this case.

Mr. WHITE. The point made in this case is the property was taken as all other property throughout the South during the war.

Mr. STEPHENS. It was taken after the war.

Mr. WHITE. But that is the question.

Mr. STEPHENS. And on contract.

Mr. WHITE. After the surrender. You will observe this, and gentlemen of the committee will understand after the surrender of Gentlemen of the committee will understand after the surrender of Gentlemen. themen of the committee will understand after the startender of veneral Johnston we had troops quartered all over the South, in Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia. That is a matter of history. Now, the Government did not pay for quartering these troops except when they made an antecedent contract for the purpose.

Mr. SAMFORD. And there is the statement there was just such a

Mr. WHITE. Where is the evidence of it?

Mr. SAMFORD. It is stated in the report that between the 24th day of April and the 27th day of July, 1865, this property was used by the troops for fuel under the promise by the officers in command that payment would be made.

Mr. WHITE. Oh! that is the general promise made by the quartermasters

Mr. SPARKS. I rise to a question of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SPARKS. That the motion as offered here is not competent.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the same point of order, and if he insists upon it the Chair will make

Mr. WHITE. This is an appeal to my good nature. I am opposed to the bill, but— Mr. BLOUNT

Before the gentleman answers I desire to call his

Mr. SPARKS. I rise to a point of order, and insist it shall be settled before we proceed any further. The House bill on the Calendar which has been reached in its turn is up for consideration at this dar which has been reached in its turn is up for consideration at this moment. The gentleman from Georgia desires to take up for consideration at this time the Senate bill on the Private Calendar. Of course that is not in order except by unanimous consent. The two bills are identical. The gentleman's motion, as I understand it, is to report the House bill with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table, and then to take up the Senate bill for action. Of course it is competent to do that, but it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. STEPHENS. And so I have stated.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, to object, and on that objection he is proceeding to discuss the merits of this bill. I insist the point of order must be first determined.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on his point of order?

Mr. WHITE. I believe I will follow my conviction of what is right, and insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. But the gentleman has not the floor to submit any such motion. If the Committee of the Whole is to proceed now with the consideration of the House bill, I have a few remarks to make.

As I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, this property for which payment is asked was taken under the order of General Wilson. A large amount of other property which was destroyed by accident is not claimed for nor included under this bill. Payment only is asked for what General Wilson contracted beforehand should be paid for, and General Wilson in the indorsement which has been read from the General Wilson in the indorsement which has been read from the Clerk's desk says it ought to be paid for.

Now, sir, this case has been before Congress seven or eight years. There have been unanimous reports in favor of it from every committee, even from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. Unanimously?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, unanimously. It has been before the Senate committee three or four times, and that committee has unanimously reported in favor of it. Every committee of the House before which it has gone has reported in favor of it. The claimant is old and infirm, and whatever is to be done must in all probability be done soon. He has been waiting and waiting here for years, and the obsoon. He has been waiting and waiting here for years, and the object I had in asking that the House bill should be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table and House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table and then that the Senate bill should be taken up and acted on in its stead, both being identical, was to save time. If we pass the House bill, and we doubtless will, it will have to go back to the Senate; whereas by taking up the Senate bill and passing it, it would not be necessary to again present the matter to the Senate, but it would go at once to the President. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a very simple case.

Mr. WELLBORN. I rise to a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WELLBORN. Is this motion debatable; the motion to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend [Mr. STEPHENS] had the floor and yielded to me, and I hope I will be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to my colleague from Georgia, but I want to make this remark in reply to the point of order which has been raised, that I had the floor and that the gentle-man from Pennsylvania did not have the floor, except by courtesy, to make the motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought that the gentleman from Georgia had yielded the floor. The Chair, however, is of opinion that the motion is debatable.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is certainly not debatable-a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I cannot conceive that there will be any difficulty in the mind of the committee in reference to this matter when it comes to be properly understood. In 1865 an armistice was arranged between Generals Sherman and Johnston with a view to the suspension of hostilities between the Union and confederate forces. General Wilson happened to be near Macon at that time and afterward came into the city. The confederate forces were disbanded, and he issued an order, dated Macon, Georgia, April 22, 1865, in which he states:

It is hereby announced to the cavalry corps of the military division of the Mississippi that an armistice has been agreed upon between Lieutenant-General J. E. Johnston and Major-General W. T. Sherman, with a view to a final peace. The troops of the cavalry corps are ordered to refrain from further acts of hostility and depredations. Supplies of all kinds are to be contracted for, and foraging upon the country will be discontinued.

Mr. WARNER. What is the date of that order?
Mr. BLOUNT. It is dated on the 22d of April, 1865, shortly after

Mr. BLOUNT. It is dated on the 22d of April, 1865, shortly after the entrance of the troops into that city.

Macon, Mr. Chairman, was my home. I happened to be there and was one of the bearers or escort of the flag of truce, and I know all the facts connected with this case. I know of the troops being stationed there; of General Wilson's presence; of the purchase of supplies from our people, the money paid being the first money our people handled, and which was paid to them by the Government for their corn, for their bacon, and other supplies at that time. Under this order a board was convened and adjudged this old gentleman entitled to the sum of money which was specified. That money was not paid him, as I shall presently show. The property was taken without compensation.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia right there at what time these supplies were taken?

Mr. BLOUNT. The supplies in question were taken subsequently to the date of the order to which I have referred and between that time and the 27th of July, 1865.

Now, this is the whole question involved here. It has been discussed in every shape and form in the Senate of the United States. Every question connected with it has been taken up and thoroughly Every question connected with it has been taken up and thoroughly canvassed there, the question of loyalty and all other questions relating to it; and it was properly said by Mr. HOAR in the Senate that it involved a question not of loyalty, but whether or not the Government had used the supplies under the circumstances, and if so, that the supplies ought to be paid for; that the Government should stand by the agreement that had been then and there made. The Government has uniformily paid for such supplies under similar circumstances. stances

During the Forty-fifth Congress this matter was before the Committee on War Claims of the House, which committee unanimously reported it favorably. I see before me now the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keiffer,] who will well remember interrogating me as to the merits of this claim, and republicans and democrats themselves uniformly agreed in favor of it. The same thing occurred in the Senate during this session, and the bill passed there after a thorough discussion. sion and investigation after having gone through a debate for several days. Such gentlemen as Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. HOAR, and others of that class, with all their vigilance, after discussing it, sustained and passed it by their votes, and it is now unanimously reported to this House. It never has been paid, and there is no doubt of its correct-

Mr. WARNER. As I understand the gentleman from Georgia, these supplies were taken after the order to which he has referred and during the armistice.

Mr. BLOUNT. That has been the uniform finding of the committee.

Now, it has been also urged here that there was delay in the prosecution of this claim. I will state the facts in connection with that ention of this claim. I will state the facts in connection with that matter. A Government officer whose name I cannot now recall undertook to take charge of this claim. But first let me say there had been a change of quartermasters, and when the account was presented to the new incumbent it was not paid for the reason that he had no funds on hand. Subsequently an Army officer undertook to bring the papers to Washington with a view to their collection. It so happened that this officer died. After a long while and many endeavors to recover the papers they were found and placed in the hands of a law firm in this city, and it appears that they were subsequently of a law firm in this city, and it appears that they were subsequently lost a second time. In this way the matter has been delayed, and the claim was not presented and could not be presented sooner, as was originally intended. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the merits of this case I am thoroughly acquainted. I know all of the facts connected

Mr. SAPP. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. SAPP. I wish to ask if these supplies were contracted for or taken forcibly?

Mr. BLOUNT. They were contracted for by virtue of the order of General Wilson.

Mr. WARNER. It would be in violation of the laws of war to have

Mr. WARNER. It would be in violation of the laws of war to have taken possession of the property under the circumstances as stated here without paying for it.

Mr. FORT. What became of the vouchers?

Mr. STEPHENS. They were lost with the other papers.

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill ought to pass.

Mr. WHITE. I want to state this, that there was no specific contract between the Government or its officers so far as I can gather from the record of this case, as has been claimed here. The reliance of the gentlemen who are advocating the claim is this: they say that an order was issued by the commander of the United States Army that an armistice was agreed upon between Johnston and Sherman that an armistice was agreed upon between Johnston and Sherman for a certain purpose, and specifying certain details. That was a for a certain purpose, and specifying certain details. That was a general military order.

Now, I submit this, that the Government in a number of cases where claims were presented, alleging that the Government was liable because of this order, refused to pay them; that it disregarded the liability; and I submit that this was done upon the ground that the war, in the view of the law, had not ceased and did not cease until the issuing of the proclamation, which I hold in my hand, on the 5th of April, 1866. And you will find adjudication after adjudication by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Government against the allowance of claims of this kind; and conspicueusly will you find it in the instance of claims made by the loyal citizens of Eastern Tennessee, and notably in the case of a Methodist church that was occupied for a hospital. So that I am justified in saying it is a new departure if we pass this bill. It is against the policy the Government has established in this behalf.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to state the Quartermaster-General has uniformly refused to allow such claims because under his con-has uniformly refused to allow such claims because under his construction of his powers under the law he has no authority to pay them; hence the necessity for the claimant to come to Congress. While he may have no authority to pay such claims, still the claim is just and should be paid.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, it was decided in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I give notice that I will call for the yeas and nays on this bill in the House.

RELIEF OF LABORERS ON GOVERNMENT WORKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works, reported by Mr. BARBER from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the laborers who worked upon the Government improvements upon the Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, under or employed by Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them.) late contractors with the Government in the improvement of the Lower Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, the amount due each of such laborers, respectively, for work, labor, and services by them done and performed, respectively, upon and about said improvements as aforesaid, out of and from any moneys actually earned by said Day, Call & Co. (or subcontractors under them) under their said contract with the Government, or for work done and materials furnished by said Day, Call & Co. (or subcontractors under them) and which have not been paid for by the Government, and which may be withheld by the Government from the said Day, Call & Co. (on their said contract as a forfeiture or otherwise: Provided, however, That if the amount thereof is not sufficient to pay in full the amount due to such laborers, respectively, then to pay said laborers pro rata. Such payments may be made after giving notice four weeks successively in some newspaper published in the county of Outagame, Wiaconsin, for such laborers to present and prove their claims: It is further provided. That such payments be made in the State of Wisconsin by and through some engineer officer of the United States designated by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

'And provided further, That no money shall be paid by virtue of the authority of this act except out of such sum or sums as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be lawfully withheld from the assignee in bankruptey of said Day, Call & Co. as a forfeiture under the terms and conditions of their said contract."

Mr. BOUCK. I move that the amendment be adopted, and that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CONFIRMATION OF TITLE TO LANDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3132) to confirm the title to certain lands in the State of Ohio, reported by Mr. MYERS from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the United States relinquish all title, interest, and control in and to that certain parcel of land ceded to the children of Captain Logan, a chief of the Shawnee tribe of Indians, by the eighth article of the treaty of September 29, 1817, and more fully described as section 26, township 4, range 5, in the State of Ohio, containing six hundred and forty acres, and that the approval of the United States be, and the same is hereby, given to the sale heretofore made by the said children of Captain Logan to Marcus Heylin, and that the title to said tract of land be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the following-named persons, who derived title through the said Marcus Heylin, as follows: To Madison J. Bowsher, the west one-third part of said section; to Albert Bodkin, the center one-third part of said section, and to Francis M. Bowsher, the east one-third part of said section, as shown by their several deeds bearing date, respectively, August 4, 1863, January 5, 1870, and November 1, 1862, of record in the county of Auglaize, State of Ohio.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The land described in the bill is a section containing six hundred and forty acres, situated in Auglaize County, Ohio, which was granted to the heirs of the late Shawnee chief, Captain Logan, by the eighth article of a treaty concluded September 29, 1817, between the United States and certain Indian tribes then living in Ohio. That subsequently, to wit, on the 17th day of September, 1813, a supplemental treaty was made with said Indians, by which the former treaty was modified in language as follows:

"That the tracts of land are to be granted by the United States to the persons named; shall never be conveyed by them, or their heirs, without the permission of the President of the United States."

The patent (a certified copy of which has been submitted) granting the lands as aforesaid bears date April 18, 1821.

Proof has been furnished that the said heirs of Captain Logan, prior to the year 1824, for a valuable consideration, conveyed said tract of land to one Marcus Heylin, who was a reputable merchant at the town of Urbana, State of Ohio, and with whom the Indians were accustomed to trade. That on or about the year 1824 the said Marcus Heylin died and the said tract of land became the property of his heirs, who conveyed the same to Amos Bowsher, Albert Bodkin, and Francis M. Bowsher, keirs of said Amos Bowsher, each received a third part of said sections, as appears from the original deeds submitted.

It is in evidence that frey, and the parties through whom they hold, have been in continuous and undisturbed possession of said land since the year 1824, a period of fifty-five years, and have placed thereon very valuable improvements; that it has been in the undisturbed occupation of the present owners for a period of twenty-eight years, and that until recently they had rested in the belief that their title was perfect; that in endeavoring to effect a loan of money on a portion of said land it was discovered that the approval of the President to the first sale or transfer had

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LEWIS A. KENT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3450) for the relief of Lewis A. Kent, reported by Mr. Sparks from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That Lewis A. Kent, late captain of Company G, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, who was mustered as such captain to date July 28, 1864, shall be taken and deemed to have been mustered as such captain as of the 7th day of May, 1864, that being the day when he was assigned to and from which he continuously discharged the duties of such office, and shall be recognized and treated by all the Departments of the Government of the United States as a captain mustered at said last-named date and doing duty as such from that date until his final muster out of service; and there is hereby granted and awarded to him all the right of pay and pension that he would have been entitled to had he been in fact so mustered and performed duty and incurred disability while holding such rank; and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury such sum as may be sufficient to meet the requirements of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

Lewis A. Kent was mustered in the United States service as a private in Company G, Sixth Wisconsin Volunteer Infancry, on the 16th day of July, 1861. He participated in all the battles of the Rappahannock, Gainewille, second Bull Run, South Mountain, Anticiam, Fredericksburgh, Chancellorsville, Mine Run, Gettysburgh; all the battles of the Wilderness; the battles about Petersburgh, Hatcher's Run, Yellow Tavern, Dabney's Mill, Five Forks, Sailor's Creek; and was present at the surrender of General Lee at Appomatox.

The nature of his service may readily be inferred from two incidents in the history of his regiment. At Antictam the loss in killed and wounded was 60 per cent. of the command; and when the regiment crossed the Rapidan in May, 1864, it had twenty-three officers and only three hundred and forty-seven muskets, and of these, in that campaign, two hundred and twenty-six were killed or wounded.

And among all the brave men who composed that regiment, which was the right regiment of the "Iron Brigade," there was none braver, none more efficient than Lewis A. Kent; and the writer of this report takes great pleasure, from personal knowledge, in paying this deserved compliment to him.

On the morning of the 7th May, 1864, in the Wilderness, Company G of said regiment had but a second licutenant; the captain and first licutenant had been killed the day previous. The military situation required that some competent officer should be assigned to the command of the company; there was no company officer in the regiment, was selected for the assignment, and, by order of the licutenant-clonel commanding the regiment, was a sergeant, was selected for the assignment, and, by order of the licutenant-clonel commanding the regiment, was a saint upon Petersburgh, when it was transmitted and Kent's commission was issued, but by an oversight did not give him rank of the date of his assignment, but only from its date; and he was not able to be mustered until July 29, 1864.

In the mean time, lacerating the left ling, and lodging inside the body against the spine.

He was sent to the hospital at Annapelis, Maryland, as an officer, was treated as an officer, and by reason thereof was charged and paid $1.25 per day, as did all officers under treatment at that hospital. Notwithstanding this severe wound, Kent returned to his command within six weeks, and, crippled as he was, resumed his command and fought it out to the end of the war.

The committee believe such a soldier deserves recognition, and should not be debarred from any right or privilege which he would have had and been entitled to had he been a captain de jure instead of de facto.

But the strict letter of the law deprived him of the pay of a captain from May 7,1864, to July 23, 1864, and compelled him to accept the pension of a sergeant for injuries received when he was in fact a captain.

Your committee are of the opinion this officer justly deserves to be treated and considered as a captain from the date of his assignment to duty, with all the rights of pay and pension that he would have had and been entitled to had he been in fact commissioned and mustered as a captain, and therefore report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. BROWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3451) for the relief of George W. Brower, reported by Mr. Sparks from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Brower, late sheriff of Dodge County, Wisconsin, the sum of $1,443.05, the same to be payment in full for personal services rendered and expenses incurred in connection with the draft of 1862, in said county of Dodge and State of Wisconsin.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have carefully considered the facts upon which this claim is based and find them to be as follows:

In the year 1802 George W. Brower, the claimant, was the sheriff of Dodge County, Wisconsin, and was charged with the enrollment of the militia of such county under the act of Congress of July 17, 1862, entitled "An act to amend the act calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion, approved February 28, 1795, and the acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes."

The claimant, in the execution of his duty, by himself and a large number of persons employed by him as special deputies for such purpose, did the services and incurred the expenses for which this claim is made. His claim is certified by the governor of the State of Wisconsin, and is supported by his own affidavit and the sworn vouchers of the persons employed by him. It has been presented to the War Department for audit and payment, and payment has not been made because it is alleged that the vouchers were not in the form prescribed by the Department. The order of the War Department regulating the form of voucher and fixing the pay for services is in substance as follows:

"General Order No. 201, series 1862.]

"[General Order No. 201, series 1862.]

"Washington, December 8, 1862.

"In making out the account for expenditures connected with the drafting and organization of the militia in the several States, under the act of Congress approved July 17, 1862, the following rules will be observed:

"First. The accounts and vouchers must be in duplicate and verified, and must be transmitted to the Adjutant-General of the Army, through the governor of the State, with such remarks as they may see fit to make upon them.

"Second. Each claimant will state distinctly in his account the items of charge for services or for supplies, and all necessary expenditures made by him, for which vouchers must accompany the account.

"Third. Enrelling officers appointed by the governors of States; their accounts must state the number of days they were actually employed and between what dates; the district, the number of names enrolled by them, and the gross amount of compensation. These accounts must be certified by the governor as reasonable and just, and forwarded by him. Under ordinary circumstances the pay may be $3 per day."

The vouchers presented with this account comply, as nearly as a man of ordinary intelligence not familiar with Army rules and regulations could comply, with an order of the Adjutant-General of the Army, but fail to meet the requisites of that office. They show, however, the work done; the number of names carolled; the number of days actually employed, and between what dates; and the gross amount of compensation; and have appended the certificate of the governor of the State.

The price charged is $3 per day, the compensation fixed in the order, and amounts in gross to the sum of $1,443.05, the greater part of which is for the services of the deputies, who have held the said sheriff personally responsible for payment, and in a number of instances have enforced collection by the judgment.

The claimant alleges that he has been continually pressing his claim for payment, and in a number of instances have enforced collection by the judgment.

The committee think the claim eminently just, a

HENRY B. EASTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4261) for the relief of Henry B. Eastman, reported by Mr. Sparks from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry B. Eastman, late second lieutenant of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant, mounted, from February I, 1865, to March 20, 1885, less such pay as he may have received in any other grade for such period of time; and also to pay him three months' pay proper of a second lieutenant, mounted, under the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866," approved March 3, 1865, and the act extending the benefits of said last-named act, approved July 13, 1866.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. H. DILLARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2806) for the relief of J. H. Dillard, introduced by Mr. MILLS and reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by Mr. DIBRELL.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to place the name of James H. Dillard on the muster-roll of Company H, Fifth Louisians Volunteers, and to pay him whatever amount may be found due him for his services as a soldier in the Mexican war.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

J. SCOTT PAYNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4413) for the relief of J. Scott Payne, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by Mr. DIBRELL.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Paymaster-General, in computing the pay of Captain J. Scott Payne, Fifth Cavalry, United States Army, for longevity pay, shall compute the same from the date of his commission as a second lieutenant in the United States Army: Provided, That no pay proper, or longevity pay, shall be paid to said Payne during any of the time he may have been out of the United States Army.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 312) for the relief of J. Scott Payne, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

J. Scott Payne was a graduate at West Point, and as such was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Fifth United States Cavalry, and assigned to duty with his regiment. In June, 1868, Lieutenant Payne was placed in arrest at Knoxville, Tennessee, and ordered before a court-martial convened in Washington, District of Columbia, for his trial. On the 17th June, and before the trial, he tendered his resignation by letter, to take effect 15th September, 1868, which was not accepted at the time, and on the 5th August, 1868, before the trial, he asked permission to withdraw his letter of resignation, which was also refused. He was tried by the court-martial and honorably acquitted. In September following, Lieutenant Payne's regiment was ordered to Omaha, when he again, by telegram to the President, tendered his resignation, on the 11th September, 1868, to take effect 1st December following. This telegram was referred by the President to the Secretary of War, who indowed thereon:

Inform Lieutenant Payne, by telegraph, that his resignation has been accepted

Lieutenant Payne's telegram asked his "resignation to take effect 1st December, 1868, or he asked delay for six months, reporting for duty. This step is absolutely necessary." The answer was as above, an immediate acceptance of his resignation. On the 5th of October, 1868, Lieutenant Payne requested that the order accepting his resignation be revoked, giving reasons for tendering, and saying he would not have tendered it if he had thought the conditions stipulated in his request would not be complied with.

By direction of the President, Special Orders No. 25 was issued by General Grant, on the 30th January, 1869, revoking the order accepting Lieutenant Payne's resignation. But as his resignation had been accepted, and he was discharged from the service, it was held that this order was void, and he could only be reinstated to the Army by special act of Congress, which was done; and Lieutenant Payne, by act of Congress and regular promotion, is now a captain in the Fifth Cavalry Regiment. United States Army. There is a letter from the late Secretary of War W. W. Belknap on file in the case, which says that Lieutenant Payne's resignation was accepted upon his letter of the 17th June, 1868, and not upon the telegram, and that the only mistake was in not accepting it to take effect on the 18th September, the date mentioned in his letter of 17th June. But a copy of the telegram filed herewith shows that the resignation was accepted upon the telegram, and on the 12th September, when his telegram expressly stated it was not to take effect until the 1st December following.

The act of Congress restoring Lieutenant Payne provided that Lieutenant Payne should have no pay for the time he was out of the service. But inasmuch as his resignation was accepted contrary to law and the usages of war, and in violation of the terms upon which it was tendered, your committee think that Captain Payne should be entitled to the benefits of the time from the date of his first commission as second lieutenant in computing his longevity p

Mr. HUNTON. I move an amendment to the bill by way of a substitute, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The substitute was read, as follows:

The substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the services of J. Scott Payne, now a captain in the Fifth Regiment of United States Cavalry, be regarded as continuous, so far as his pay is concerned, from the date of his original commission as second licutenant of said Fifth Cavalry. That the Paymaster-General in computing the pay of said Captain Payne for longevity pay shall compute the same from the date of his said original commission as second licutenant of Fifth Cavalry, and that said Captain Payne be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the amounts he would have received under the computation herein provided for and the amounts he has actually received: Provided, That he shall receive no pay for the time he was actually out of the military service of the United States."

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to make a brief statement of the reasons which have induced me to offer this substitute for the bill reported by the committee. I believe the substitute will not be antagonized by the committee or by any member of it.

by the committee. I believe the substitute will not be antagonized by the committee or by any member of it.

The committee in its report give unquestionably the facts in the case. It is shown by that report that the resignation of Lieutenant Payne was illegally accepted, and that he never was legally out of the service of the United States. General Grant, who was then President of the United States, became convinced of that fact and attempted to restore him to the service by revoking the order accepting the resignation of Captain Scott Payne. But it was found that the resignation having been accepted, although illegally, it required a law of Congress to restore Captain Payne to the service of the United States. That law was passed by the Forty-third Congress. Captain Payne has served gallantly in the Army of the United States not only since that time, but for a considerable time anterior thereto.

The difference between my substitute and the bill reported by the committee is this: the bill of the committee gives Captain Payne longevity pay from the present time, while the substitute which I have offered gives him longevity pay from the time he was improperly put out of the Army by the Secretary of War.

It seems to me that if this action on the part of the Secretary of War was illegal, as the President of the United States decided it was, and as Congress has decided, then Captain Payne ought to have the benefit of his longevity pay the same as though his resignation had never been accepted. That is all there is in the substitute which I have offered. The difference between the money which would come to Captain Payne under the bill of the committee and under the substitute which I have introduced will be some eight or ten hundred dollars dollars.

I wish to state who Captain Payne is. His history is known to most of those on this floor, but there may be some gentlemen here who have forgotten it. All will recollect that in 1878 the country was anxious for the safety of a little band of one hundred United States troops on Milk River, in the Ute country. We all know that the gallant officer commanding that small force, Major Thornburg, was killed by the Indians, and the command thereupon devolved upon Captain Scott Payne. There is not a man in all this broad land who can say that anybody else would have managed that command with more heroic skill and bravery than did Captain Payne. He held out against an overwhelming Indian force for five or six days until reenforcements reached him, and thereby saved his command and this against an overwhelming Indian force for five or six days until reenforcements reached him, and thereby saved his command and this country from the disgrace of having that whole force fall into the hands of the Indians. I state here, and I state it with emphasis, that the Federal Army has within its ranks no more gallant, patriotic soldier than Captain Scott Payne.

Now, if it be true, as the Military Committee of this House has reported, as both Houses of Congress have decided, and as President Grant decided when he undertook to revoke the order accepting the resignation of Captain Payna that that acceptance was illegal then

Grant decided when he undertook to revoke the order accepting the resignation of Captain Payne, that that acceptance was illegal, then it seems to me it is but a poor measure of justice to him to give him longevity pay from this time forward only, instead of giving it to him from the time he was put out of the Army by the improper acceptance of his resignation by the Secretary of War.

These are the facts of the case, and it seems to me that simple justice to this gallant officer of the United States Army demands at our hands that this measure of relief should be given him. I trust that my substitute will be adonted hands that this measure of relief should be given him. I trust that my substitute will be adopted.

Mr. SPARKS. The Committee on Military Affairs, after considering this matter, have explicitly reported against precisely what the substitute of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] proposes. The committee came to the conclusion that this officer ought to receive longevity pay from the time of his restoration to the Army. We propose to let his service be considered continuous, so that from the date of his restoration he will draw longevity pay. The substitute proposes to give him longevity pay during the period that he was rightfully or wrongfully out of the Army. I agree with all the gentleman from Virginia has said in praise of Captain Payne. He is a gallant officer. The whole country knows it. He is very deserving at the hands of the Government. But the question is whether we shall pay him for services he never rendered. During a certain we shall pay him for services he never rendered. During a certain time he was out of the service—

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. My substitute provides in totidem verbis that not a dollar shall be paid to Captain Payne vides in totidem verbis that not a dollar shall be paid to Captain Payne for the time he was out of the service. The provision of my substitute in this respect is the same as that of the bill reported by the committee. But in my opinion when the committee undertook to do justice to this officer they did but half justice. They propose that his longovity pay shall commence from the date of the passage of the bill. My substitute proposes that it shall commence—

Mr. SPARKS. From his restoration?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; I propose, just as you do, that his longevity pay shall be computed from the time that Captain Payne was appointed a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States. If my friend from Illinois will look at the bill of his own committee he will find it provides—will find it provides

That the Paymaster-General, in computing the pay of Captain J. Scott Payne, Fifth Cavalry, United States Army, for longevity pay, shall compute the same from the date of his commission as a second lieutenaut in the United States Army.

Now that would effect everything which my substitute would effect, but that the bill makes no appropriation to pay that portion of Captain Payne's longevity pay which has accrued anterior to the passage of this bill. I dare say it was the intention of the committee to give this bill. I dare say it was the intention of the committee to give this officer longevity pay from the time he was commissioned a second lieutenant, because the bill says so; but unless there is an appropriation to carry out this purpose the Paymaster-General cannot pay Captain Payne anything but his longevity pay from the passage of the bill. The bill of the committee provides, as does my substitute, that the Paymaster-General shall compute Captain Payne's longevity pay from the date of his commission as secound lieutenant, but the pay from the date of his commission as secound lieutenant, but the substitute goes further, and makes the necessary appropriation to pay the longevity pay when it has been computed. The bill of the Military Committee does not make such provision. The difference between my substitute and the bill of the committee is that the substitute makes an appropriation to pay longevity pay for the time for which the bill directs it to be computed.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be considered as antagonizing any fair bill in favor of this officer. The bill reported by the committee contains a proviso (and here seems to be the point of difference between the gentleman from Virginia and myself) that—

No nay proper or longevity pay shall be paid to said Payne during any of the

No pay proper or longevity pay shall be paid to said Payne during any of the time he may have been out of the United States Army.

I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that this man was not out of the service

Mr. HUNTON. My substitute contains the same proviso. Here is the proviso of the substitute:

Provided. He shall receive no pay for the time he was actually out of the military service of the United States.

Mr. SPARKS. What, then, is the object of the gentleman's substi-

Mr. HUNTON. I will state the object. My substitute makes an appropriation to do that which the bill of the committee attempts to do without an appropriation. This officer cannot receive his longevity pay without an appropriation. That is the only difference between the Military Committee and myself. We agree as to what should be done; but my substitute proposes an appropriation to carry out what the committee agrees ought to be done, while the bill of the committee does not make the necessary appropriation.

Mr. SPARKS. How does the gentleman's substitute increase the

Mr. HUNTON. Because it goes back, while the bill of the committee simply goes forward from the date of its passage. My substitute provides that-

The Paymaster-General in computing the pay of said Captain Payne for longevity pay, shall compute the same from the date of his said original commission.

That is exactly what the Committee on Military Affairs have said in their bill. My substitute further provides:

That said Captain Payne be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the amounts he would receive under the computation herein provided for and the amounts he has actually received.

Mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield a moment

mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield a moment for a question?

Mr. HUNTON. With great pleasure.

Mr. DEERING. If I rightly understand, there is no difference now between the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. Sparks] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] upon this matter. Is not the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs willing to accept the substitute as now explained?

Mr. SPARKS. As I understand the substitute, it proposes to pay this officer for the time that he was out of the service. The provision of the committee's bill is simply this: that no pay of any kind—pay proper or longevity pay—shall be made to this man for the time he was not in the service of the United States. We provide in effect that when a man does no service, whether he be rightfully or wrongfully out of the service, he shall not be paid. The gentleman from Virginia says that this man was never out of the service.

Mr. DIBRELL. The object of the Committee on Military Affairs was to put Captain Payne upon the same footing with other captains of the same rank. Other captains of the same rank are now drawing about one hundred and eighty dollars a year more than Captain Payne draws, because of the time he was out of the Army. It was the intention of the committee to put him on an equality with these other officers, so that he shall receive the same longevity pay as other captains of similar rank. My friend from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] proposes to make this pay date back, which was not the intention of the committee. I have nothing to say against Captain Payne personally; I know him to be a gallant officer. But while the bill of the committee would increase his pay about one hundred and eighty dollars per annum, this substitute would give him $1,000 or $1,600 back pay.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word. My friend says it dollars per annum, this substitute would give him $1,000 or $1,600 back pay.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word. My friend says it was the object of this committee to put Captain Scott Payne on a footing of equality with other officers of the same rank. But this bill does not do it. It puts him on the same footing with these other officers for the future, but, if he was improperly turned out of the Army, surely it was enough.

Mr. SPARKS. Allow me.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me finish my sentence first.

Mr. PARKS. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. If he was improperly deprived of his commission in the Federal Army, surely it is enough to take away his pay when thus outside of the service—improperly, illegally, as my friend and the whole Military Committee have reported; and the only way to restore Captain Payne to equality with other officers of the Army is to give him longevity pay from the time when he was commissioned in the Army down to the present time, without regard to the time he was out of the service.

Mr. SPARKS. The question I propounded to the gentleman is this:

Mr. SPARKS. The question I propounded to the gentleman is this:
Would not that pay him longevity from the original commission?
Mr. HUNTON. So does your bill.
Mr. SPARKS. No; we pay him from the date of his second commission.

Mr. HUNTON. That is all mine does.

Mr. SPARKS. What is the difference?

Mr. HUNTON. I have made an appropriation to do that which you do without appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The substitute was adopted, and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

N. & G. TAYLOR COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4416) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and pay to N. & G. Taylor Company, of Philadelphia, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,017.06, being the amount of duties paid by them under protest and appeal on certain importations in excess of the legal rate as ascertained by the decision of the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York giving construction to the laws, said decision having been ac-quiesced in and said rate thereafter adopted by the Treasury Department.

The accompanying report was read, as follows:

ment.

The accompanying report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of N. & G. Taylor Company for the pessage of a bill refunding to them the amount of certain duties erroneously assessed and collected, respectfully report:

That the petitioners are, and have for a long time been, importers in Philadelphia, of an article known as "terne tin," and that the Treasury Department, between March 21, 1870, and March 13, 1873, claiming that the rate of duty on their importations under the thirteenth section of the act of July 4, 1862, 12 Statutes, page 557,) was 35 per cent. instead of 25 per cent. ad valorem, as contended by petitioners, assessed the first-named rate and collected it from said petitioners, the difference paid by them between said rates being $14,953.77.

That they paid this larger rate of duty to the extent of $11,017.06 under protest, and within the time limited by law appealed from the decision of the collector. Finally, in order to determine their rights in the matter, their correspondents, Messrs. Bruce & Cook, who are also like importers in the city of New York, at their instance, sued the collector of the port of New York in the city of New York, at their instance, sued the collector of the port of New York in the city of New York and on December 12, 1872, in said case, Judge Shipman rendered a decision against the collector and in favor of the plaintiffs that "the rate of duty exacted upon the importations in question was 10 per cent. in excess of that fixed by the statute, and to that extent is illegal."

On March 13, 1873, the Treasury Department, by letter of that date, "acquiseced in the decision of Judge Shipman in the suit of Bruce et al. vs. Murphy," and instructed the collectors at New York and Philadelphia to assess duty on continuous terne plates in accordance with said decision, which was afterward done.

Messrs. N. and G. Taylor Company have applied to the Treasury Department for a refund of the sum thus decided to have been colle

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. The Senate has passed a bill in precisely the same language, and when we go into the House I shall move to substitute that Senate bill for the House bill. After examination by the Finance Committee and favorably reported, it was adopted by the Senate in precisely the same language.

Mr. PAGE. I move the committee do now rise.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to be heard a moment before the question is taken on the motion to rise for the purpose of asking manimous is taken on the motion to rise, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

S. I. GUSTIN.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to make a request for unanimous consent before the committee rises, in reference to the bill in favor of S. I. Gustin. The Committee of the Whole House has already laid aside the House bill to be reported with the recommendation that it do pass. There is on this Private Calendar a Senate bill in identically the same language. Now, in order to relieve the Calendar and save delay in action upon this just claim, I ask, by unanimous consent, that Senate bill No. 549 be also taken up and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. Of course, when we go into the House I shall move the passage of the Senate bill instead of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman states both bills are the same?
Mr. STEPHENS. They are identically the same.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. PAGE. I now insist on my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CARLISLE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SIMONTON reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sunders hills some with and some without are administration. dry bills, some with and some without amendment.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar without amendment, were severally taken up, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and

A bill (H. R. No. 2414) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright;
A bill (H. R. No. 4002) for the relief of J. M. Micou, deceased;
A bill (H. R. No. 3132) to confirm the title to certain lands in the State of Ohio;
A bill (H. R. No. 3450) for the relief of Louis A. Kent;

A bill (H. R. No. 3451) for the relief of George W. Brower; A bill (H. R. No. 4261) for the relief of Henry B. Eastman; and A bill (H. R. No. 2806) for the relief of J. H. Dillard.

N. AND G. TAYLOR COMPANY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. No. 4416) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company.

R. No. 4416) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of notice given, I ask to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1353, which is the same in totidem verbis as the bill recommended by the Committee of the Whole, and ask that the Senate bill be put upon its passage, and the House bill laid upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is there no difference in the bills?

Mr. KELLEY. Not the slightest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the Senate bill

Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1353) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and, being read the third time, was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House bill will be laid upon the table.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL I. GUSTIN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. No. 4003) to pay Samuel I. Gustin for supplies furnished to the Army of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the Senate bill No. 549, entitled "A bill for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin," be substituted for the House bill, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole, and that the House bill be laid upon the table. The Senate bill (No.

549) is identical with the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the votes by which the several bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LABORERS ON GOVERNMENT WORK.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation was the bill (H. No. 1129) for the relief of certain laborers on Government works, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

J. SCOTT PAYNE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4413) for the relief of J. Scott Payne, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. AND ADELICIA CHEATHAM.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3561) for the relief of William A. and Adelicia Cheatham.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The recommendation was agreed to.
Mr. STEPHENS. I move that we now adjourn.
Mr. HUNTON and Mr. BOUCK moved to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAINT MICHAEL'S CHIMES, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill, and ask that the same be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4663) to admit free of duty one of the bells of Saint Michael's chimes, Charleston, South Carolina, which has been sent to England to be recast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no objection, the bill will

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit, free of import duty, one of the bells composing the chimes of Saint Michael's church, Charleston, South Carolina, after it has been recast at the foundery where it was first manufactured in 1764 and been reshipped to America.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'CONNOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN GAULT, JR.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the Committee on Military Abairs from the further consideration of the Senate bill No. 105, and ask that the same be put upon its passage. This bill passed the Forty-fifth Congress and passed the Senate during the present Congress, and has been favorably reported by the Military Committee of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eight Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no objection, the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John Gault, jr., late a major in the Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of a major of infantry from August 16, 1862, to April 15, 1863, deducting therefrom any moneys paid him for any other position held during that period.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to ay that this bill has received the assent of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; it is reported by General Bragg. It passed this House in the Forty-fifth Congress, and, as I have stated, passed the Senate during the present Congress, and has been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

HENRY M. SHREVE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 814 and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 814) for the relief of Henry M. Shreve.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the legal representatives of Henry M. Shreve, deceased, the sum of $50,000 as a full compensation for, and in satisfaction of, all claims for the invention of the steam snag-boat, and for the use of the same, past, present, and future, and for any and all rights that the said Shreve may have acquired under the patent granted to him for the invention of the steam snag-boat.

Mr. WARNER. Is there a report accompanying that bill. Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I would state in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio there are reports both from the commit-tee of the Senate and the committee of the House on this bill. The tee of the Senate and the committee of the House on this bill. The same bill is reported from the Committee on Claims in the House, and is on the Private Calendar. It is identically the same bill which has passed the Senate; and it has been reported favorably eight different times by committees of Congress.

Mr. FRYE. What committee reports it?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 323. This bill is for the benefit of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin. It has passed the Senate on the unanimous report of the Senate committee; and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House has looked over the bill and is satisfied it is all right. The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits and to promote their civilization.

Mr. SIMONTON. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This bill is of some length. It has already been read once in one of the last days of last session. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Scales,] at that time asked that the bill should be laid over that he wight have an exportantly of examining it. He has examined it. he might have an opportunity of examining it. He has examined it

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] calls for the reading of the bill. The bill must be read. The bill was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] calls for the reading of the bill. The bill must be read. The bill was read, as follows:

for one moment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Certainly.

Mr. SCALES. When this bill was called up in the House on a former occasion I objected myself to its passage on the ground that it had never been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The gentleman from Wisconsin has now given me every information in regard to it, and I am satisfied it is all right.

Mr. WARNER. After this statement by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I make no objection to the bill if it takes no money out of the Treasury.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It does not.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. HUMPHREY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DEERING. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw that motion for a moment. There are some bills on the Speaker's table which ought to be referred to the appropriate committees.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 8, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Samuer. Domer, D. D., of Washington, D. C.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BRIGGS. I rise to a privileged question and present the credentials of Ossian Ray, Representative-elect to this House from the third congressional district of New Hampshire to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Evarts W. Farr.

The credentials were read.

Mr. Ray then presented himself and took the oath of office.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELFORD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5294) regulating the rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices; which was placed upon the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6524) to amend chapter 248 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, approved June 16, 1880.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill propose to part directly or indirectly with any land or other property of the United States?

Mr. BENNETT. It provides for giving the Territory of Dakota certain sections of land for school purposes in lieu of certain sections of the property of the United States?

otherwise disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Then it parts with some of the property of the United States, and must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. POEHLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5624) to-authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipu-lations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and Mississippi, and making an appropriation for the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. COWGILL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of William H. Wood, administrator of the estate of George Wood, deceased, of Memphis, Tennessee, for property taken by the United States Army during the war;

The petition of Sarah Waters, administratrix of Robert Waters, deceased, of Collierville, Shelby County, Tennessee, for property taken by the United States Army during the war; and

The bill (H. R. No. 677) for the relief of the Odd Fellows' lodge of Pulaski, Tennessee.

Pulaski, Tennessee.

Mr. COWGILL also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of William F. Moore, of Manry County, Tennessee, to reopen his claim before the southern claims commission.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask that that petition may go to the Private

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Private Calendar with an adverse report.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.
The petition was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering

The motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

FUNDING BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and will resume the consideration of the bill (H.R. No. 4592) to facilitate will resume the consideration of the bill (H. K. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. By a prior order of the House all general debate upon this bill has been closed. The committee will now proceed to consider the bill by sections.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before the committee proceeds with the consideration of this bill by sections I desire to state that since the bill was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means the committee has agreed upon a change of the rate of interest which it is proposed these bonds shall bear. I also shall offer some technical amendments, possibly one or two upon my own responsibility as the amendments, possibly one or two upon my own responsibility, as the consideration of the bill is proceeded with. As most of the amendments proposed to be offered to this bill are in the nature of substitutes, I would suggest that they might better be considered after the committee has proceeded through the bill by sections, as otherwise committee has proceeded through the bill by sections, as otherwise the consideration and adoption of a substitute might prevent the consideration of other and desirable amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FRYE. This is an exceedingly important bill. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] is not at the present time in good health, and I hope that order will be maintained in this committee so that we may understand what the gentleman is saying.

maintained in this committee so that we may understand what the gentleman is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires it to be distinctly understood that absolutely no business will be transacted in this committee unless perfect order is maintained. Order will be secured else the business of the committee will be suspended.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to state, in the interest of economy, that nearly all the amendments proposed to be offered to the bill originally reported from the Committee on Ways and Means are similar in their leading features. All the amendments that are really pertinent or germane to the objects of the bill are nearly alike. The issue which they made with the committee's bill is in reference to the number and character of bonds and the relative number of certificates to be issued. I would like to have the Committee of the certificates to be issued. I would like to have the Committee of the Whole confine its consideration to the main issues, and to first settle and dispose of them so far as practicable, in order that we may conclude the consideration of this bill to-day.

I hope, therefore, that the Chair will adopt such a course as, without any violation of the rules, may secure the consideration of amendance is such a consideration of amendance.

ments in such order as will facilitate reaching a conclusion upon the whole subject

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the Committee of the Whole now proceed to consider the bill by sections for amendment?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask that the reading of the bill pro forma may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the Committee of the Whole will now proceed to consider it by sections for amendment.

now proceed to consider it by sections for amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. If this be the proper time, I wish to submit a substitute of which notice has been given.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that, as he understands, the uniform custom has been to entertain first amendments from the committee having in view the perfecting of the phraseology of the bill. The Chair is disposed, therefore, to adopt that order of procedure.

Mr. KELLEY. All right.

Mr. WARNER. As a number of substitutes have been printed in the Record, which I suppose may be considered as pending, I desire to ask whether they are to be considered in the order in which they have been printed in the Record or whether they may be taken up have been printed in the RECORD or whether they may be taken up in a different order?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments printed in the RECORD were offered simply for the information of the House, and were printed in the RECORD by unanimous consent. They will not be considered in theorder in which they have been printed. They were printed simply for the information of members.

Mr. WARNER. That was my understanding.
Mr. SPRINGER. May I be permitted to suggest that if we follow the usual proceeding in cases of this kind, the original text of the bill must first be amended, and until we have gone through the original text and amended it, no substitute for the whole bill will be in order to be voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so indicated.

Mr. SPRINGER. A substitute may now be offered for the whole bill, but a vote upon that substitute will not be in order until after the original text has been perfected by the consideration of the separate sections of the bill.

Mr. McLANE. I object to the disposition of any substitute at this me. The bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is the only bill before the Committee of the Whole at this time. section is read, no amendments are in order except amendments to the pending section. No one has a right at this stage of proceeding to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so indicated.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order. The amendment proposed by myself was referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole, as the Journal will show, and is now pending before the Committee of the Whole; so that it stands in a different attitude from amendments which may be proposed under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the order adopted uniformly by the House when in Committee of the Whole has been first to entertain verbal amendments that may be offered by the committee from which the bill has been reported. The Chair feels disposed to adopt the practice which has uniformly prevailed.

Mr. BLAND. Then I understand that we go through the original bill first.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. That will not preclude the offering of other amendments than those of the Committee on Ways and Means?

The CHAIRMAN. At the proper time the Chair will entertain any amendment which may be offered. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all existing provisions of law anthorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1873, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding five bundred million dollars, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, doo, hearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than forty million dollars of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am directed by the Committee on Ways

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report the amendment which I send to the desk, changing the rate of interest on the bonds provided for from 31 per cent.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will it now be in order to offer an amendment to test the sense of the Committee of the Whole as to whether we are to have long or short bonds?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order at this

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I offer this amendment to be made a part of the original bill, the committee, since the reporting of the bill, having decided to change its report by the reduction of the rate of interest from 3½ to 3 per cent.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I wish at the proper time to offer an amendment, which may be read now for the information of the House as it may which may be read now for the information of the House as it may have a bearing upon the rate of interest which we may wish to adopt. I send my amendment to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The request has been made that the amendment of the gentleman from New York be reported by the Clerk.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a point of order. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York touches, as I understand, the rate of interest which is provided for in the seventeenth line of the section. I presume the Chair would not rule that the entertaining of this amendment to the seventeenth line will preclude the subsequent this amendment to the seventeenth line will preclude the subsequent offering of amendments touching previous portions of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; not all.

Mr. CARLISLE. The rate of interest occurs twice in the first section-first, with reference to the bonds, and, secondly, with reference to the notes.

Mr. FRYE. That is not material so far as my point is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In the seventeenth and eighteenth lines of the first section strike out the words "and one-half;" and in the twenty-second line strike out the same words, so that the clause will read:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding five hundred million dollars, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States," &c.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts in the nature of an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CLAFLIN. It is an amendment to the section, and has a bear-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to hold that unless the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is in the nature of an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, it is not in order at this time.

York, it is not in order at this time.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I do not propose to have it presented now but merely read by the Clerk for the purpose of letting the House know what I am in favor of in this regard.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think the committee are under a misapprehension as to the change proposed to be made in this bill. This is a part of the original report of the Committee on Ways and Means, just as if the bill had been reported with that rate of interest in it. While I agree the committee can do with that question of the rate per cent. as they please, yet they must proceed in the order that they are amending the original bill and not considering any amendment not offered from the Committee on Ways and Means. I have offered no amendment myself, but have merely made a correction ordered by the Committee on Ways and Means in the original bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes; but it is a pending amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have corrected an error of print because the bill as reported to the House should contain 3 per cent., as that is the only rate of interest the Committee on Ways and Means that is the only rate of interest the Committee on Ways and Means have reported unanimously in favor of.

Mr. CLAFLIN. And I rise to oppose the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that perhaps there is a slight misapprehension as to the status of this matter. The gentleman from New York has made a verbal amendment in the bill by order of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Chair will state that that correction being made in the bill will not in any way jeopardize the rights of the gentleman from Massachusetts to present his amendment at the proper

Mr. CLAFLIN. If this amendment is not to be voted on—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair insists it is to correct a verbal error in the bill.

Mr. CLAFLIN. It is proposed to strike out an important word in the bill. It is not for the purpose of perfecting the phraseology of the bill, but to strike out one word and insert another.

Mr. TUCKER. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the House that we vote by unanimous consent on substituting the word "three" for "three and a half," as the gentleman from New York has proposed, and then the bill will be open to amendment in all other respects ment in all other respects.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I rise to discuss that very point, as I am opposed odopting 3 per cent. for 3½ per cent.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman propose to change the rate?

Mr. CLAFLIN. I propose the rate in the bill shall remain as it is, at 3½ per cent., and therefore I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York to reduce it to 3 per cent.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand the gentleman will not be produced.

mr. BUCKNER. I understand the gentleman will not be precluded from offering his amendment hereafter. The pending amendment is simply one proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Unless his amendment be an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, it cannot now be received as in order. The present status of the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is this: the Committee on Ways and Means a verbal amendment to correct the bill as it now and Means proposes a verbal amendment to correct the bill as it now stands before the House, and the Chair feels strongly that amend-ments of any other character should be excluded until that committee has had an opportunity to correct verbal errors.

tee has had an opportunity to correct verbal errors.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I have not risen to offer an amendment at this time, but to be heard in opposition to the amendment coming from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman then merely wishes to have what he sends to the Clerk's desk read as part of his remarks?

Mr. CLAFLIN. That is all; and for the information of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

to the floor

Mr. KEIFER. But he wishes to speak while I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been

mr. KEIFER. But he rises for the purpose of making a speech, and the Chair has said an amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. BLAND. But the gentleman has a right to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read what the gentleman from Massachusetts has sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in the first section, in the nineteenth line, by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting the word "five;" and further on in the same line, by striking out the word "forty" and inserting the word "twenty."

Mr. CLAFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to reducing the rate of interest in this bill to 3 per cent. for two reasons. In the first place of interest in this bill to 3 per cent. for two reasons. In the first place that rate is on the supposition that the House will pass a loan of twenty years. It seems to me, sir, that it was fully demonstrated in the debate that the House is not ready to adopt any such time, but on the contrary is in favor of adopting a short loan of five or six, or ten years, if any at all. My proposition is that we shall issue a loan at 3½ per cent. to run five-twenty, that is, in five years to be redeemable if the Government chooses, or to run for twenty years if the Government is not in a condition to redeem at a shorter period.

The question is asked, what shall we do with the surplus revenue for the five intervening years? I propose to have this loan remain as the committee has it so far as the $200,000,000 are concerned, that is, to bring the $200,000,000 for the next two years within the reach of the Treasury Department if it shall be ready to redeem the notes.

This is a proposition which seems to me to be perfectly simple. In

This is a proposition which seems to me to be perfectly simple. In the first place certificates will be issued at 3½ per cent. for two years, payable in ten years, for \$200,000,000. Nobody supposes that in the next two years we can liquidate a greater sum than that. Then there will be some \$500,000,000 which will be issued at five and twenty. Now, I do not believe that we shall be able to pay the \$200,000,000 in two years and if we could there are other leans coming in which we two years, and if we could there are other loans coming in which we would be unable to take up; and the rate of 3½ per cent. precludes would be unable to take up; and the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. precludes any high rate of interest.

The House will understand that up to this time not a bond has been sold at a less rate than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Whatever people may have thought some time since in reference to that matter, to-day I find no man in business who believes it is possible to float a loan at 3 per cent. They might hope to do so; but when they say it is certain, or even fairly presumable, they doubt it. For my own part I do not believe it to be possible. I do not speak of bankers or persons interested in the loan, but of business men who are familiar with the facts. Now, the difference between a loan of 3 per cent. for five years and $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is only $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. It is the unanimous opinion of financiers that a $3\frac{1}{2}$ option on a short loan may be floated. It would be dangerous to put a 3 per cent. bond on the market, and certainly this House would not run the risk of having the loan break down as did a loan under Secretary Chase's administration when an attempt was made to float it at too low a rate of interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman advocates an increase of interest in order to issue bonds that shall run five years becrease of interest in order to issue bonds that shall run five years before an option rises, and to be absolutely payable at twenty. He proposes to provide for these fives by the application of the surplus revenues of the Government by reserving the $200,000,000. Now, we paid $108,000,000 and over in the year that ended with the close of October, and for that privilege we paid $3,780,000; in other words, to pay $108,000,000 and a fraction the Treasury had to disburse $112,000,000 and a fraction. Now, the gentleman says that in addition to this $200,000,000 other loans will be coming in. What are they?

The next loan that matures is the four-and-a-halfs, and they mature in 1801 ton years bence. The next loan that matures is in 1907 nearly

The next loan that matures is the four-and-a-halfs, and they mature in 1891, ten years hence. The next loan that matures is in 1907, nearly twenty-seven years hence; so that having paid $57,000,000—nearly $58,000,000 a year on the average since 1865, having disbursed $112,-000,000 for the privilege of paying $108,000,000; having paid in the first six months of this year largely over $42,000,000, with our revenues steadily increasing, and our interest diminishing, by means of these payments we are to issue a 3½ per cent. loan, and after three years or three years and six months, pay such premium as may be demanded by the owners of the bonds we are about to issue.

Sir, by reference to page 27 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it will be seen that between November 9, 1879, and October 31, 1880, he made thirty-eight purchases of bonds. Four of these purchases were made at intervals of a month and thirty-four were weekly. The amount of bonds purchased in this one year was, as purchases were made at intervals of a month and thirty-four were weekly. The amount of bonds purchased in this one year was, as I have stated, $108,758,100; but they involved an expenditure of $112,544,620, as the Government had to pay $3,786,520 for the privilege of applying $108,000,000 of its surplus cash to the extinguishment of its debt. The average rate of premium on these purchases was 3.48, or say 3½ per cent. One of these purchases furnishes a most instructive lesson. The Secretary had confined his proposals to purchases of fives and sixes; but hoping that he might buy at better advantage if he enlarged his proposals, he on one occasion advertised for four-and-a-halfs and fours, and on the 2d of June, 1880, purchased $1,500,000 of the four percents which will be redeemable July 1, 1907. [Here the hammer fell.] I ask leave to append to my remarks as a part of them so much of the paper that I hold in my hand as contains the remainder of the statement of the Secretary to which I am referring. I am referring.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The remainder of the statement is as follows:

On this $1,500,000 of bonds he paid as premium $125,558.26, or more than 8.3 per cent. He could buy fives and sixes for an average of 3½ per cent. premium because the bonds that bear those rates were soon to mature; but these four percents had twenty-seven years to run, and though their rate of interest was 33 per cent. less than the six percents the premium demanded for the privilege of paying them was 8.3 per cent.

The books of the Treasury abound in illustration of two facts, first, that a long bond commands a higher premium than a shorter one; secondly, that the Government cannot pay any part of its bonded debt even in the last month preceding its maturity without the payment of premium. This was the case with the sixes that matured and were payable on the 1st of this month; and an examination of the books of the Treasury shows that from May, 1869, to June 30, 1880, the Treasury purchased $258,819,330 of bonds, paying thereon premiums that amounted to $19,461,338, an average rate of 7.52 per cent.—say 7½ per cent.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to offer an amendment to the proposed amendment

Mr. WARNER. I rose to offer an amendment. I move to make Mr. WARNER. I rose to offer an amendment. I move to make the rate of interest $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. This bill proposes along bond—that is, a twenty-year bond. That is, the Government would part with the option to pay for twenty years. Now, I think it very probable that such a bond might be floated at 3 per cent. Certainly some amount might be. I think a thirty or forty year bond or a perpetual annuity at 3 per cent. could be sold in large amounts. But it is certain that we cannot borrow at as low a rate of interest on a short bond. Time and interest are elements that go together. If this bill were to pass, disposing of the option for twenty years, I should be in favor of the lowest rate of interest proposed; that is, 3 per cent.; but I am opposed to that feature of the bill. But if we choose a short bond, as I hope we will, we will be compelled to pay a higher rate of interest. If we lessen the time or hold the option to redeem at any time, we must raise the rate of interest. I am opposed to a long bond and am in favor of raising the rate of interest a little in order to have a short bond.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the Committee

Mr. McLane. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole to let this report from the Committee on Ways and Means be treated as part of the original bill; and we can then get on with the discussion of the bill as it comes from the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] offers this as a technical amendment to the report of the committee, the Committee on Ways and Means having agreed by unanimous consent to insert 3 instead of 3½ per cent. in the bill.

Mr. MURCH. I object.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I also object. I wish the vote to come on the original proposition as it appears in the printed bill.

Mr. McLane. I make this proposition in order to facilitate the proceeding with the bill. I want to get before the Committee of the Whole the report of the Committee on Ways and Means. When that report of the Committee on Ways and Means is before this Committee of the Whole we can then proceed to the consideration of the bill with a view to amendments. Now we are fighting at cross-purposes. The bill with the rate of 3 per cent. is in truth the committee's bill, with a view to amendments. Now we are fighting at cross-purposes. The bill with the rate of 3 per cent. is in truth the committee's bill, and the Committee on Ways and Means ask permission, before we enter on the consideration of the bill, to make the clerical correction of inserting 3 instead of 3½ per cent. It will facilitate every member's action on this floor in dealing with the bill to give unanimous consent to have that clerical alteration made. The whole bill will then be before us as it is reported, and the Committee on Ways and Means will be out of the way for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that objection has been interposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McLANE. I do not so understand.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I do object, for I wish the vote to come on the bill of the committee as they have reported it.

of the committee as they have reported it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from New York has the right to make the amendment under instructions from his com-

Mr. CLAFLIN. Without the vote of the Committee of the Whole accepting it?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) He has the right to submit it, undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I am willing he should submit it to the House.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman has certainly as much right to regulate the procedure of the House on the bill as has the gentleman from Massachusetts or myself.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made the suggestion that the gentleman from New York having charge of the bill be permitted to suggest to the House amendments to each section and to the entire bill which were in the nature of small procedures to the the contract of the state of the state of the state of the section and to the entire bill which were in the nature of small procedures to the state of the which were in the nature of amendments to the text, so that the bill as perfected by the Committee on Ways and Means might be be-fore the Committee of the Whole for amendments by the committee. Mr. CLAFLIN. If unanimous consent be given, I have no objection

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will remind the Chair and the commit-tee that the Committee on Ways and Means have already reported to the House this change made by the committee in their own bill and have received unanimous concurrence to its being made. Two or three weeks ago, before the vacation, I announced that the Committee on Ways and Means had instructed me to change the rate in the bill to 3 per cent. The Chair took cognizance of that announcement and, as I understood, had it entered upon the Journal. I think, therefore, gentlemen are precluded from interposing an objection now, although I will remind them that practically it does not make a particle of difference, because this is simply the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Massachusetts or any other gentleman has the right to make any proposition in the way of an gentleman has the right to make any proposition in the way of an amendment that he pleases. And I suggest that if we seriously intend to act upon this bill at all, we shall not waste hours in a fruitless and unnecessary discussion. Therefore I desire that the report of the Committee on Ways and means, with 3 per cent. as the rate of interest, shall be before the Committee of the Whole in a legitimate and proper manner; and of course it is the right of the Committee of the Whole to amend the bill as they think best.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Ways and Means be presented to the House and stand as the bill of the committee?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Undoubtedly.
Mr. WARNER. There will be no objection to that.
Mr. CLAFLIN. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is interposed. The Chair desires to state that even although the amendments suggested by the gentleman from New York having the bill in charge are amendments to the text, merely formal amendments perhaps, yet the Chair thinks every amendment to a pending measure is open to discussion; and the Chair therefore feels constrained to hear the suggestions of gentlemen who therefore feels constrained to hear the suggestions of gentlemen who desire to discuss even these formal amendments.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. If I understand the gentleman from New York he simply desires to amend his bill by a formal amendment; and after that we go back and read the bill and it is open to all amendments that may be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. That is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. BLAND. Then I can see no objection to that Let the general section of the contract of the contr

Mr. BLAND. Then I can see no objection to that. Let the gentleman from New York, on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means, amend his bill by such amendments as he desires, and then let us go back and read the bill for amendment by the Committee of the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Clar-LIN] has indicated his objection to that course. Mr. CLAFLIN. I have no objection to merely formal amendments being made. My objection is to amendments in the substance being being made. My objection is to amendments in the substance being made in that way.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from New York, the Ways and Means Committee submitted a report which might be illustrated by the bill I hold in my left hand. By a subsequent action of that committee they agreed to submit a report which may be illustrated by what I hold in my right hand as the report of the committee. That is all. Now the rule says that can be done before a vote is reached; and I submit that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, having been authorized to submit this report and then subsequently authorized to submit this later report; has the right to submit this later report; and it is upon this later report that amendments may be moved and action upon this later report that amendments may be moved and action had by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman have the rule read which authorizes the committee to do that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to entertain these various propositions as they are presented. The gentleman from New York in charge of this bill [Mr. Fernando Wood] proposed an amendment to the bill as previously reported by the committee, and the Chair was bound to entertain that amendment. That amend-ment is now before the committee for consideration and discussion, and unless the committee shall by unanimous consent or a formal obliged to adhere to the universal practice of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I do not see why it will make any difference what course is pursued, for this question of 3 per cent. or 3½ per cent. must inevitably be met by this committee and voted upon. It might as inevitably be met by this committee and voted upon. It might as well be voted on now, after discussion, if gentlemen desire to further discuss it, as at any other time. If the vote shall be in favor of a 3 per cent. bond, then clearly that 3 per cent. interest must be accompanied by a twenty or thirty years' time for the bond. Therefore a vote of this committee to fix the rate of interest at 3 per cent. may be regarded as a vote for a long bond.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] permit me to correct him? I think he is in error in that assumption.

sumption.

Mr. FRYE. I hope this will not be taken out of my five minutes time. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says that even short-time certificates having less than ten years to run can that even short-time certificates having less than ten years to run can be negotiated at 3 per cent. I would very much dislike to have this committee concluded upon the question of time by its vote upon the rate of interest. There is a great deal of difference among gentlemen as to whether or not a short-time 3 per cent. bond can be negotiated, more especially if it be accompanied by some attributes which will make it acceptable and desirable for a short-time and at a low rate of interest. Therefore I here the gentlemen from Maine [Mr. rate of interest. Therefore I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will not endeavor, though perhaps not intentionally, to have the House commit itself to a position which in my judgment is not

Mr. FRYE. Just before the holiday recess I voted in favor of a 3 per cent. bond. I went home to spend the vacation, and while away I saw a large number of business men in New York, in Boston, and farther on in New England. I came to the deliberate conclusion that it was utterly impossible to float a 3 per cent. bond at par with less than thirty years of existence in it. I believe that the attempt to float a 3 per cent bond other than as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] has mentioned would result in disaster. I believe that there is perhaps $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 of floating capital in this country, now on deposit in banks and largely without interest, that you might obtain for 3 per cent. one, two, or three year certificates. But when it comes to a bond of five years, or ten years, or something of that kind, I do not believe you could sell a single 3 per cent. bond at par. One reason why I do not believe it is, that you never have sold a bond yet at par for 3 per cent. Even when the Committee on Ways and Means voted for a 3 per cent bond, and thus at once put a fictitious value on your four percents, those four percents did not reach such a premium as would make it possible to float a bond at par at less than 3½ per cent.

There never was a government on the face of the earth that has floated a bond at par at 3 per cent. I am fully convinced that a 3 per cent. bond cannot be placed, and if you undertake to do it the effect will be disastrous. I believe in leaving the Secretary of the Treasury a discretion up to 3½ per cent., and if you do that I believe the bond can be floated.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WARNER. I withdraw my formal amendment of 2½ per cent.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] by striking out the words "the rate of 3 per cent." and inserting in lieu thereof the words "a rate not exceeding 4 per cent.;" so that the section will

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds, &c., which shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum, &c.

Of course if this amendment shall prevail it will be necessary to make an amendment in lines 21 and 22 of this same section so as to make make an amendment in lines 21 and 22 of this same section so as to make the bill harmonious. In the five minutes allowed for debate on this question it will be impossible for me to enter into the reasons that have led me to offer this amendment. This I deeply regret, as we are in danger of going far astray. One year ago, the Secretary of the Treasury, with all his experience in placing bonds and in refunding the debt of the United States, recommended to Congress that a funding bill be passed fixing absolutely the rate of interest at 4 per cent. This was then regarded a wise recommendation. By my proposed amendment I do not seek to fix the rate absolutely at 4 per cent, but I wish to provide that the rate shall be not exceeding 4 per cent, per annum; thus giving the Secretary of the Treasury, if he finds he has the ability to do so, the right to issue bonds at a lower rate of interest than 4 per cent. I would vest in him discretion to issue a lower rate bond than 4 per cent. if the state of the market would justify him in doing so. I would amend the bill in other important features. In my opinion we are in danger of issuing a bond at a rate of interest so low that it will not remain at par if it can now be sold at par.

I myself believe that 4 per cent. is as low a rate of interest as bonds should be issued for. I believe that in my region of country, in the West, or the Middle West, we would be unable to sell a bond at a lower rate than 4 per cent. and maintain it at par. On account in the West, or the Middle West, we would be unable to sell a bond at a lower rate than 4 per cent. and maintain it at par. On account of the success of resumption and the general prosperity incident to it, and good crops at home and poor ones abroad, we have exceptionally cheap money now. I do not know what experience gentlemen from New York and from the New England States may have in these matters, or what special knowledge they may possess on this subject. I am, however, glad to hear my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] express to the committee his opinion, based upon recent interviews with the financiers of New York and New England, which information leads him now to advocate 3½ per cent. interest bonds instead of 3 per cent., which he formerly advocated.

The judgment of the people of this country will be found to be in favor of a 4 per cent. bond. It is true that the long bonds of the four percents are at a high premium to-day; but will they remain at such a premium? A stringency in the money market will reduce if it does not wipe out this premium. Money is even now seeking other investments where it will bring better returns. Only a few years since an attempt to fund our then maturing debt into 4 per cent. bonds proved a failure. Only extraordinary times enabled the Secretary of the Treasury to sell such bonds at all.

We can recollect a time when money was plenty, and yet it was difficult to sell and keep the 5-20 sixes at par. We had to go abroad for a market for them. The democratic party's last attempt to sell 6 per cent. and higher-rate bonds at par was a total failure. The then Secretary of the Treasury was obliged to sell such bonds at 11 and 12 per cent. discount.

We have sold $738.420.400 of 4 per cent, bonds redeemable Inly 1.

Secretary of the freedal, 12 per cent. discount.

12 per cent. discount.

We have sold $738,420,400 of 4 per cent. bonds redeemable July 1, 1907. What will be the effect if the Government should place on the market at once nearly a like sum in bonds?

In London, where money is cheaper and being loaned at a lower rate of interest than in any other country of the world, much of the 3½ India loan was recently bid for at figures below par. It is true there were bids above par, but no bid was above 104½, and much of the loau was bid for as low as 98, although it was not payable for fifty years. This India loan, so much talked about here, was a very small one—£3,500,000—equal to less than $17,500,000, and only about one-fortieth of the sum we propose now to authorize through this one-tortieth of the sum we propose how to authorize through this funding bill. There is nothing to be assumed from this small British India long loan in favor of a 3 per cent. bond, but the contrary. It is fair to conclude that even now a 3 per cent. bond may not sell for par, or if sold at par that it will not be maintained at that. We cannot expect to sell our bonds in other money centers. The present current rates of discount will not justify us in a hope to do so.

The following are current rates of discount for money at the principle way contract when the form the for

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in response to a part of the remarks of my friend from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] I desire to say that when we were about to refund by the issue of bonds bearing 4 and 4½ per cent. interest the Committee on Ways and Means was visited by the most honorable, intelligent, and wealthy of the bankers of the country, who assured the committee that a 4 per cent. loan could not be floated; that it would be idle to propose the taking of a bond at less than 4½ per cent. They claimed to know the state of the money market of this country and of Europe and predicted that we would bring the credit of our Government into disrepute and disgrace if we undertook to float a 4 per cent. bond.

float a 4 per cent. bond.

Mr. TUCKER. That was in 1876.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; in 1876. We did undertake to float a 4 per cent. bond, and before the bonds could be issued and put upon the market it was found that these very honorable gentlemen, at the very time they were making these representations to us, had been forming a syndicate to take the 4 per cent. bonds in case they should be issued; and they did gobble them all up. Of course they object now to 3 per cent. bonds as much as they did to 4 per cent. bonds four years ago.

I am ready to vote to fix 3 per cent. as the rate of interest on twentyyear bonds, and then to vote down, so far as my vote may avail, the proposition to issue such bonds. If, on the other hand, you issue paper which the Government shall have the option of paying from paper which the Government shall have the option of paying from the day of its issue, so that it can without the payment of premium apply its cash in hand from time to time to the payment of this indebtedness and the reduction of its interest, I care not whether you make the rate 3½ or 4 per cent. Nay, I care not if you leave it to stand at 5 per cent., as it is now, on $437,000,000, and 6 per cent. on $200,000,000; because by constant payments of such sums as we may be able to pay from time to time, the whole of this debt of $637,000,000 will disappear, and the interest paid on this indebtedness will be less than the interest which would be paid on a 3 per cent. bond for the same amount running ten years. The result of paying the average rate of interest during the whole term of such constant payments, as against 3 per cent. for ten years, would be between $28,000,000 and $29,000,000 in favor of the constant payment of a specific sum. This is all calculated in a statement which I have prepared and which I will take the liberty of reading.

In the course of my remarks on Thursday last I assumed that the Secretary of the Treasury would by the purchase of bonds arrest and extinguish interest but once a year, and that at the close of the year, extinguish interest but once a year, and that at the close of the year, and claimed that even upon that basis it would be more economical and claimed that even upon that basis it would be more economical to proceed with the payment of the outstanding bonds by constant payments that would extinguish them in ten years than to refund them in 3 per cent, bonds payable in ten years. What I meant to say was this: that the 3 per cent, for the ten years in which those bonds should mature, and not consider the possibilities of their continuance for a longer period, the total interest paid on them would be greater than the total interest paid on them would be greater.

than the total interest paid on the fives and sixes, with their extinguishment under the process I have indicated.

But the Secretary, as I have since learned and stated to the committee, made thirty-eight purchases in the year closing October 31, 1880. Four of them were monthly, and each stopped interest from the date of the purchase. The other thirty-four were weekly; and each of them also stopped interest on the amount purchased from its date forward. Thus at thirty-eight periods during the year the purchasing power of the Government was reinforced by its release from liability for the interest on the bonds purchased. Assuming a like course of payment to be pursued during the extinguishment of the bonds now under discussion, the saving of interest as against a 3 per cent. bond for ten years, considering the interest question alone, would be $22,693,960. The aggregate interest at 3 per cent. for ten years on $637,350,600 would be $191,205,180, while the aggregate interest on the outstanding bonds at their higher rates, if paid in stated and equal monthly payments within ten years, would be but $162,611,220. The account stands thus: account stands thus:

Interest on $637,350,600 at 3 per cent., ten years $191,205,180
Interest on $637,350,600 at 5 and 6 per cent., paid monthly, at the rate of $5,000,600 a month for ten years 162,611,220

Saving by monthly-payment plan at 5 and 6 per cent... 28,593,960

But the saving in interest would not be the only material one.

There has to be a half per-cent. paid the parties who shall negotiate the refunding, and then the premiums we will be compelled to pay whenever we propose to apply our surplus means to the extinguishment of our interest-bearing debt.

ment of our interest-bearing debt.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is pending one amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.] No further amendment is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending amendment. Mr. BAYNE. Mr. BAYNE. I would like the privilege of offering a substitute. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] has been recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move as a substitute to insert at the appropriate place in the section the words "at a rate not to exceed 3½ per cent., at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury." I only wish to say that there are two factors which render this problem uncertainty of the treasury.

to say that there are two factors which render this problem uncertain—one is the question of time, the other the question as to the state of the market. It seems to me that a discretion should be left somewhere, and by leaving this discretion with the Secretary of the Treasury, limiting at the same time the maximum rate, we accomplish as much as can be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to one point upon which I have heard no one in this debate express an opinion. When you take into consideration the fact that this bill will pass in such a shape that these bonds will not be subject to State or local taxation, and when you bear in mind the further fact that the average aggregate amount throughout the country of municipal, school, county, and State taxation is at least 2 per cent, these bonds, owing to their exemption from taxation, though bearing only 3 per cent. interest, will in reality be equivalent to a 5 or 6 per cent. investment when compared with other securities.

Let me say further that there is in this country a very large amount of capital which does not realize even 3 per cent. A large fund is constantly lying in the banks on deposit, bearing no interest amount of capital which does not realize even 3 per cent. A large fund is constantly lying in the banks on deposit, bearing no interest whatever. Again, we know that at times many millions of dollars are loaned in Wall street on call at 2 per cent. and even less. Taking into consideration these as well as other facts, I feel confident that a 3 per cent. Government bond can be floated at par, and that that a 3 per cent. Government bond can be noated at par, and that an agreement for a higher rate of interest will be unjustifiable.

Why, sir, to-day British consols are nearly at par; they are quoted at something over 98 per cent. Now, if the Government of Great Britain, afflicted with a chronic state of colonial and domestic disturbance in India, in Ireland, and in Africa, can maintain its 3 per cent. bonds at 98 per cent., why cannot we float a 3 per cent. bond at par, when our national debt is not much more than half of the British debt blessed as we say the present the second with the British debt blessed as we say the second to be say the say of the British debt blessed as we say the say of the say of the say of the British debt blessed as we say the say of the British say of the say of ish debt, blessed as we are with peace at home and with foreign na-tions, and with great resources and grand possibilities that no one can see in the future of England or any other country beneath the

It must not be forgotten that when the nearly seven hundred millions of maturing debt is paid by the Government those receiving that vast sum will at once seek safe investment for it. I have no doubt nearly all those to whom this money shall come will prefer to place it in a 3 per cent. bond rather than in taxable securities; and again, I would have you remember that those who hold trust funds for investment will greatly prefer a 3 per cent. Government bond to any other kind of investment, as it gives absolute security and freedom from taxation.

In a recent visit to New York it came under my observation that opposition to a 3 per cent. bond comes mainly from the national-banking interest. Why? Because those banks desire a high rate of interest on the bonds deposited by them in the Treasury as the basis interest on the bonds deposited by them in the Treasury as the basis of their circulation so that may swell their profits. But, sir, we are not legislating here solely in the interest of the stockholders of national banks. It is our duty to look well to the interest of the tax-payers of this country. If we do this we shall not fail to adopt the amendment which has been offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can we not by unanimous consent agree that this five-minute debate, confined to the points of the interest and duration of these bonds, shall go on for two hours without the necessity of making and renewing these little amendments? It would be, I am sure, in the interest of economy of time, and that would pretty much exhaust what the House has generally to say. Let us agree for two hours there may be five-minute speeches without the trouble of making and renewing amendments and all that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Connecticut that in his opinion this Committee of the Whole would not have power under the rules to enter into any such arrangement.

Mr. HAWLEY I know it: but if nobody says anything we can do

Mr. HAWLEY. I know it; but if nobody says anything we can do

Mr. HAWLEY. I know it; but if nobody says anything we can do it.

Mr. WARNER. What is the proposition?

Mr. HAWLEY. To devote a couple of hours to five-minute speeches without the trouble of offering and renewing amendments.

Mr. WARNER. On this section or on all the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe the Committee on Ways and Means does not object to this. I consulted its leader.

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection is made, the Chair will consent.

Mr. WARNER. Before consent is given, I desire to know whether it is to be on the rate of interest and time or on the bill generally.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the proposition pending before the committee?

committee?

Mr. McLANE. And I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut suggests that by unanimous consent this discussion proceed for two hours without the necessity of moving formal amendments. To that proposition the Chair has heard, so far, no objection.

Mr. MURCH. Yes; I object, as I want this bill to take its regular

Mr. McLANE. I wish to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by inserting the words "not exceeding 3½ per cent.;" and in making that motion I avail myself of the opportunity at the same time to say as the bill is read through I shall propose to move other amendments which will make the interest not exceeding 31 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that his amendment is not in order, as there are already two amendments and one substitute pending.

Mr. McLANE. I submit to the Chair when can an amendment of offered to the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York has been amended by the amendment moved by the gentleman from Ohio, and to that a substitute has been offered by the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. McLANE. Will the Chair inform me how many amendments can be pending at the same time in the Committee of the Whole? The CHAIRMAN. Four.

Mr. McLANE. I shall be much indebted to the Chair if he will have the kindness to state the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first read the rule under which we are operating.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XIX. OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

Mr. McLANE. All right. I move, then, to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and that the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas is now pending.

Mr. McLANE. Then let that substitute be reported.

Mr. Anderson's substitute was reported.

Mr. McLane. Then let that substitute be reported.

Mr. Anderson's substitute was reported.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending substitute.

Mr. McLane. I understand that to be the pending amendment. The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending substitute.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On which debate has been exhausted, has it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. McLane. I move to strike out the words "and a half;" and I make this motion to avail myself of the opportunity to advise those who concur with me in the opinion this entire debt of 1881 ought to be paid by short loans or short Treasury notes, that I wish to test the sense of the committee on that question, and have prepared with some care amendments to the bill of the Committee on Ways and Means which carry through that whole bill the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue either certificates of not less denomination than ten dollars, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after one year, in amounts not exceeding one hundred millions per annum, or 3½ per cent. bonds payable at the pleasure of the Government after one year. Not exceeding 3½. I explained when I addressed the committee on this question two days ago that I believed 3 per cent. would do, and that the Secretary of the Treasury had reported that 3 per cent. was sufficient, but recommended that he should have discretion to go as high as $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. if necessary, and I think we ought to give him that in the matter of a short bond. We ought to have no failure in this legislation. We want to provide either that we shall issue short bonds payable one year after date, not exceeding in any one year a certain amount, that being one hundred millions per annum, or, if you please, the sinking-fund amount, and then every holder of the debt knows that the amount to be paid in any one year is to be drawn by lot, and he has his chance of the five or ten years. There is no doubt that the Secretary of the Treasury will encourage the negotiation of that class of bond. If he has the discretion to choose the bond or certificate he will get them bought at par and we will in five years, I think, redeem the whole of the debt due in 1881. In order to be perfectly sure I would accept the amount par and we will in five years, I think, redeem the whole of the debt due in 1881. In order to be perfectly sure I would accept the amount recommended, that is, the sinking-fund amount, which makes the whole debt payable in ten years. I have the amendments prepared and an amendment covering this specific point which limits the amount to a rate of interest not exceeding 3½ per cent., leaving the obligation imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury to get them if he can at 3 per cent.

if he can at 3 per cent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the proposition which is foreshadowed by the gentleman from Maryland. Please look at this bill. On page 1, in the seventh line, strike out the words "provided that in lieu of" and insert "in addition to." That would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to take the $104,000,000 of four percents now on hand and sell them in the market for the purpose of paying a portion of the six percents when they become due. That would leave $520,000,000 only to be provided for. In the fifteenth line insert an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue Treasury notes as well as bonds of a denomination as low as ten dollars. Then again, in the nineteenth line, amend by one word, strike out "twenty;" and with a few other informal amendments you will have this condition of things: The Secretary of the Treasury, after paying the debt, that is to say, the sixes, with the proceeds of the $104,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds, would have $520,000,000 remaining, for which he can, under this bill as amended, issue three and one-half percents redeemable after one year and payable each year to the amount required by the this bill as amended, issue three and one-half percents redeemable after one year and payable each year to the amount required by the law providing for the sinking fund. And on looking at his report, touching the sinking fund, you will find that this amount will exactly pay the whole debt provided for in ten years. In my judgment this is the true method to dispose of this question, and I am obliged to the gentleman from Maryland for foreshadowing this method in his creech his speech.

Mr. WARNER. That is $104,000,000 more of thirty-year bonds in

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order to reply to the gentleman from Maine I move to strike out the last word.
Mr. KEIFER. Is an amendment in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. KEIFER. Then, if an amendment is not in order, is debate in order ?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that in order? Is not that an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If insisted upon, the Chair would have to rule that it is not in order, but it has been customary to allow informal

Mr. KEIFER. The limit to which amendments may be carried under the rule having been reached, and debate having been exhausted, I ask if the gentleman can offer an amendment now and

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that he is simply following the practice which has heretofore prevailed by unanimous consent in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. The practice, the Chair will recollect, has always been that a motion to strike out the last word is in order where debate as permissible; but where debate has been exhausted, it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon his objection, the Chair must rule that the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not in order.

York is not in order.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not want to cut off debate. If the agreement proposed by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] a few moments ago be concurred in, that debate be allowed for one or two hours by unanimous consent on this question of the rate of interest and the duration of the bond, without the necessity of making these pro forma amendments in every case, then I am perfectly willing to withdraw all objection to continuing the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman as asking unanimous consent?

asking unanimous consent?

Mr. KEIFER. I do ask unanimous consent that such an agreement be arrived at.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GEDDES and others objected.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I insist upon the enforcement of the rules.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must entertain the objection, then.
Debate upon the pending amendments is exhausted and the vote will first be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the original amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the first question would be on the amendment to the substitute which is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all; the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the order of voting is as he has indicated, first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment of the gentleman from New York to perfect the original text of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What becomes of the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment of the gentleman from New York and the subsequent amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the committee understand clearly what it is to

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio will be first voted upon, but the Chair will ask the Clerk to read the original amendment of the gentleman from New York, and also the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 17 and 22 strike out the words "three and a half per cent." and insert

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "three and a half per cent.," in line 17, and insert in lieu thereof, "at rate not exceeding 4 per cent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 149.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I offer an amendment to make the rate 2½ per cent. for the purpose of saying a word or two.

We are somewhat in confusion because we run the two subjects together as to the rate and as to the length of the bonds. We had better first settle the rate and then try to accommodate the time with rate, whether it shall be as to Treasury notes or whether it shall be rate, whether it shall be as to Treasury notes or whether it shall be as to bonds. To my mind there is an extraordinary spectacle presented here to-day, in this, that there are gentlemen here who are advocating, honestly, of course, a higher rate of interest than that at which we hear on all sides we can negotiate our bonds for. I differ in judgment with the gentleman from Maine, and my information differs from his as to the rate at which our bonds can be negotiated. I believe we can negotiate a bond and a Treasury note at 3 per cent.

Mr. BLOUNT. On what time?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Surely on fifteen years as far as the bond is concerned, and perhaps on the 2-10 principle so far as the Treasury note is concerned. I do not want, for one, to be led into fixing a higher rate of interest than my knowledge from correct information gives me. There is not one of us here to-day who has not letters from responsible parties in this country who tell us they can negotiate these bonds at 3 per cent. Should you give a discretion between 3 and 3½ per cent., of course you induce a combination, or, rather, a combination will be made against the lower rate of interest by the capitalists. That is natural. But the way to do this, in my judgment, as I stated a moment ago, is to fix a rate and then accomby the capitalists. That is natural. But the way to do this, in my judgment, as I stated a moment ago, is to fix a rate and then accommodate the time to the rate. If we vacillate back and forth discussing upon one amendment, first about the rate and next about the time, we will delay an intelligible conclusion.

There are more than two hundred millions of the bonds due this year held by the national banks. Why can we not say to the national banks that in the future placing of bonds on deposit to secure the circulation, and in the future placing of bonds to secure the deposit of public money in the national depositories, and in so far as their discretion allows under law as to reserves of banks, we will deposit of public money in the national depositories, and in so far as their discretion allows under law as to reserves of banks, we will hereafter take only the proposed 3 per cent. bonds on deposit for such purposes as I have named? You would thus at once secure purchasers to the extent of the amount I have stated.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCKNER. Has the gentleman forgotten that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] has a proposition pending to increase the rate of interest to 3½ per cent., for the reason that the banks will not take 3 per cent. bonds?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Committee on Ways and Means have come to the conclusion unanimously to make the rate of these bonds 3 per cent.

Means have come to the conclusion unanimously to make the rate of these bonds 3 per cent.

Mr. BUCKNER. That depends on the length of time.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It will be time enough to speak of that when we come to discuss the option.

Mr. WARNER. Would you not prefer a 2-10 bond at 3½ per cent. to a 15-40 bond at 3 per cent.?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I believe a 2-10 bond can be negotiated at 3 per cent. The bonds to-day of the United States are under 3½. They vibrate somewhere between 3½ and 3½. And yet the proposition is made here to negotiate a bond of the United States at a higher rate of interest than your bonds command to-day in the market. higher rate of interest than your bonds command to-day in the market.
Mr. WARNER. That is on a long bond.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I believe that the necessity and disposition of the people to secure a safe deposit for their money would secure the placing of this bond at the rate stated. I would popularize it. I would make all the national banks agents and pay them a reasonable amount, and not run to the syndicates that combine against the people. I would make these two thousand national banks open a subscription for fifteen days, and I would give the smaller bidden at the contract of the syndicates and longer than the syndicates are syndicated as the ders at the same prices the preference over the syndicates and large holders

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this question of the rate of interest is one that has attracted a great deal of attention in this country and in Europe. It is simply and altogether a practical question. The question is what low rate of interest we can adopt consistent with the success of the negotiation.

Now, sir, in my position I have been compelled very much to seek practical information upon that question. In the first place, I find that so far back as 1870, when the Government considered the question of the rate of interest in connection with the original refunding that so far back as 1870, when the Government considered the question of the rate of interest in connection with the original refunding proposition to gather in all the bonded debt of the United States and replace it by bonds bearing a lower rate of interest, when the four percents were proposed, the Treasury Department and the whole banking interest of the country said it was impossible to negotiate any bond at so low a rate of interest. We gave before the Committee on Ways and Means a hearing to the ablest financiers of this country, and but one of them said the 4 per cent. bonds could be negotiated, and by far the larger amount of the fifteen hundred millions to be refunded would be placed at that rate; and in 1876 the same gentleman laid before our committee a long and elaborate argument. Four years ago, at a period of national depression, a period of low rate of revenue, a period of larger appropriations than we have at present, he still said, and time has vindicated what he said, that the credit of the Government of the United States stood the first in the world, and that there was capital idle and seeking investment in this country and in Europe that would take the 4 per cent. bonds. The result has been that these 4 per cent. bonds have been issued to the amount of nearly eight hundred millions, and they are worth to-day a premium of 12½ or 13 per cent.

Mr. FRYE. Eleven per cent.

Mr. FRYE. Eleven per cent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hold in my hand letters from the ablest financiers and the largest bankers in the United States, including the representative of the largest bankers in the world. In every case they say that if you will clothe this bond with certain attributes, which I am sure this House will not object to, there will be no possible difficulty in negotiating the whole of them at 3 per cent. in the time required.

Mr. SPRINGER. How long a time is given in these letters as the required.

Mr. SPRINGER. How long a time is given in these letters as the shortest life of the bond?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hold in my hand a letter received yesterday from a gentleman who formerly represented the 4 per cent. interest—Mr. Hatch, of the firm of Fiske & Hatch, of New York, one of the largest dealers in Government securities in this country—in of the largest dealers in Government securities in this country—in which he states that while he thought originally a long bond would be necessary he now does not think so. When to that we have added the high financial authority of the Secretary of the Treasury that even a short-time certificate, to run not to exceed six or eight years, can in his judgment be negotiated at 3 per cent., I believe with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the honorable Speaker of this House, [Mr. RANDALL,] that we could reduce the time to fifteen years and successfully place the bond.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS obtained the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would inquire of the gentleman from New York what his information is in regard to a five-year bond?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] yield?

Mr. MILLS. I cannot yield now.
Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] was holding the floor.
Mr. MILLS. The question before this House is a double question.
The question of interest is dependent upon the question of time, and the question of time is dependent upon the settlement of both of these questions. those questions.

I suppose that if the House was ready to authorize a bond running for one hundred years it might be placed at 2 or 2½ per cent., and if for forty or fifty years at 3 per cent., or even at a lower rate. But if we were to authorize a thirty-day bond we certainly would have to pay a much higher rate of interest.

The House must consider both these questions together. The paramount question is that of time. The great question for the country is the controllability of these bonds by the Government, its power to call them in and pay them whenever the surplus revenues of the country enables us to do so, and thereby save interest. We are placing the cart before the horse in giving prominence to the question of interest.

I have made a calculation upon this subject. If we leave unrefunded the $200,000,000 of six percents and the $469,000,000 of five percents, using round numbers, and apply from time to time the surplus revenues of the country to their redemption at the rate of $100,000,000 a year, we will redeem them all in six years' time by the payment of

\$117,000,000 of interest. If we should refund those bonds in three percents at thirty years we would pay \$557,000,000 interest; at twenty years at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. \$433,000,000 of interest, and at ten years at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. \$216,000,000 of interest. It is in round numbers \$100,000,000 cheaper to let this debt remain at 5 and 6 per cent. and pay it in the course of the next five or six years than to refund it at 3 per cent. in

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman allow me a moment of the Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Allow me to call the attention of my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. MILLS] to the action of that committee when it was considering the question of profit and loss between the immediate disposition of this debt and the pront and loss between the immediate disposition of this debt and the refunding of it in bonds bearing a rate of interest as high as 4 per cent. A distinguished member of that committee, now elevated to the highest position in the Government, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, in his own handwriting, which I hold in my hand. The reply came back indorsed upon that letter—

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman is taking up all of my time. I thought he wanted to sak up a question. He can reply to me after I shall.

he wanted to ask me a question. He can reply to me after I shall have got through.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I wanted to show the House where the

Mr. FERRANDO WOOD. I wanted to show the House where the question of economy comes in between the immediate payment of this debt by anticipating assumed resources of the country, and providing in a regular legitimate proper financial way for its payment. The reply came back from the Secretary of the Treasury that by refunding the fives and sixes into 4 per cent. bonds, and then purchasing in the open market fifty millions of fours each year at a premium of 5 per cent.

mium of 5 per cent—

Mr. MILLS. They are now 13 per cent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Instead of deferring refunding indefinitely, and purchasing annually fifty millions of fives and sixes, the Government would save in ten years the present value of sixty-six millions at 4 per cent. and one hundred and thirty-five millions at 3½ per cent.

Mr. MILLS. That is pure speculation; the Secretary of the Treasury is in a land of dreams.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is a mathematical calculation. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is a mathematical calculation.

Mr. MILLS. A mathematical calculation that you can purchase 4 per cent. bonds at 5 per cent. premium, when they stand before you to-day at a premium of 13½ per cent.? That is assuming a predicate that is based upon air. The fact is the Secretary of the Treasury is obliged to purchase these bonds at a premium of 13½ per cent.; and that premium will increase as soon as this Government ties its hands and puts it in the power of the bondholders to increase the premium. This is purely a question of the multiplication table. The question is whether it is better to pay these bonds at 5 and 6 per cent. interest with the $100,000,000 of surplus revenue accumulating in the Treasury every year, and thus to extinguish the bonds within five years, or whether you will issue bonds payable in forty years and then go into the land of dreams with a project to buy in those bonds, when we cannot control them and must purchase them at such figures as the bondholders may demand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do know that after

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do know that after using the money from the surplus revenue we shall have at the end of this year $637,000,000 of indebtedness, part of it bearing interest at 5 per cent. and part at 6 per cent., which we will have the right to pay off. Taking the present rate of revenue, I believe we may safely calculate that inside of ten years we can pay this indebtedness. from our surplus revenues. Now, I am opposed to borrowing money upon obligations running a longer time than is necessary. Hence if we can pay this indebtedness inside of ten years out of our surplus we can pay this indeptedness inside of ten years out of our surplus revenues it would be wisdom to berrow money for one to ten years at the lowest rate of interest possible. Some gentlemen say that this rate is 3 per cent.; some say 3½ per cent.; some say 4 per cent. Even 4 per cent. is a reduction upon 5 and 6 per cent. which will have to be paid if nothing is done. I do not believe that you can borrow this money for this short time at 3 per cent., because by the financial table in Spofford's Almanac I find that the 4 per cent. bonds when we have det 13 per cent.

table in Spofford's Almanae I find that the 4 per cent. bonds when purchased at 13 per cent, premium yield an interest of 3.52 per cent.

Mr. TUCKER. The calculation is that when the bonds sell at 109 the rate of interest is equivalent to 3½ per cent.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Taking the gentleman's own statement these long bonds at present prices are yielding not less than 3.30 per cent. Now, I want to reduce the rate of interest paid by the Government. I want the Government's indebtedness paid as fast as it can be paid, year by year, and I want, at the same time, to reach the lowest possible rate of interest. But in providing for the issue of bonds I do not want to fix, absolutely, the rate of interest so low that we cannot float the bonds at par, and may thus fail to reduce the rate of 5 and 6 per cent. which we are now paying. Hence, I would give to the Secretary of the Treasury the discretion to pay as high as 3.65 or even 4 per cent. If he can get the bonds taken at 3 high as 3.65 or even 4 per cent. If he can get the bonds taken at 3 per cent., all right; if he can get them taken at 3.65 per cent. or 4 per cent., all right. In any event, the rate of interest will be 2 per cent. lower than we are now paying; and I would rather pay one-half per cent. or three-fourths per cent. or 1 per cent. more during a period running from one to ten years than pay 3 per cent. for fifteen, twenty, or forty years as is proposed by the committee's bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer as a substitute the amendment, which I send to the desk

The Clerk read as follows:

In the seventeenth and eighteenth lines strike out the words "the rate of three and a half" and insert "a rate not exceeding four."

In the twenty-first and twenty-second lines strike out the words "the rate of three and a half" and insert "a rate not exceeding four."

In the twenty-fourth line, after the word "issue," insert the following: "And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate the sale or exchange of such bonds at the lowest rate of interest practicable."

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, testimony comes from gentlemen on the other side of the House—from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, from my colleague, [Mr. Randall,] the Speaker of the House, and from others—that a bond bearing interest at 3 per cent. can be sold in the market at par; on the other hand, testimony comes from this side of the House, notably from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Frye] and from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] (and my own information corroborates this testimony) that a bond bearing 3 per cent. interest cannot be sold in the market at par. Hence, so far as the evidence before this House goes, it is a mooted question whether a bond bearing 3 per cent. interest can or cannot be sold at par. While this remains a disputed question I take it that it would be wise for Congress to vest in the Secretary of the Treasury the power to nego-Congress to vest in the Secretary of the Treasury the power to negotiate the sale of these bonds at the best rates he can. The amendment which I offer will enable him to sell these bonds at 4 per cent. if he cannot dispose of them at a more advantageous rate. This amendment will enable him to sell the bonds at 31 or at 3 if the state of the market will allow it. It will enable him to carry out the view expressed by some gentlemen here and sell the bonds at 2½ per cent. if that be practicable. Nothing in the law will interfere with the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds at the best market

Now, it strikes me that if we look at this matter as practical men, as business men with sound ideas of political economy would look at it, we shall place in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury the discretion to negotiate these bonds at the best rates he can. This is what we would do in our private business. If we were sending out an agent to transact important business for us, involving the saving of nine, ten, twelve, or fifteen million dollars a year, we would not place upon him an absolute restriction which might defeat the very of nine, ten, twelve, or fifteen million dollars a year, we would not place upon him an absolute restriction which might defeat the very purpose for which we employed him and which might at the same time injure our credit most materially. We would vestin this agent a discretionary power, placing upon it a proper limitation. That is the scope and object of the amendment I propose. It invests the Secretary of the Treasury with authority to negotiate these bonds at the best practicable market rates. It will permit the negotiation of them at 3 per cent., 2½, or any less rate which may be practicable. I trust that we shall take a business view of this question and arrive at the conclusion that it is best to vest this discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, we are sometimes getting ourselves into confusion here by not keeping clearly in mind the distinction between bonds and currency. I suppose, of course, "Uncle Sam" can dispose of 3 per cent. bonds if you give them the characteristics of "legal-tenders," because we take "legal-tenders" without any interest. So we must be a little careful about that. And I doubt if some of these arguments which have been made will apply.

Now, I do not want to tie the Secretary of the Treasury in this negotiation so that the capitalists of the ceuntry will have him at their mercy. If you make these limitations very strict and close they will stand around him and see how he is tied while they are all free, and perhaps they will nullify the loan.

As against the three percents that may perhaps be issued you have to provide in the first place against the fact that the banks will not to provide in the first place against the fact that the banks will not

As against the three percents that may perhaps be issued you have to provide in the first place against the fact that the banks will not seek to take them unless you relieve them from a part of their burdens of taxation. You cannot burn your candle at both ends. If you force on them a bond at too low a rate of interest they will not be able to afford to retain their circulation, as they could make more money in the other lines of banking; they would return their notes and possibly cause a considerable contraction in the currency.

And next you will have against the Secretary of the Treasury with his three percents all the holders of the five and six percents coming due next May and June. They would be pleased as financiers, if not as good citizens, to have a funding bill defeated or an impracticable one pass, because either would extend the term of their five and six percents and intentity raise their rives.

percents and instantly raise their price.

I should like to talk longer than five minutes on the general question, but I must hurriedly put in here some calculations which will help gentlemen to come to a safe conclusion.

I do not believe a 3 per cent. bond just now can be negotiated with advantage, and I believe we should make as much to make the rate advantage, and I believe we should make as much to make the rate 3½ or 3½ and give some time and perhaps get a premium on it. I do not believe we can sell a 3 per cent. at par just now, and that opinion is partly based on figures which I will give. But it is possible, if we would dare to do what the British Government has done, make a perpetual bond which we might sell at about par, and which would be in the market at par, or nearly so, all the while. We could then enter the market every year and expend our surplus revenue in purchase and cancellation. But this House will not yet adopt a perpetual bond, nor would the country at first approve it, although I think it would be the most economical measure we could adopt.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Please be brief, as my time is running and I need

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If we adopt a bond like that suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, then the Government would have the right to go into the market and buy the bonds at any time ?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what I have stated. Some of the bonds would always be in the market, and the Government could come in and take up some and reduce its debt in that way. I believe it would be the most economical bond we could adopt, but I do not think it is Now do not bring down that hammer, Mr. Chairman, until I get these figures before the House. The United States fours of 1907 are to-day in the market, not including accrued interest, net 112.4. That was the price very recently.

Mr. WARNER. They are 112\(\frac{3}{6}\).

Mr. HAWLEY. They net the investor 3.3 per cent. interest. The price of the four-and-a-halfs of 1891 is 111.59, and they net the investor 3.21 per cent. interest. That is the lowest I think we have ever reached. Investors purchasing the four-and-a-halfs of 1891 at 111.59 get 3.21 per cent. for their money. The District of Columbia three-sixty-fives of 1924 sold, a few days ago, net, i. e., excluding accrued interest, for 100.56, and net the investor 3.63 per cent. The currency sixes of 1895 at 130 net the investor 3.30; of 1896 at 131 net 3.34; of 1897 at 132 net 3.38; of 1898 at 133 net 3.42; of 1899 at 134 net 3.44. These figures show the best we do now is on the four-and-a-halfs of 1891.

I have other figures I desire to give, and I will say I have obtained

I have other figures I desire to give, and I will say I have obtained them from my friend, Mr. Elliott, the expert mathematician of the Treasury Department, an authority on these matters. I asked him to give me the present value of an imaginary 3 per cent.

bond, which it is quite easy to do, based on the price of our existing securities. The question as stated by me was: Required the present value of a thirty-year 3 per cent. security calculated on the basis of the present current net prices of 4 per cent. and 44 per cent. United States securities. His answer is: "The computed rates of interest States securities. His answer is: "The computed rates of interest realized to investors in the 4 and 4½ per cent. securities of the United States Government at the present current net prices of these securities are, respectively, 3.3 and 3.2 per cent. per annum; and consequently the required present value of a thirty-year 3 per cent. security is, respectively, 94.34 and 96.12"—the former rate based upon the price of four percents, the latter upon the price of the four and a half. And if a 3 per cent. bond cannot be negotiated save below par, the longer you make it the lower must be its present value. This is the mathematical truth, but considerations outside of rigid arithmetical rules might help us in selling a 3 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is now exhausted

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to occur to this House that we have a law now upon the statute-books which, if it be enforced, would enable us to pro-vide for the payment of this debt and save to the Government some $40,000,000 more than any other proposition which has been reported to the House, and without reducing the rate of interest. This law, which was enacted in view of this state of facts which we are now to meet, is a law that this House and the Senate passed after a resolution of the Senate declaring that "inasmuch as the bonded debt of this Govern-

Senate declaring that "inasmuch as the bonded debt of this Government was authorized under a law which provided for its payment in the standard money of the Government," which money at that time was the silver dollar as well as the gold dollar.

I assert this proposition, that to pay the debt in standard silver dollars will cost the people less than to pay it in any manner of refunding. If we pay now in coin say one hundred millions, and of our revenues one hundred millions, thus reducing the debt to, say, five hundred and eighty-two millions, this $582,000,000 and the interest thereon of 5 per cent. can be paid with $528,000,000 of surplus revenues by enforcing the law authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar. This law authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at market rates not less than two millions nor more than four millions' worth of silver bullion per month, and to coin this bullfour millions' worth of silver bullion per month, and to coin this bullion into dollars. The maximum amount would be forty-eight millions' worth of bullion per annum. At the present price of silver bullion, $48,000,000 of revenues will purchase sufficient bullion to coin ion, $48,000,000 of revenues will purchase sufficient bullion to coin fifty-four millions of standard silver dollars; so that $54,000,000 is the maximum required by law to be coined. We see that there is a clear profit of $6,000,000 on every forty-eight millions' worth of bullion; so that we save to the people $6,000,000 on every fifty-four millions of debt thus paid. If, then, we pay at the rate of fifty-four millions annually, we reduce the debt to that extent, and thus reduce the interest. By this process we can pay the debt of five hundred and eighty-two millions in about ten years. During that time we will have paid about eighteen millions of interest and five hundred and eighty-two millions of principal, making, in all, $600,000,000. The profit in coinmillions of principal, making, in all, $600,000,000. The profit in coinage will have been $72,000,000. Subtract $72,000,000 from $600,000,000, and we have as a result $528,000,000. It will thus be seen that we have paid the whole debt of $582,000,000 and the interest on it for ten years at 5 per cent. with $528,000,000, thus not only saving all the interest, but $54,000,000 of the principal. In short, $528,000,000 expended in the purchase of silver bullion will, under the silver law, pay off this debt and the interest on it during the process of payment. This is what the people expect and demand of us. This was the object and intent of the silver law.

The law restoring the silver dollar thus executed in good faith, and for the very purposes for which it was enacted, will pay off this debt at less cost by at least $55,000,000 than any proposition of refunding now before the House. This plan of paying it brings to bear the benefits of the double standard, utilizes the silver, and places the country on the double standard instead of the single standard of gold. We are paying it now on a gold standard, and it was the demand of the people that we should pay it on the double standard. That is just where the difference comes in. The Secretary of the Treasury refuses to execute the law, and comes here and standard. That is just where the difference comes in. The Secretary of the Treasury refuses to execute the law, and comes here and tells Congress and the committees of this House that he will not coin and pay out silver dollars, because he proposes to maintain the gold standard in this Government; and what he proposes before this House to do is to pay the debt according to the gold standard and not according to the double standard as the law requires. And when the Secretary enters into an agreement with the clearing-house of New York, in which he clearly discriminates against silver and in favor of gold, he tells the House he will not pay the money, except so far as he can do it without disturbing the gold standard, and this House acquiesces in this policy and administers the Government in that way. He usurps the authority to pay the debt under the gold standard when the people of this country demand that both standards shall be used. I say that it is time that the House should assert the rights of the people to demand that the Secretary shall carry out the law that was enacted when the bonds were issued, and which, as appear upon the very face of the bonds themselves, require that as appear upon the very face of the bonds themselves, require that they shall be paid in the standard coin of the country.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the suggestions brought to the attention of the House in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend.] Interest on money, like all other commercial transactions and business, seeks and finds its own level. There is transactions and business, seeks and finds its own level. There is scarcely a State in this Union, certainly none east of the Mississippi River, where individuals cannot borrow all the money they want on ninety days' time or six months' time, or one or two years even, at 6 per cent. The banks are full of money, and unable to find investments at that rate. Now, Mr. Chairman, that being so, it is, as the gentleman from Texas said, simply a question of mathematics. State gentleman from Texas said, simply a question of mathematics. State and local taxes range, as has been truly said, from 2 to 2½ per cent—2.4 per cent. would be about the average. What, these facts being established or conceded, should be the rate of interest required to float these bonds or sell them at par in the money market? Manifestly not above 3 per cent. per annum. Whenever the Government pays a high rate of interest upon its bonds it is not only an injury to the Government itself, but, as my friend from New York will understand, it increases the rate of interest which individuals are required to pay when they want a loan of money. In such case, when applied to pay when they want a loan of money. In such case, when application is made by an individual to the bank, or to those who have money to lend, for a loan, the banker or money-lender would say, "The Government pays so much interest on its bonds, (mentioning the rate;) there are no taxes to be paid if I loan my money to the the rate;) there are no taxes to be paid if I loan my money to the Government; therefore, if I loan to individuals, I must charge such additional interest as will pay my taxes."

Take, for example, the 3 per cent. Government bond. Add to the 3 per cent. the 2.4 per cent. per annum, which is the average rate of State and local taxes in the cities; that amounts to 5.4 per cent. But, Mr. Chairman, the greater security of the loan to the Government over and above the loan to individuals is worth more than the remainover and above the loan to individuals is worth more than the remaining six-tenths of 1 per cent.; so that in effect, if you fix your rate of interest at 3 per cent., it is to the lender the equivalent of 6 per cent. on a loan to individuals or to any other borrower. It is then a duty which we owe not only to the Government to economize in all the expenditures of the Government and keep her rates of interest low, expenditures of the Government and keep her rates of interest low, but it is a high duty we also owe to the people of this country, and especially to the debtor classes and to the producing classes, who carry on their business on borrowed capital. If the Government fixes the rate of her interest high, then the debtor class and those who do business on borrowed capital must pay the money-lender the increased rate of interest; and when the rate is low those classes are correspondingly benefited.

It is simply a question of arithmetic whether the bonds can be It is simply a question of arithmetic whether the bonds can be floated at 3 per cent. We are not obliged, Mr. Chairman, to take simply the opinion of this man or that man in New York or Philadelphia, or anywhere else. The question is, what is the present rate of interest throughout the country? That is a fact which, like the price of wheat or corn or pork, can be easily established. If you take the present rates of interest charged to individuals in the great money-centers of this country and deduct the amount of State and local taxes paid by the money-lender, you will find that the rate which he actually receives will fall below rather than above 3 per cent. I am surprised that gentlemen living in localities where an abundance of capprised that gentlemen living in localities where an abundance of capital can be had for 6 per cent. by individuals, on either short or long time, and in other localities where it can be had for 4 per cent. by individuals, should propose to create a bond of the Government and pay on it above 3 per cent. Time has little or nothing to do with this question. Such loans are made to individuals on both short and this question. Such loans are made to individuals on both short and long time. No taxes whatever can be exacted on this proposed loan to be made to the Government. I imagine, Mr. Chairman, this is a question in which the people throughout the country in their local business transactions are interested, and will be affected as well as the

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question before he resumes his seat. Mr. CONVERSE. I will hear the question.

Ohio a question before he resumes his seat.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will hear the question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio, as a western man representing the agricultural interests so far at least as his own district is concerned, whether the effect of the General Government establishing a rate of interest of 3 per cent. will not help the debtor interest of this country to the amount of millions, and whether mortgages on farms instead of hereafter going to 6 and 8 per cent. will not in the Western States come down to 5 and 6?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will answer my friend's question by saving it per cent. will not in the Western States come down to 5 and 6?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will answer my friend's question by saying it will. Millions of dollars will be saved to the debtor and industrial classes in the West by fixing a low rate of interest in this bill. There is a larger amount of saving in that very way to the people than the difference between a higher and a lower rate of interest on the amount involved in this bill. I will mention a fact which came within my own knowledge bearing on this point. When the Government a few ye ars ago was paying 6 per cent. on its bonds no man in my State could borrow money at less than 8 or 10 per cent. from those who had the money to lend, and when Government rates went down to 4 per the money to lend, and when Government rates went down to 4 per cent. a corresponding reduction in rates to individuals followed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to ask my colleague a question before he takes his seat. In advocating a 3 per cent. rate of interest what is the time he would fix for the bond?

Mr. CONVERSE. That is wholly immaterial. I would make it a 2-10 bond if I had my choice—a bond redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after two years, and at any time within ten years. I would not extend it beyond that. But I claim that the question of time does not enter into this calculation if you fix the rate of interest as high as 2 per cent.

est as high as 3 per cent.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand, however, if the gentleman advocates a rate of 3 per cent. he will nevertheless oppose a longtime bond

Mr. CONVERSE. I would take the suggestion of the gentleman from Maryland, that the interest should not exceed 3 per cent. and that the bond still should be a short bond or a 2-10 bond.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will ask the gentleman another question:
Does he not understand it to be the proper policy of this Government to cancel its debt as rapidly as possible and hence to retain to itself the option to redeem its bonds as rapidly as the surplus revenue will permit?

permit?

Mr. CONVERSE. That is exactly my idea.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman [Mr. CONVERSE] agrees that the bonds should be payable at the option of the Government after, say, one year, but says that the time of payment has nothing to do with the rate of interest. In my judgment the questions of time and the rate of interest are inseparably connected. You should know the one in order rightly to fix the other; and I therefore differ with my honored colleague when he suggests that the time has nothing to do with the question of the rate of interest.

I want to submit to the House a doubt as to the soundness of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [the Speaker,] when he asserts that the great prosperity of the country settles the question in favor of our ability to refund the maturing bonds at so low a rate of interest as 3 per cent. In my judgment the logic of that prosperity points in another direction. Our exceptionally prosperous condition, resulting from abundant harvests, quickened industries, and restored confidence in business circles, calls the capital of the country into other channels where investments yield a return far and restored confidences in business circles, can't the capital of the country into other channels where investments yield a return far above that which could be realized from a bond bearing 3 per cent. It must be manifest as a business proposition that the ability of the Government to refund at so low a rate of interest must result from the inability of parties having money to invest it in business ventures or securities which yield a greater return. Whatever might have been accomplished in the matter of placing a 3 per cent. bond one or two years ago, it is clear to my mind that the present condition of the country is not such as to encourage the expectation that such a bond could be placed at par now. I refer especially to a 3 per cent. bond which the Government may pay at its option after, say, one year.

The business of the country is in an exceptionally prosperous condition, which indicates that capital is employed, and profitably employed. When a year or two since you placed your 4 per cent. loan the reverse was true. Business was stagnant; our great industries not yet quickened into healthful life and activity. The effects of the terrible panic were still with us; money was not lacking, but confidence had not been restored. The savings-banks of the country had been compelled to suspend, and had not resumed; and men had lost their savings, together with their confidence, in the banks; and in that dilemma they sought a safe investment rather than a profitable one, the object being rather to save the principal than to secure interest.

To-day a different condition of affairs obtains; that extra caution born of the panic has disappeared. Every channel of trade has been reopened; every branch of industry revived and quickened, and if our means are ample our opportunities are boundless; and four percents are now being sold, and the money finds more profitable investment. What I mean to say is, that the ability of the Government to refund its debt at a very low rate of interest, say 3 per cent., would not necessarily indicate national prosperity, but in a large degree the contrary. The rate of interest fixed by the Government must the contrary. The rate of interest fixed by the Government must have relation to the return derived from legitimate business ventures and other investments.

My colleague would not to-day if he had charge of a trust fund invest it in Government three percents. He would not feel that he had discharged his duty to the beneficiary if he invested such funds in Government bonds at 3 per cent.; because he knows that, with the healthful financial condition which now obtains throughout the country, the active and growing demand for money, and the safe returns which may be relied on from fair business ventures, in the presence of confidence restored, he could find in the West, in the East as well, in fact everywhere in this country, a much more profitable investment. Now, as a friend suggests to me, would any court authorize such an investment of trust funds where the interest to be realized was a prime object and not simply and solely the safety of the was a prime object and not simply and solely the safety of the was a prime object and not simply and solely the safety of the principal. Justice to the beneficiary would not permit it. The main point is to reserve to the Government the right to pay these bonds as rapidly as our surplus revenues will enable us to do so. With the business of the country at high tide, with the demand for money active and increasing, with business ventures and investments yielding from 5 to 10 per cent. net, to fund a debt of five hundred millions in bonds bearing but 3 per cent. never leafur a veer or two set the bonds bearing but 3 per cent., payable after a year or two at the pleasure of the Government, seems to me impossible. In my judgment the Treasury notes and bonds should bear a rate of 3½ per cent., and the rate of interest should be fixed by this act, and not be left to the judgment or discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] proceeds, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. As I understand, the House is called upon to pass upon two questions: first, as to the rate of interest; and, second, as to the time the bond is to run. I want to know whether, if we fix the rate of interest now, for a long-term bond for instance we can afterward, if we vote for a short bond, go back and change that rate of interest?

Mr. ROBINSON. While we remain on the section?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. While we remain on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would feel disposed to relegate that matter to the committee and be governed by the expressed wish of the majority of the committee.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It seems to me that should the committee bind itself by a particular rate of interest it might thereby greatly influence its vote for a long bond. It occurs to me that as the rate of interest depends upon the length of time the bond is to run, the sensible business way would be to fix the time the bond is to run and then the rate of interest would naturally adjust itself to that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the Chair cannot dictate the manner by which the com-

Georgia that the Chair cannot dictate the manner by which the committee may reach an objective point.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Chair does not answer my question. Can we go back and make a change? That is the parliamentary inquiry to which I desire an answer. If we cannot go back, that is a very strong argument why the committee should refuse to fix any rate of interest until it has fixed the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that under no circumstances would he dictate to the committee what should be or should not be done but would relegate the whole question to the majority not be done, but would relegate the whole question to the majority of the committee

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. When I made the inquiry of the Chair I thought there was a rule upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not aware of the existence of any rule upon that point.

Mr. KELLEY. I seek the floor now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of submitting, as a reply to my colleague from the Allegheny district, [Mr. Bayne,] an article on the scarcity of sound investments, from the London Saturday Review, in these words:

The growing scarcity of sound investments is a phenomenon that is forcing itself upon the attention of the least observant of those who have money to put by. Only a few years ago French rentes yielded over 5 per cent. on the market price, and not very long since United States Government bonds could be bought to return 7 and 8 per cent. Where now can securities such as these be found to give a like income ? Consols are no longer at par, but they are so little under it that practically they may be said to yield only 3 per cent.; United States fours yield about 3½ per cent.; French rentes about 4 per cent.; Indian sterling bonds not quite 4 per cent.; and colonial government securities generally about the same rate. Even Russian and Hungarian bonds, great as is the risk attached to them, pay an investor only 5½ and 6½ per cent. respectively. And if we pass from the securities of States to those of private companies, we find that those in good credit give usually from 3 to 4 per cent, but seldom more. It is obvious, too, that the tendency is to reduce still lower the return to the investor. In other words, really good investments are becoming searcer every year, and of course their scarcity enhances their price.

RECORD—HOUSE.

It is a common complaint that all stock-exchange prices at present are extravaguntly high, not alone in England, but all over the world; and though to a certain extent this is due to speculation, fostered by the abundance of capital in the short-loan market, the permanent tendency of events is to lower the interest of money. The principal cause of this is the magnitude of the annual savings in the more advanced countries of the world. In his paper on "Recent accumulation of capital." Mr. Giffen estimates the annual savings of the United Kingdom in the ten years from 1865 to 1875 at two hundred and forty millions. Granting that the depression in trade and the series of bad harvests have since greatly diminished the rate of accumulation, still the savings every year must have been enormous. Part of these were invested in bringing new land into cultivation—a process which went on even in 1879, perhaps the worst year of the century; part in improving land previously cultivated; part in ship-building; part in renewing and replacing the mechanical appliances used in industry; part in house building; and part in founding new businesses or extending old ones. But there remained a large balance, which flowed have surplus money wish to invest it in a manner in which, if there should be need, it can be easily realized, and in which, while out of the owner's control, it will not call for his supervision, or give him any trouble. On the stock exchange alone can he usually find a security of the kind. And accordingly there is always an immense sum seeking employment there. It has been said—we know not upon what basis of calculation—that at the present moment there are £200,000,000 in this country waiting investment.

Whatever may be thought of this estimate, it is certain that the amount is enormous. In France it is generally estimated that, in spite of the loss of Alsace-Lorraine, of the ravages of the phylloxera, and of the series of bad harvests, the amount is enormous. In France, the series of the annual s of first-class securities within the past ten years has occuring relative learns.

It will be seen, however, if we add together the repayments by the United States, England, and Germany and the repudiations by Turkey and Peru that the latter greatly exceed the new issues. In fact since 1873 new issues upon a great scale have ceased. This is true of industrial and commercial undertakings as well as of States. As we saw last week in discussing the railways of the world, the United Kingdom has practically completed its railway system. Whatever may be done in the future there can in this country be no vast railway constructions as in the past. France, Germany, Holland, and Belgium find capital for their own lines. Russia has not credit enough to raise a loan for the present, and Hungary is obliged to be cautious. It is the same with most of the colonies. At any moment a new mania for foreign loans may no doubt spring up and railways may be financed for all sorts of places; but we are now dealing only with the present and the immediate past, and it is unquestionable that the issues of first-class securities have not kept pace with the reductions. At the same time the new savings constantly made have been seeking for investment and have not been met by any new creations.

The inevitable result of this double movement is the rise of prices to which we referred above, or, in other words, a fall in the rate of interest. This is the natural tendency in all advanced communities. During the past forty years it has been counteracted by the construction of railways, which, in the United Kingdom alone, have used up a capital nearly equal to the present amount of the national debt. The tendency has further been checked by the laying down of telegraph wires all over the globe, by the replacement of sailing vessels by steamers, and the substitution of iron for wood in naval construction, by the vast development of industry and manufactures, and by the immense loans made to foreign States. But there has come a pause in the creation of all these forms of investment, and instantly the permanent tendency of events asserts itself. The prices of securities rise, money accumulates in Lombard street, and bankers complain that they can get nothing for it.

I cut this article from a paper, feeling that it involved as philosophical a discussion of our financial condition and duty in the matter of refunding as I had heard or was likely to hear. I submit it now as a part of my remarks, that gentlemen may have it for their Sunday reading. I also desire to submit as a part of my reply an extract which I have clipped from a paper containing information sent to us from London, of date December 8, 1880:

Tenders for £3,500,000 of India 3½ per cent. stock were opened yesterday. The applications amounted to over £14,500,000, varying from the official minimum of 98 to 104½. The tenders at £103 12s. will receive about 71 per cent. of the amount bid for; those above that figure will receive the amounts bid for in full.

Now, bonds at 3½ per cent. are competed for by the great financial houses of the world at a premium as high as 4½ per cent. Yet gentlemen here hesitate as to whether we can borrow a small sum of money at 3 per cent. And further:

at 3 per cent. And further:

The Financier, in a discussion of the foregoing in connection with the redemption of the American debt, says: "The United States will be apt to rate its credit as at least equal to that of India. It may be questioned whether on the issue of the coming loan for refunding the bonds falling due next year the Secretary of the Treasury will be so liberal ast ogive 33 per cent., when he can evidently foat bonds at a lower rate. The success of the loan has strengthened the market for all first-class investments; but prices are somewhat restrained by rumors that £500,000 in gold will be taken to-day or on Thursday for New York, an operation which would, under an advance of the bank rate on Thursday to 3 per cent., be possible."

The Times, in its financial article this morning, says: "The finances of the United States may excite the envy not only of England but of Europe. The unprecedented rate of redemption is having its natural effect, raising the credit of the United States to a level with the most staid and best-paying communities of the Old World. In reaching that level the United States will only attain the rightful position a country which is so faithful to its engagements, whose resources are so limitless and whose population increases with such remarkable rapidity ought to enjoy—the best credit accorded to any. In all probability, should conditions remain favorable, Secretary Sherman will accomplish his refunding operations at a rate nearer 3 than 4 per cent. The very rapidity with which he is able to pay off the debt must aid him most materially by reducing the supply of stock. This, acting pari passes with the augmenting demand for sound investments, will give him an incalculable advantage in his operations."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in connection with

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in connection with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] has just said, I rise for the purpose of putting an inquiry to those who have disputed the ability of the Secretary of the Treasury to float at par a 3 per cent. bond. The other day $20,000,000 of 6 per cent. bonds of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company were put upon the market; $10,000,000 were offered in Europe, and $10,000,000 in New York. These bonds rest for their security upon a road which possibly may never be finished. I hope, however, and think the probabilities are that it will be built and successfully operated. The subscriptions in England to those 6 per cent. railroad bonds amounted, as I understand from the newspapers, to over $30,000,000; and for the $10,000,000 offered in New York there were subscriptions to the amount of $20,000,000. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in connection with $20,000,000.

A MEMBER. At what rate?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. At a premium of 2 per cent. Now I wish to ask this question: If a railway company whose road is not yet constructed can float a bond subject to all kinds of local and State yet constructed can hoat a bond subject to all kinds of local and State taxation at a premium of 2 per cent, what can the National Government do with a 3 per cent, bond, exempt from all taxation and with no question about the safety of the security?

Let me make another inquiry. If one of these gentlemen acting as trustee held in his possession $20,000 of the 5 or 6 per cent. Government bonds maturing this year, and if those bonds were called in by the Government, what would he do with the money which he is obligated to reinvest? Would he prefer a Northern Pacific or any other railroad bond, or a State bond bearing 6 per cent., a bond subject to local and State taxation, or a 3 per cent, non-taxable Government railroad bond, or a state bond bearing o per cent., a bond subject to local and State taxation, or a 3 per cent. non-taxable Government bond which gives absolute security? I say, for one, that with such a trust resting upon me, I would feel it my duty, legally and morally, to invest that trust fund in Government bonds. In my State the amount of municipal, county, school, and State taxation upon any other kind of investments that you can name will reach, taking the average of the cities and counties of the whole State, 3 per cent.; and yet Illinois is without a State debt. She, perhaps, has the proudest financial record of any State in the Union. In many of the States burdened with enormous State debts taxation is much greater than 3 per cent. I submit, then, that a Government bond bearing 3 per cent. interest would be a better investment than a bond of the Northern Pacific Railroad or any other railroad bearing 6 per cent. interest; for when you deduct the taxes you would have but 3 cent. interest; for when you deduct the taxes you would have but 3 per cent. remaining.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague perhaps is going to claim that in his county the local taxes are not so great as the figure I have mentioned. But most of the towns, cities, and counties of Illinois owe heavy indebtedness. I do not doubt that the municipal, school, and county tax, in connection with the State taxation of Illinois, will average 3 per cent., taking the whole State into consideration.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. On a valuation not exceeding one-third of the actual value. I hope my colleague does not want to slander his State and mine.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not slander my State. I say that the rate of taxation in Illinois is less than in a majority of the States of the Union; and yet the rate of taxation there will average 3 per cent. on the assessment as fixed by the State board of equalization. I repeat that a 3 per cent. Government bond is a better invest-tion. I repeat that a 3 per cent. Government bond is a better investment in Illinois than any railroad or other bonded investment at their present market valuation, bearing 6 per cent. interest.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have been opposed to legislating in this bill in such a way as to provide alone for the present state of things in this country. If we pass a bill of the kind indicated by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, we are legislating for an exceptional condition of things in this country and in a particular part of the country. There is even a little more force and a little more consistency in the course of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] when he advocates the passage of a funding bill to provide for the issue of a bond that is to be sold alone in the London market. I sympathize with the distinguished Speaker of this don market. I sympathize with the distinguished Speaker of this House when he talks about issuing a "popular loan;" but I know as well as I know anything that a 3 per cent. Government loan would not get a willing subscriber to a single dollar of it in any money center in Ohio, although the subscription might be kept open one hundred and fifty rather than fifteen days, as he suggests. I am in favor of a bond that our own people can and will take and hold. The bond should not be issued to be held alone by banks as a basis of banking or for a permanent investment, but they should be such as could be profitably held by trustees of charitable and educational trusts for profitably held by trustees of charitable and educational trusts for the benefit of estates and for other proper purposes.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman is mistaken about any bond of the United States going necessarily to London.

Mr. KEIFER. I was speaking of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] who undertakes to prove that our bonds ought necessarily to be issued in such a way that they will go to London instead of remaining at home.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman will examine the facts of the case, he will find that the flow of bonds back to our country has been enormous: and we are draining nearly every civil-facts of the case, he will find that the flow of bonds back to our country has been enormous; and we are draining nearly every civilized country of its gold.

Mr. KEIFER. The flow of bonds has now largely ceased and they have commenced to go abroad again. I wish to have it understood that I believe that not a single bond, for $100 if you please, would be willingly subscribed for in my district or in any other district of Ohio if the rate of interest is fixed as low as 3 per cent. You may force the banks to take these bonds if they do not go out of charter. But if they go out of charter and take up their circulation and contract the currency, who will take them? I suppose gentlemen on the other side who always make capital by assailing banks or corporations desire this—desire this—

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We have heard this sort of talk for the last twelve years. But it is a prophecy which is never fulfilled. These banks have never refused what we have offered them.

Mr. KEIFER. I only refer to what I have heard from gentlemen on the other side for four or five years past. I have heard two speeches from one gentleman to-day, and all there was in them was attacks upon the banks, except an indication that we ought to issue bonds for the Furnment market.

for the European market

Now I find strange things here. Gentlemen advocate a "popular loan" which cannot be popular—a loan which would only be taken in exceptional cases. Charitable and educational institutions, trust estates, and savings-banks might be forced for a time at least under some circumstances to take these bonds. Charitable and educational institutions would do it at a great sacrifice of their hitherto supposed permanent income, and the savings-banks in many cases would be compelled to discontinue the business which they are now doing for the poorer classes of depositors. We find combined and united here gentlemen who believe in no bonds at all, who believe in issuing notes to pay all the bonds, and gentlemen who are in favor of the least rate of interest on long bonds, so as to force these loans out of our country or into the hands of some special syndicate in some particular money center, perhaps New York City alone. In refunding the bonds soon to mature we should take into consideration the interests of all sections of our own country and the interests of all classes of our sections of our own country and the interests of all classes of our people.

I wish to put into the Record a brief statement showing what a 4 per cent. bond would realize to the purchaser if issued for thirty years, for twenty years, or for ten years, at the various rates of premium that might be paid. I do it for the purpose of showing that the Secretary of the Treasury might sell a 4 per cent. bond at a premium and realize in exceptional times, such as the present, when money is cheap and bonds high, all the benefits which can be obtained by the Government from a 3 per cent. interest bond:

A 4 per cent bond for thirty years, the interest payable every six months, will produce 3 per cent. at a premium of 119.69; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 114.30; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 109.24; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 104.48. A 4 per cent. bond for twenty years will produce 3 per cent. at a premium of 110.97; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 107.15; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 103.50. A 4 per cent. bond for ten years will produce 3 per cent. at a premium of 104.19; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 106.36; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 104.19; 3½ per cent. at a premium of 102.07.

It will be noted that a 4 per cent. twenty-year bond sold at 114.96 would realize to the purchaser and holder 3 per cent. on his investment, and that a 4 per cent. ten-year bond would realize the same per cent. if sold at 108.58. If the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to go into the market and sell 4 per cent. bonds to the highest bidder the Government would suffer no loss. One great risk in only authorizing the issue of a 3 per cent. bond is that the bonds may not be taken at all at par should times change before the time for refunding arrives. Those who favor the forced issue of low-rate bonds now, so that, if money becomes dearer and they are not worth par, the Government may buy them up on its own account and thus bonds now, so that, if money becomes dearer and they are not worth par, the Government may buy them up on its own account and thus speculate on its own indebtedness, may be statesmen—far-seeing statesmen. If such a course were premeditately planned and executed by wealthy and powerful individuals or corporations, then all good people would say they were dishonest. I may be pardoned, I hope, for saying that such a policy is unworthy of our Republic.

If the banks should be forced to take and hold 3 per cent bonds as a security for their circulation, but a comparatively small portion of the $671,917,600 of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, which become payable or redeemable in May and June next, would be taken. There are $202,266,550 of sixes which are redeemable June 30, 1881, excepting of this sum $710,550, which are absolutely payable July 1, 1881, and there are $469,651,050 of the five percents redeemable May 1, 1881.

While I do not believe that a "national debt is a national blessing." I do holieve that a blessing it is a national blessing.

ing," I do believe that so long as this country must have a debt it is better that it should be held by its own people. Aside from adding to their and the country's prosperity, it adds to their patriotism very to their and the country's prosperity, it adds to their patriotism very materially.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FELTON obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I rise to a point of order. Is not debate on the pending amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The discussion on the pending amendment was exhausted some time since, and it has been proceeding by general consent.

Mr. FELTON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the matter we are now discussing the question of interest is not so important as the question of the time when these bonds are to be paid. The country cares but little for the mere difference between a bond bearing 3 per cent. interest per annum and one bearing 4 per cent. interest, but the country is deeply concerned in the question whether the Government intends to perpetuate this debt or to pay it off as rapidly as possible. We have here on this refunding question an illustration of the importance of delay and caution in legislative action. Last session of this present Congress we were asked to refund this maturing debt in bonds running for we were asked to refund this maturing debt in bonds running for thirty, forty, and I believe one proposition was made for fifty years, bearing from 3 to 4 per cent. interest, a measure practically perpetuating this debt, or for an indefinite period of time fastening upon the country this national mortgage—a mortgage upon the enterprises and industries of the reader.

and industries of the people.

Now, it is admitted by nearly all that a bond of the United States bearing a reduced rate of interest and redeemable at the option of the Government within one year or fifty years can be easily disposed of at its face value.

Now, it is conceded by nearly all that this maturing debt and the entire national debt should be paid as rapidly as the resources of the Government will permit.

Our country is growing in wealth and population—our resources are inexhaustible—our revenues are increasing from day to day. The surplus income of the Government over the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year will amount to $90,000,000. With this vast and ever-increasing production of wealth, and with this enormous surplus revenue, it is criminal to talk of ways and methods for continuing this day. tinuing this debt.

There can be no objection, it seems to me, to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and to the proposed substitute for the original bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] to issue Treasury notes to the amount of about four hundred millions of dollars, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable every year by the Government to the amount of the sinking fund for that year.

This proposed measure practically seek scide the expelse income of sinking fund for that year.

This proposed measure practically sets aside the surplus income of the Government of each year for the payment of this debt. We must remember that the Government can pay no more of this debt per annum than our surplus revenues amount to, and by adopting these Treasury notes we reduce our annual interest and insure the speedy cancellation of this debt, as speedy as if no refunding measure was authorized by Congress.

If these Treasury notes to the amount of the maturing debt are resolved upon, then I see no necessity for the remaining portion of the honorable Secretary's recommendation, namely, that an amount not exceeding four hundred millions of bonds, bearing a rate of in-not exceeding four hundred millions of bonds, bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 3.65 per cent. per annum and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after fifteen years, be issued.

Both propositions are not necessary; and a bond passing beyond the power of the Government to redeem within fifteen years is highly objectionable, especially when it can be demonstrated that this entire maturing debt can be canceled within the next six or eight years. I desire to keep this debt always within the grasp of the Government. I am opposed to giving premiums for the privilege of paying our debts. The day you authorize these Treasury notes you place the entire national debt, now amounting to $1,890,025,740, in process of liquidation. You set in motion the machinery which is to relieve the labor of this country from the burdens imposed upon it by this debt. You publish to all the world the fact that the debt is to be paid according to contract, by making every surplus gold and silver dollar a fund applicable only to its extinction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. FINLEY. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

tleman from Georgia.

Mr. FELTON. I thank the gentleman from Ohio.

The financial prosperity of this country is attributable to various

First. The ability with which the finances of the Government have been managed. Differ as we may with the honorable Secretary of the Treasury in many of his financial ideas, and we do certainly differ with him, yet it must be conceded that he has administered the House.

financial affairs of this country with an ability rarely, if ever, equaled by any of his predecessors since the formation of the Government.

Second. The agricultural prosperity of the country has been a wonderful and perhaps the most important factor in this financial success. We have exported during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880: Bread and breadstuffs, worth...... $288, 036, 835

 Raw cotton, worth

This list of agricultural products exported to foreign countries might be greatly extended, but by these articles alone the balance of trade is kept overwhelmingly in our favor. With the two single agricultural products of wheat and cotton we have and can maintain our financial supremacy among the nations of the earth. This demonstrates, what was already known to every intelligent mind, that agricultural prosperity is the basis of all real and permanent national wealth

Third. The next and very important factor in our financial success has been the remonetization and recoinage of silver. I am unwilling that any arrangement should be made for the settlement of this refundthat any arrangement should be made for the settlement of this refunding question without giving due prominence to this the principal agent in the payment of our debts. In all the congressional action of this country since 1875, I know of no measure enacted into a law by Congress which will live in the grateful memory of our producing classes with the same intensity as the remonetization of the silver dollar of 412½ grains. I know of no act of Congress that has contributed more to the revival of business, which has done more to lift the country out of the stagnation and gloom which was resting like a nightmare upon its industries. It made resumption of specie payment possible and practicable. It has quickened every department of labor. It has been a national blessing, strengthening the North and West, a cordial to the South when it was ready to faint. [Applause.] I know of no coin in such demand among and so acceptable to the farming and mechanical classes of the country. This silver dollar is going to remain with us. You may issue your edicts of excommunication against it, but this coin, with its firm hold upon the American mind, will never again be dethroned by a legislative act. Let it, then, be coined up to the full maximum standard required by the silver law, four millions per month, and let every dollar thus coined be paid out by the Government in canceling these bonds and meeting the ordinary expenditures of the Government. meeting the ordinary expenditures of the Government.

Our material prosperity at this time, I repeat, is wonderful, and our financial condition is the admiration of the world. Three hundred thousand emigrants every year coming into the United States from Europe, bringing some capital with them, and each and every from Europe, bringing some capital with them, and each and every one of them adding something to the productive capacity of the country; with our immense agricultural resources, and those resources being rapidly developed; our manufacturing industries constantly multiplying; the political outlook giving assurance to every patriot that in a few years sectionalism and political proscription will give place to a broad and liberal nationalism, binding together the various States, and our millions of citizens in one great brotherhood, one perfect Union—with such a country, with such a citizenship, every dollar of the national debt paid according to contract, labor freed from the excessive burdens of taxation now resting upon it, perfectly unencumbered, with the greatest facilities for accumulating wealth, we thus foresee a future for our country and our people surpassing in beauty, wealth, and power the dream of our prophetic fathers. [Applause.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words upon this amendment.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words upon this amendment.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMONTON. My point of order is that the discussion of the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the conformal amendment.

pro forma amendment.

Mr. FELTON. I have no objection to withdrawing the amend-Mr. SIMONTON. I understand the gentleman from Georgia did not make the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment already pending, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "at the rate of 3½ per cent." and insert "a rate not exceeding 4 per cent."

In lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "at the rate of 3½ per cent." and insert "not exceeding 4 per cent." After the word "issue," in line 24, insert the words "it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to inaugurate the sale or exchange of such bonds at the lowest rate of interest practicable."

Mr. WARNER. Now I move to make the rate 12 per cent. instead of 4 per cent., in order to say a few words.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order again that the pending amendments, which have not been acted upon, are as many as the committee can now entertain under the rules of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee is well taken, and it is the duty of the Chair, inasmuch as the point of order has been made, to cause a vote to be taken upon the pending amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the pending amendment. I desire to recall the attention of the committee for a moment to the question of time on the bonds proposed to be issued. I agree with my friend from Georgia that the question of time really ought to be settled first; then, after we have settled that question, the rate of interest can be fixed. Certainly if we fix on a low rate of interest the time must be extended. On the other hand if we reduce the time the rate of interest must be raised. other hand if we reduce the time the rate of interest must be raised, or the bonds will not be taken.

We know what the market rate of our securities is. This furnishes us a ready scale of interest. The four percents, as the gentleman from Connecticut has shown, are equal to a bond bearing a rate of interest Connecticut has shown, are equal to a bond bearing a rate of interest of something over 3.3 per cent. The value of bonds of 1881, five percents, are equal to a bond bearing a rate of 3½ per cent. interest. I must differ with some of my friends here as to what determines the rate of interest. Rate of interest is determined not by what the Government may fix as interest on its securities, but by financial laws over which this Government has no control whatever to determine. The credit of the Government has been often referred to during this debate. That, of course, is all-important; but I beg leave to say to the committee that the credit of this Government was established before the oldest member of this Hunse was born. It was established

The credit of the Government has been often referred to during this debate. That, of course, is all-important; but I beg leave to say to the committee that the credit of this Government was established before the oldest member of this House was born. It was established when the debt of the war of the Revolution was paid. It is not a creature of to-day. The credit of this Government was as well established and as good ten years ago as it is now. It was shaken necessarily to some extent during the war, because the question of the ability of the Government to pay its debts under the circumstances was then brought in question.

But neither its ability nor its purpose to pay is any longer questiened. Nor has it been in question during all the changes in the rates of interest. The rate of interest has changed everywhere under the operation of financial laws. The rate of interest varies in different parts of the country. West of the Alleghany Mountains it is one rate for the best credit, and west of the Mississippi another and a higher. East of the Alleghany Mountains it is lower, and on the other side of the Atlantic it is lower still. Possibly a 3 per cent. bond payable in ten or fifteen or twenty years might be sold in Europe, and a bond bearing a very low rate of interest, if sold at all, would have to go over there for a market. The fact that gold is coming this way is no proof that the bonds are not going the other way. The fact is, railroad securities are going over to the other side, and that is one reason why gold is coming to us now. There is, however, in my judgment, but one thing to consider, and that is, at how low a rate of interest can the Government borrow enough to fund the maturing debt? If it is decided to hold the option to pay in one, two, or at most say five years, on part of the debt to be funded, then the question is, at how low a rate can we borrow the money?

If you can borrow the money at 3 per cent., if you believe we can go into the market and borrow at 3 per cent, if you believe we can go certificates for the public, and not exceeding a three-and-a-half rate for bonds which are to be received from the banks as security for their circulation. I close by saying that the important thing is to limit the time, especially the time when they become redeemable; and if it is understood that we are not going to put this debt out of the power of the Government to pay it at par, I am prepared to vote on this question at once. But if by adopting 3 per cent. interest it is proposed to lengthen the time of the bond, I am opposed to that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Having listened to much that was interesting in this debate, I ask leave to have read the amendment which I send

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 included between the word "hereby" in the fifteenth line to and including the word "issuing" in the twenty-fourth line, and insert the line to and including the word "Issuing" in the country following:

"Authorized to issue bonds not to exceed $450,000,000, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after ten years, and payable thirty years from date of issue; also notes in the amount of $250,000,000, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue, which notes it shall be lawful and national banks shall be permitted to hold as part of their legal reserve; and the interest on said bonds shall be 3 per cent. and the interest on said notes shall be 3‡ per cent."

Mr. NEWBERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, after listening with a great deal of interest to all that has been said on both sides of the House, upon all sides of the question, I have attempted in the amendment which has been read to cipher down in words what it strikes me is the prevailing condensed sentiment of this House in two or three particulars: First, it seems to be conceded that there should be a certain amount of bonds and a certain amount of notes; that these bonds should run for a time—ten years—when the option shall commence in which the Government may redeem up to thirty years; that the amount of those bonds shall be $450,000,000; that then the Government shall issue $250,000,000 of notes redeemable at two years from date and payable ten years from date.

Up to that point in the amendment I have said nothing about the rates, bearing in mind what the distinguished Speaker of the House said, that we had better settle upon one of those points first and then we could more easily arrive at a conclusion as to the other. After consultation it has been thought best to fix the amount first—not to consultation it has been thought best to fix the amount first—not to exceed $450,000,000 of bonds and $250,000,000 of notes; the bonds to run ten-thirties, the notes to be two-tens. Now if we can get a vote upon that, amending the amounts if you please, we can then come to

upon that, amending the amounts if you please, we can then come to the question of rate.

There is a difference of opinion as to what is the best rate of interest. The opinion of this House is quite manifest that on the longer bond we can get a lower interest. I therefore put in my amendment the rate of 3 per cent. on the bonds. On the notes I put, following the suggestion made near me here; a higher rate of interest, say 3½ per cent., but the Government has the right to take them up after two years under its option, and must pay them at the end of ten years. With that explanation of the amendment, I think it will appear that I have striven to embody the sense of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question, for his business experience entitles his judgment to great weight in this House and elsewhere. I would like to ask him whether there is in fact any value as to option on a 3 per cent. bond if it is in the power of the Government at all times to go into the open market and purchase such 3 per cent. bonds at par? To my mind, such power to purchase at par at all times is equivalent to option of redemption at any time.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I would answer the gentleman that a 3 per cent. bond would rarely rise above par.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then the difference between a proposed option to the Government to redeem even in future, and its power to purchase the bonds in open market at par, as you state a 3 per cent. bond would rarely rise above par, amounts to very little.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Without that option the holders of bonds could compel the Government to pay a premium when it seeks to buy. The Government to pay a premium when it seeks to buy. The Government to pay a premium when it seeks to buy.

Government, it will be noticed, is generally buyer of large amounts, running up to millions, and is the only large purchaser of these bonds. Therefore in giving the Government the option to buy at the end of the reference in giving the Government the option to buy at the end of ten years, you give a privilege which no ring or syndicate can possibly take advantage of.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not believe the power of the Government to go into the open market at any time and buy a 3 per cent. bond involves the extent of the option here attributed in the case of the notes to be negotiated.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAFLIN. The gentleman is largely acquainted with the money interests of the West, and particularly of Michigan. How many bonds does he think the banks of the State of Michigan would

Mr. NEWBERRY. I will guarantee that the Second National Bank, of which I am a director, will exchange all the bonds that the funding bill may require them to do to retain their present circulation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will that answer apply to all the

Mr. 10WhShERD, of links. Will that answer apply to all the trust funds of the West?

Mr. NEWBERRY. One at a time, if you please. I am asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] as to what will be done in Michigan. I believe the banks generally where they hold the 5 per cent. bonds—and there are two hundred millions of them the 5 per cent. bonds—and there are two hundred millions of them—will exchange the 5 per cent. bonds for the 3 per cent. bonds, provided you relieve them from the taxation on circulation. I think I have answered the question fairly.

Mr. CLAFLIN. You say if we take off the tax—
Mr. NEWBERRY. Wait a moment; this is a practical question. I have said what the bank of which I am a director will do under the funding bill if it passes, and to that extent I feel authorized to speak.

While recently in Detroit I want to experienced distinguished.

Funding bill if it passes, and to that extent I feel authorized to speak. While recently in Detroit I went to experienced, distinguished bankers and asked them to tell me, considering the state of business and the material interest of this the central or rather the principal city of Michigan, how in their opinion I ought to vote on that question. Their combined opinion, agreeing with my own, was that it would be best for the whole country that the 3 per cent. funding bill should pass rather than the credit of the country should run risk of injury by its failure.

of injury by its failure.

As to the bank above referred to, they had no doubt but it would take the circulation under the funding bill to the extent the law might require, and that was said without any condition as to taxa-

Mr. CLAFLIN. For how many years would the bank take those bonds

Mr. NEWBERRY. As long as they used any circulation. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. If I desired a long-time bond I would insist that the rate of interest should be settled first. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] is of the opinion, and he may be correct, that if we are to have a 20-40 bond we can negotiate it at 3 per contract. cent. Other gentlemen insist that if we make these bonds redeemable at any time after one year, we may still negotiate them at 3 per cent.; and so these gentlemen are found co-operating together to fix the rate of interest at 3 per cent. Then when we come to the question of time, other gentlemen, who are satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the satisfied that a bond redeemable of the contract by the cont tion of time, other gentlemen, who are satisfied that a bond redeemable after one year cannot be negotiated at 3 per cent, being anxious to refund this debt, will be driven to co-operate with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] and others who agree with him and make a long bond, or else fail entirely to pass any funding measure. I say, therefore, that if I wanted a long-time bond I would insist upon first settling the question as to the rate of interest. I believe that our true interest is not to fix this rate at 3 per cent., but to allow the Secretary of the Treasury some discretion. I recognize the fact that there is some other department of this Government besides the House of Representatives. I amnot over-eager totake all the responsibility upon my own party. I desire to put upon the Secretary of the Treasury the negotiation of these bonds, and I would limit the maximum rate of interest at 3½ per cent., and make the bonds redeem or the Treasury the negotiation of these bonds, and I would limit the maximum rate of interest at 3½ per cent., and make the bonds redeemable after one year. If it shall be found that we have made a mistake, then at the end of the year the bonds can be taken up, and it will be no very great matter after all.

I trust, therefore, that we will not accept the proposition of a 3 per cent bond. If any mistake shall be made, it will be entirely within the corrective power of Congress. I would give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to negotiate a bond at 3½ per cent. and keep those bonds within the option of the Government for redemption after one year.

after one year.

Mr. HURD. I rise to oppose any measure of refunding which shall deprive the Government of the United States of the option it now deprive the Government of the United States of the option it now possesses to redeem the bonds at any time, unless it shall be one which proposes new bonds with less rate of interest.

Let us understand distinctly this question. There are now due only $14,000,000 of bonds. There are 6 per cent. bonds to the amount of $200,000,000, not payable now, but redeemable at the option of the Government after a certain day of this year, and there are $470,000,000 of bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, not payable now, but redeemable at the option of the Government after the 1st of July, 1881. None of the debt is due to-day save $14,000,000. The rest is a debt redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, but not now payable.

My proposition is to pay the debt which is due, and also to redeem the six percents out of money which the Government will have during this fiscal year and out of the proceeds which may be realized from the sale of bonds which the Government still possesses the power to issue.

The Secretary of the Treasury says that on the 1st day of July, 1881, there will be fifty millions surplus revenue. I say there will be more than ninety millions, because the Secretary deducts the amount which than ninety millions, because the Secretary deducts the amount which is to be given to the sinking fund, and there is no sinking fund when we come to deal with the principal of the debt.

The receipts for the half year just ended show that there will be a surplus revenue exceeding ninety millions, in the neighborhood of one hundred and seven millions. There will then be that sum to be applied to the payment of the debt now due and to the redemption of the 6 per cent, bonds.

The Secretary of the Treasury has still the power to issue 4 per cent. bonds to the amount of one hundred and four millions. I would change that law so as to lessen the time for which the bonds shall run, and also to decrease the rate of interest. Out of the proceeds from bonds thus sold there may be realized enough, in addition to the surplus in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1881, to pay off all the 6 per cent indebtedness.

the 6 per cent. indebtedness.

We have then left four hundred and seventy millions of 5 per cent. We have then left four hundred and seventy millions of 5 per cent. bonds. I say without hesitation that as between the proposition of the Committee on Ways and Means and the proposition of the Secretary of the Treasury to have twenty-year bonds issued, and the proposition not to refund the debt at all, I would be in favor of letting the 5 per cent. bonds stand as they are. In the first place, a twenty-year bond at 3 per cent., or 3½ per cent., will cost the people of this country more than these 5 per cent. bonds, even supposing that they are not paid within ten years.

But they will be paid before ten years. The Secretary of the Treasury estimates that on the 1st day of July, 1882, there will be a surplus revenue of ninety millions. And I have no doubt that from that time on until the ten years shall have expired there will be a surplus revenue, and that there will be no difficulty in getting rid of all these 5 per cent. bonds within five or six years.

5 per cant. bonds within five or six years. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from

Mr. MILLS. I will take the noor and yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

Mr. HURD. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FORT. I would like to have some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] sought and obtained recognition from the Chair, after which he yielded his time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HURD. While I think there will be surplus revenue enough to pay off all these 5 per cent. bonds in a few years, I do not believe there will be surplus revenue as anticipated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Felton.]

I do not believe that this pretended prosperity of the country can long continue. I do not believe that prosperity in business in any country can long continue unless there is resumption of specie payments. And I confidently say, from all the information I have been able to gather on this subject, that the specie payments now claimed in this country is a delusion and a snare. It is based not upon specie honestly coined but upon false and fraudulent silver dollars which are in this country is a delusion and a snare. It is based not upon specie honestly coined, but upon false and fraudulent silver dollars which are untruthfully coined every day from the mint. [Applause on the republican side.] It is based upon legal-tender paper currency which has the power of discharging debts. Mr. Chairman, there can be no specie payment unless nothing but specie can pay debts. When you have a paper currency usurping all the functions of money, discharging all debts, you have no specie payments. In a little while this delusion as to specie payments will be dissipated, and then your prosperity will disappear and the husiness of the country will tonne into delusion as to specie payments will be dissipated, and then your prosperity will disappear and the business of the country will topple into a chasm of ruin such as has never been seen in this country before. But even though the surplus revenue should not be sufficient to pay these 5 per cent. bonds, they can be paid out of the funds required by law to be put into the sinking fund. The sinking fund, as the Secretary of the Treasury states, will in the next ten years amount to $520,000,000. The sinking fund is desired as a security for the payment of the principal of the debt; and when the principal is due it is absurd to talk about a sinking fund. Let the money which each year would otherwise go into the sinking fund go to the discharge of this debt, and in less than ten years I am sure the indebtedness will have been paid.

Mr. Chairman, if this theory of mine, that we should discharge these debts now when we can, is not to prevail, we shall have long-time bonds forced upon the country. The issue is whether we shall have long-time bonds or shall pay our debts when we can. For one I am in favor of paying our debts when we can.

in favor of paying our debts when we can.

There are two reasons why I am against these long-time bonds which have been proposed by the Ways and Means Committee. One is, that it will require the continuance of the sinking fund.

The payment of any part of the debt destroys, pro tanto, the necessity for a sinking fund. There is not an intelligent modern writer on finance who does not oppose a Government sinking fund, however it may be constituted. It leaves in the treasury large accumulations of money unused, which tempt to large appropriations. By these excessive accumulations, also, official integrity is tempted. When large amounts of money not needed for immediate expenditures are put under the control of any individual, the propensity of human nature is to spend that money. Under all governments a sinking fund has been shown to be a source of embarrassment and corruption in the administration of public affairs. administration of public affairs.

administration of public aliairs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] did not make a speech in favor of the silver dollar?

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I seldom address this House on any subject; and inasmuch as I intend to vote against the bill reported by the committee it is but due to myself and my constituents that I should state my reasons for so doing. I do not regard a national debt as a national blessing. I do not regard the indefinite continuance of the present banking system as paramount to the substantial debt as a national blessing. I do not regard the indefinite continuance of the present banking system as paramount to the substantial interests of the people. The perpetuation of a national debt, when we have he means at our disposal to discharge it, is undemocratic and unrepublican. England began her national debt in 1692, when Monague brought forward his bill for the loan of a million pounds. From that hour forward that debt has been steadily increasing, and to-day, according to the statement made by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] England never expects to pay it. In 1879 the debt of the British Empire amounted to £966,250,000, and during the present century that empire has paid more than two during the present century that empire has paid more than two thousand millions of pounds interest, and the debt has not been diminished. All the leading European governments have large debts, and in my judgment the principal of them will never be paid. Spain owes £500,000,000; Russia, £420,000,000; Austria, £386,000,000; Italy, £400,000,000. The reports from our consuls who represent our interests in those countries show us the condition of the toiling millions. Powerty and want are the prevailing features. Every man's industry Poverty and want are the prevailing features. Every man's industry, every man's farm is mortgaged to the moneyed interest of those countries; and nothing but a future revolution will rescue these people from the intolerable despotism of a money-grabbing aristocraey, who neither sew nor spin, but who live always and constantly on the sweat and labors of their fellows.

I am opposed to this scheme for many reasons, which are satisfactory to my own mind if not to others. This bill proposes for twenty years, possibly for forty, to exempt well nigh seven hundred millions of capital from State and municipal taxation and to transfer these burdens to the sweating foreheads and feverish hands of the toiling millions of this country

toiling millions of this country.

To fully understand the mischief of this bill, it is wise to consider the following facts. On the 31st of August, 1865, when our interest-bearing debt had reached its highest point, we owed $2,381,530,295; on the 1st of July, 1880, we owed $1,723,993,100. In fifteen years we have paid $657,537,195. In addition to this, it is well enough for us to consider the amount of non-interest-bearing debt which we have paid. In 1874 our non-interest-bearing debt amounted to $515,000,000;

July 1, 1880, it amounted to $388,500,000. It appears, then, that during fifteen years we have reduced our indebtedness $784,037,195; and during all this time we were paying a large rate of interest on the great bulk of this indebtedness. It is now proposed to tax the agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial interests of the people for twenty and possibly for forty years in order to perpetuate a debt which, in round numbers, I shall fix at $700,000,000; and as an inducement we are told that we can borrow this money at 3 per cent. Interest. Suppose we refused to refund and continued to pay 6 per cent., what harm will come to the country? come to the country?

In his last annual report the Secretary of the Treasury estimated that the surplus revenues for the current fiscal year would be $90,-000,000. The correspondent of the New York Times, Mr. Carson, a most careful and painstaking gentleman, fixes it at $95,000,000. If this surplus revenue continues for eight years we could pay this debt during that time even at 6 per cent. interest, and gain by that operation over $235,000,000. The first year we would pay in interest $42,000,000, the second year $36,600,000, the third year $31,200,000, the fourth year $25,800,000, the fifth year $20,400,000, the sixth year $15,000,000, the seventh year $9,600,000, the eighth year $4,200,000. The total amount of interest paid would be $184,800,000, and the debt would be extinguished.

Now, suppose we refund at 3 per cent. for twenty years, the minimum term proposed, what amount of interest will we pay? It will be twenty-one millions a year, or $420,000,000 in the twenty years, and thus the principal of the debt will remain undischarged. Under the6 per cent. or non-funding plan we will have paid $8.4,800,000, and extinguished the debt. Under the proposition to refund in a 20-40 bond we will pay at 3 per cent. $420,000,000, and the principal will remain unsatisfied. Under the first plan we pay $84,800,000; under the proposed plan we pay $1,120,000,000. In other words, for allowing the bondholders to enjoy $700,000,000 of capital untaxed we pay them a bounty of $255,000,000. In my judgment this is a scheme of gross oppression. gross oppression.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to a few other matters. During the month of December the reduction of the public debt was $5,699,431, and for six months nearly $43,000,000. There has been an enormous increase in the public revenues during the year, as appears from the following exhibit:

Source of revenue.	1880.	1879.
Customs	$200, 133, 133 131, 240, 466 28, 117, 141	$153, 448, 844 116, 617, 597 23, 487, 490
Total	359, 496, 740	293, 553, 931

By these figures the aggregate receipts for the calendar year 1880 exceed those of 1879 about sixty-six millions. And yet, with these facts of a marvelous increase staring us in the face, we are asked to enter into a contract whereby our right to pay the national debt shall be taken away from us for twenty and probably forty years. Such a policy is a crime against the interests of the people; and any party that tolerates it will suffer in the popular judgment.

There have been some peculiar features attending this debate. I was not surprised at the speech of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.] He has gone wild on the gold standard theory, and every session denounces every one who favors the silver coinage as a thief and a robber. Blinded by his rage against all money save that preferred by the Wall street sharks, he overlooks the fact that silver was the coin of this country before the Constitution was adopted. It was the coin of all the States during the Confederation. Each State reserved the right to regulate the value of foreign coin, though the States gave to the Confederation the right to regulate the value of their own if nine States agreed to it. There being a want of uniformity in the coinage of the States and a want of uniformity in the value of foreign coins, when the States came to adopt the Federal uniformity in the coinage of the States and a want of uniformity in the value of foreign coins, when the States came to adopt the Federal Constitution they relinquished their right to coin money to the General Government. In doing so they never contemplated that silver, which as a coin had antedated the Constitution, would cease to be money, for they reserved to themselves the right to make gold and silver coin a legal tender for all debts. Both were money, and the only power that the States parted with was the power to coin this money and make it a legal tender. They did not give to Congress the right to take away its legal-tender quality.

In 1869, at the bidding of the bondholders of this country and Europe, we passed the public credit act, by which we made our bonds payable in coin or its equivalent. This inured to their advantage. When we funded our debt under a provision allowing it to be paid in coin or its equivalent, we were told that the word "coin" meant gold and not silver; and Eastern statesmen labored long and arduously in the Senate to convince the people that coin meant gold and did not include silver. If any man doubts this, I refer him to the only in the Senate to convince the people that coin meant gold and did not include silver. If any man doubts this, I refer him to the speech of Senator Edmunds on the resolutions introduced by Senator Matthews, of Ohio. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] says that he is a simple merchant and not a lawyer, and that he can not communicate his views in apt phrase to the House. The gentleman seems to be an adept and expert on the gold-standard theory; and he is to be pitied if he does not understand that the word "coin" means that which may be coined into money. The act of 1837 provided for the coinage of the silver dollar. Under this act existed the vided for the coinage of the silver dollar. Under this act existed the right to coin it. We might coin it in greater or less quantities, but the right to coin it continues while the act remains in force. If the Government contracts a debt, while the right to coin silver exists, which is payable in coin, then even a simple merchant should know that payment can lawfully be made in any coin which the Government has the right to coin or issue. A wayfaring man though a fool could understand that, if he were actuated by honest purposes. But this gentleman proposes to stop the coinage of silver, to destroy the greenback, and to hand us over to the bankers and robbers of the country; and because we will not march to his music we are "obnoxious to the charge of dishonesty." The republican party cannot afford to follow his leadership, unless it is willing to surrender the Western States.

I for one am opposed to retiring the greenbacks; and I wish to call the attention of the House to a few facts of recent date that should not be forgotten. On the 29th of April, 1878, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Forr] moved to suspend the rules and pass the follow-

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes; and that when any of said notes may be received into the Treasury under any law from any source whatever and shall belong to the United States they shall not be retired and canceled or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation. (See RECORD, Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, part 3, page 2928.)

This bill passed by a vote of 177 to 35. When the bill reached the Senate, Mr. BAYARD, a gold-standard man, offered an amendment, as Provided, That the said notes when received shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, excepting duties on imports, and not to be otherwise a legal tender; and any reprint of these notes shall bear this superscription.

The amendment was defeated by a vote of 18 to 42. (Record, Fortyfifth Congress, vol. 7, pages 4 and 3868.) The bill was passed without amendment by a vote of 41 to 18. In view of this act, so recently passed by both branches of Congress, I am unwilling to forego and abandon the pronounced views of the republicans as expressed in the Forty-fifth Congress, even at the bidding of the gentleman in whose view everything turns to gold.

And, now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to give the republicans from the East a word of friendly advice. Silver-mining is one of the chief industries in this country. Millions of dollars are invested in it, and we people who live among the mines have become wearied at this incessant war waged against us by such gentlemen as the Representative of the Brooklyn district.

If it is right to protect the iron interest in Pennsylvania, why is it not right to protect the silver interest of Colorado? If it is right to protect the copper of Michigan, the sugar of Louisiana, the shipping interest of Maine, why is it wrong to extend a friendly hand to our great industry in the new West?

These are facts for eastern members to consider; silver is the money These are facts for eastern members to consider; silver is the money of the people, gold the money of the bankers. I stand for the rights of my people as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] stands for the rights of his. You ask me to protect pig-iron. I ask you to protect silver. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Congen] asks me to protect copper. I ask him to extend a friendly glance to silver. Refuse us this demand, which is in your power to do, and I will say to you that the time will shortly come when the toiling millions who are bringing their treasures from the mountains to fill your eastern coffers, only to have such treasures discredited and disgraced at the hidding of the hondholders and gold-hugs will rebel against your coffers, only to have such treasures discredited and disgraced at the bidding of the bondholders and gold-bugs, will rebel against your pretensions and will seek new alliances under a new banner where pretensions and will seek new alliances under a new banner where their rights will receive recognition. They will, in my judgment, be mortgaged neither to the banker nor the bondholder. We will insist that the Secretary of the Treasury, executing a law which provides that our national indebtedness shall be paid in coin, shall discharge it in silver as well as gold. Silver is the money of the Constitution, and we insist that it shall be respected. We know that if the legal-tender quality of the greenback is destroyed the banks will refuse to receive it on deposit, as they threaten to refuse silver. We are not ready to acknowledge the sovereign whose head is of gold and whose feet are of iron, because this sovereign meant mischief in biblical days to God's honest poor. Neither the gold head furnished by New York nor the iron feet furnished by Pennsylvania will deter us from our purpose. We propose to have the currency of the Constitution, gold and silver and paper, convertible into coin under the republican banner, or under that of some other party which has at least a decent respect for the rights of man. [Laughter and applause.]

ginia, and Mr. FORT successively obtained the noor, and each yielded five minutes to Mr. Belford.]

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, there are two questions presented in this bill. One is a question as to the time the bonds should run, the other as to the rate of interest that should be paid. The more important of the two, in my judgment, is that relating to the time the bonds should run. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Speaker of this House, that one thing should be settled at a time. We have the right to fix the time the bonds shall run. We have complete control of that question; but we cannot fix the rate of interest which we must pay. The rate of interest will be fixed by the money market, and not by Congress. We should first determine how long our bonds should run, which we ascertain by our prospective revenues, our prosperity, and ability to pay. The first thing to settle is how long we expect to borrow money, and then we must pay whatever interest we have to pay, be it 3 per cent. or more. The moneymarket will fix it in spite of anything we can do here.

For my part I am in favor of a reasonably short time, even if we have to pay a little higher rate of interest. We can certainly pay this debt soon in view of what we have been paying, what means we have now on hand and what we may reasonably expect to receive in the near future. I am in favor of paying our debt, and not making it perpetual. Debt is no blessing to such a people as we are. Dr. Franklin said, "He who goes borrowing goes sorrowing." We had in the Treasury, Mr. Chairman, on the 3d day of this month more than $200,000,000 of coin and bullion; $61,481,244.71 in gold coin, $95,260,851.05 in gold bullion, $48,190,518 standard silver dollars, $24,769,057.32 fractional silver coin, and $6,183,224.05 silver bullion, making in all $235,884,895.14 in the Treasury all in hard cash. It is true it was not all subject to order, but there was on that day $156,000,000 and more of gold coin and bullion every dollar and ounce of which was subject to order to meet liabilities already accrued and to accrue. And as to silver, I wish to correct a statement I made day before yesterday, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] had the floor, in reference to the amount of silver dollars in the Treasury. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] asked the gentleman from Iowa how much of this $48,000,000 was in the Treasury. The answer was made by the gentleman from Iowa that he understood it was nearly all there. I know he desires to be correct, and certainly does not interposed a remark that about $19,000,000 of it was represented by certificates of deposits, which I understood for this month before me, which is as follows:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, D. C., January 3, 1881.

It appears from this statement that in round numbers there were forty-eight millions of silver dollars in the Treasury, and further, that $45,000,000 of that $48,000,000 was represented by silver certificates of deposit and floating among the people in that shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am willing to yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois if I can be heard when he has concluded what he has to

Mr. FORT. I only wish a minute or two more, and I will then yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi, who so kindly yields yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi, who so kindly yields to me.

Mr. Chairman, there are in round numbers $45,000,000 of silver certificates in circulation, $9,000,000 of which have found their way back into the Treasury, so that to-day there are $36,127,711 of silver certificates still in circulation, and there are but 12,062,807 of silver dollars in the Treasury subject to order.

Some of our friends complain that silver will not circulate, and that it is hoarded in the Treasury. Now, why do they not complain that gold will not circulate and that it is hoarded in the Treasury. There was in the Treasury on the 3d of this month $156,741,095.77 in gold coin and bullion, and only $12,062,807 in silver; and if my friend from New York now before me [Mr. Chittenden] should go to the Treasury with his draft for $13,000,000 and desire silver dollars he could not get them, because they are not there. They are out circulating in shape of silver certificates among the people.

I merely wish to state this in order to correct myself, and to correct the gentleman from Iowa, and to correct especially the impression which is abroad that silver does not circulate, and is hoarded, which is not the fact. I wish I had time to reply to some of the extreme statements just made by the gentleman from Ohio. It is quite possible that the weight of the silver dollar will have to be readjusted when the other great commercial nations get ready to join us, but let us proceed cantiously, so that we may not have to retrace our steps in this regard. The President-elect wisely stated in his letter of acceptance of the republican nomination that "the great prosperity which the country is now enjoying should not be endangered by any violent changes or doubtful financial experiments." This is the true policy.

I am obliged to the gentleman from Mississippi for his kindness.

the true policy.

I am obliged to the gentleman from Mississippi for his kindness, and yield the floor back to him.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, we have a debt of about six hundred and seventy million dollars which it is constantly said matures in 1881, but which in truth only becomes payable then if we choose to pay. Of this debt about two hundred millions bear 6 per cent., and about four hundred and seventy millions 5 per cent. interest, and we are asked to refund this debt, in order to save interest, into bonds bearing 3 per cent.; some say into bonds having many years to run, and others say into Treasury notes payable in twelve years. Whether we shall refund this debt or not involves two questions: one a mere question of dollars and cents, and the other a grave question of governmental science.

The first question depends upon the fact which no man has yet affirmed or can affirm, whether we can borrow money at 3 per cent. or not. But for the sake of the argument I am willing to admit that or not. But for the sake of the argument I am willing to admit that we can borrow money at 3 per cent. even on Treasury notes payable in from two to twelve years, and yet I am not convinced that we can save any money by the operation. If it be true, as asserted, that we can by a proper application of the coin now in the Treasury and our annual surplus revenue pay off this debt in six years, there will be but little difference between paying 6 and 5 per cent. for six years or 3 per cent. for twelve years. Governments are like individuals, and a debt postponed is too often regarded as a debt discharged, and the money which would pay the debt is liable to be used for other and perhaps unnecessary purposes. I am opposed, therefore, to any postponement of the debt and any diversion of our funds on hand or our surplus revenues from its payment. I believe there is more certainty surplus revenues from its payment. I believe there is more certainty in its discharge and more economy in attempting to pay the debt as it stands than in attempting to refund it in any manner whatever. Again, I am opposed to refunding this debt because it will change the contract.

These bonds are now payable, both principal and interest, in silver, and if we change the contract we may lose the advantage and may bind ourselves to pay them in gold. I listened with pleasure and also with profit to the learned and exhaustive argument on this bill from the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Warner,] but I had one very serious objection to his speech.

He said these bonds were by the letter of the contract payable either in silver or gold—412½ grains of one metal to the dollar, and 25.8 grains of the other. This proposition I deny. I deny that there was any such double meaning to the world dollar when these bonds were issued, and I defy any man to show it. The word dollar controls all of our contracts, and this word depends for its meaning upon the definition given to it by law. There is no such thing as a dollar of commerce or a dollar of the world. There is a Spanish dollar and an American dollar, both of which are defined by law and dependent entirely upon law for their meaning. The promises in these bonds are promises to pay dollars in coin of its then standard value, and it was the duty of those who took these bonds, if they did not know, to examine the statutes of the United States and learn what was meant by this word dollar. If they had examined the law, or if the gentleby this word dollar. If they had examined the law, or if the gentle-men of this House will now examine it, they will find nowhere from 1792 to 1873 any statute defining a dollar to be 25.8 grains of gold. There was not during all that time, and there was not when these bonds were issued, any definition of the word dollar except in grains of silver.

In 1849, when for the first time a gold dollar was authorized to be coined, the statute said a gold dollar shall be coined of the value of a dollar. The first coinage act of 1792 defined a dollar to be 371½ grains of pure, or 416½ grains standard silver. The act of 1837 reduced the amount of alloy, making it 412½ grains of standard silver, and that was the definition and the only definition of the word dollar at the time when the gold dollar was first authorized to be coined and when these bonds were issued. That then was the dollar of the contract and the is the only dollar these bondholders could collect if contract and that is the only dollar these bondholders could collect if contract and that is the only dollar these bondholders could collect if they were suing on these bonds in a court of law.

But we have been told that the silver dollar is a dishonest dollar and that it is worth but eighty-seven cents. In our coinage the cent is a copper piece, and I might reply by saying that the bullion value of a cent is about the eight-hundredth part of a silver dollar. Or I might say that in legal contemplation the cent is always the one-hundredth part of a dollar, and therefore it is absurd to speak of a dollar as worth but eighty-seven cents. But I know that gentlemen who use this language mean that 412½ grains of silver in bullion value is only worth eighty-seven cents if 25.8 grains of gold be the standard of value for a dollar.

And this brings us to the most serious question in this matter of our coinage. The dollar is our unit of value, and while I am in favor of bimetalism in our coinage, I am opposed to a double standard of value. Gold and silver vary in their relative value, and one must be the standard to measure the value of the other. From 1792 to 1873 silver was the standard by which we measured gold, and in 1834 and value. Gold and silver vary in their relative value, and one must be the standard to measure the value of the other. From 1792 to 1873 silver was the standard by which we measured gold, and in 1834 and 1837, when we found that 270 grains of gold which composed the eagle was more than of the value of ten silver dollars, we said 258 grains of gold should be an eagle. But in 1873, for the first time, 25.8 grains of gold was defined to be a dollar, and the unit of value. This statute stopped the coinage of silver dollars, but it did not repeal the statute which said 412½ grains of silver should be a dollar and the unit of value, so that then, for the first time, we had a double standard, although for a term we had no silver coinage. In 1878 we reauthorized the silver coinage, and now we have both bimetalism and a double standard. These bonds, as I have said, were issued when we had the single silver standard, and if we refund them now we may subject ourselves to pay in gold. Our friend from New York [Mr. Chittender] tells us the silver dollar is worth thirteen cents less than the gold dollar, and if this is so, and we pay in gold a debt that is payable in silver, we lose thirteen cents on every dollar, and about eighty-seven millions in the payment of these bonds. The people of the United States have been swindled enough in the refunding of our debt, and I hope no more such frauds will be practiced upon them. We lost millions by refunding the bonds payable in greenbacks into bonds payable in coin, and we will lose millions more if we refund bonds payable in silver into bonds payable in gold. If we were out of debt we might select any standard we chose, and if we were the creditor nation of the world we might select that metal which has most frequently enhanced in value and is likely in future to be the most valuable; but we are a debtor people and good faith requires that we should preserve, as nearly as possible, our laws as they stood when our debts were contracted. For at last all coins, whatever may be their bu whatever may be their bullion value, are made legal-tender money only by law. The bullion value of one hundred copper cents is about twelve cents, and yet their money value, when coined, is one dollar. The bullion value of one hundred nickles is about seventy-five cents, and yet their money value is five dollars, and hence it is not strange that the bullion value of 412½ grains of silver should be eighty-seven cents in gold, while its money value by law is one dollar.

In London, in the great crisis of 1847, not a pound of English money could be borrowed on a deposit of £60,000 of silver, because silver was not a legal tender above thirty shillings. In Calcutta, in 1864, not a rupee could be borrowed on £20,000 of gold, because gold was not a legal tender for any amount in India. The American dollar, whether of gold or silver, is not a legal tender in foreign countries, and can therefore only pass for its bullion value. Hence it makes no difference whether we put four hundred or five hundred grains of silver in what we call a dollar, it will only pass at last for its bullion value abroad. On the other hand, if the money value of our coin exceeds its bullion value, it will stay at home, and we will run no risk of being paid in our light-weight dollars by our foreign debtors, for they will have none of them to pay with.

It is true that "the extent of international trade generally depends upon the means available to liquidate balances," and to this extent it is necessary to consider the demands of the commercial world. If we consider the world by the number of its inhabitants far the greater number receive silver as money.

Nations in which silver is the only full legal-tender money.

Nations in which silver is the only full legal-tender money.

The nations which make silver the standard of payment and the money of account, are Russia, Austria, Mexico, Central America, Ecuador, Peru, China, and British India. These nations number about eight hundred millions of souls, being a large majority of the human race. If we make our money to correspond with that of Great Britain, compared with that of these nations, the former has 32,000,000 of people, the latter had 800,000,000 of people.

Nations which make both gold and silver coin full legal-tender money at 15½ or 16 to 1. The United States, Greece, Roumania, Colombia, Venezuela, Chili, Urugnay, Paraguay, Japan, Holland, France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, and Spain; the population of these countries amounts to 187,000,000, which added to 800,000,000 make 987,000,000 people, all of whom make silver full legal-tender money, without regard to the few nations which have demonstrated it. Nations which have demonetized silver.

The nations which have made gold the only full legal-tender money are Great Britain, some of her colonies, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Portugal, which number about 100,000,000 people.

If we consider the world in its commercial relation with us we must If we consider the world in its commercial relation with us we must give great heed to the demands of England, which is the commercial and monetary center of the world. But looking to either I cannot see what advantage it would be to us to change the definition of our word dollar by adding more grains of silver to it. If we owe a debt to England, it will be expressed either in dollars or in pounds, shillings, and pence, usually denominated sterling money. If our debt is payable in dollars, we pay according to our own definition of the word; if in sterling money, we pay in the bullion value of our coin, and it is immaterial in this case what value we stamp on our coin. So and it is immaterial in this case what value we stamp on our coin. So at last it is a question for us and not for other people to determine what shall constitute the American dollar. The great advantage of foreign trade consists in the exchange of exports; money is only essential to settle the balance of accounts. If the balance is in our favor, we are paid in silver or gold coins of other nations at their bullion value; if the balance is against us with a silver-money country like India, we pay in silver at its bullion value; if the balance is against us with England, we must pay in gold at its bullion value and not its stamped value. The addition of 100 grains to our silver dollar would not make it pass as money in England or any gold-money country, and we rate silver lower now than any silver-money nation. It is therefore ridiculous to talk of adding more silver to our dollar to meet the demand of the commercial world. We can only conform to what are called the demands of the gold-standard commercial world by demonetizing silver entirely. But we are the greatest silver-producing country of the world, and we cannot afford to strike it from our coinage.

We should in fact repeal the definition of a dollar in gold and re-store silver to its former position as our standard of value, and if this should for a time drive gold coin from our country it would not place should for a time drive gold coin from our country it would not place us in as bad a situation financially as we now are. We now rate silver at 16 to 1 of gold, which is a lower ratio than is adopted by any other nation of the world. If we should adopt silver and discard gold entirely as money, it would increase the value of our silver. But we have adopted both as money, and I am opposed to increasing the value of either metal by discarding the other. Justice to ourselves demands that we should restore our coinage laws exactly as they were when these debts were contracted, and good faith to our creditors can demand no more; and justice to our posterity, to whom we propose to leave the legacy of our debts, demands that they should not be required to pay a dollar heavier in weight or more precious in metal than their fathers promised to pay.

A distinguished writer has said, "Abraham Lincoln described the Government of the United States as one of the people, by the people, and for the people," but his successors have perverted it into one "of the bondholder, by the bondholder, and for the bondholder." During our late canvass for President the public were amused and deluded by the payment of the debt at the rate of from six to eleven millions per month, and by their votes they indorsed this rapid cancellation of month, and by their votes they indorsed this rapid cancellation of their bonds. Now that the election is over, and the offices secured for another four years, the payment ceases and we are asked to refund at long time.

But, Mr. Chairman, I pass from the question of dollars and cents to the question of governmental science.

A postponement of the debt may lead to its perpetuation. The moment the pressure of payment is taken from us we will hear loud demands for fortifications and military preparation on our sea-coast, and at the same time a demand for large expenditures on our Navy, and our surplus revenues will not only be absorbed but perhaps further indebtedness incurred, and when our debts again fall due we will be compelled again to extend them.

But, sir, there is another and most serious objection to refunding this debt. The democratic party has been denouncing the republicans for creating a bomb-proof sanctuary for the investments of capitalists, where they would pay no taxes, and now a democratic Congress is talking about doing the same thing. When money is growing scarce in trade and when all classes of industries are laboring under heavy loads of taxation a democratic Congress is talking about again by increase the Congressis talking about again by increase the Congressis talking about again neavy loads of taxation a democratic Congress is taking about again bringing the Government into the market as a borrower to compete with its citizens, and, worse still, are talking about creating six hundred and seventy millions of property that shall pay no taxes.

Sir, there are a thousand industries in every part of this broad land only awaiting the quickening influence of capital to spring up, and yet a democratic House is talking about offering inducements to bankers to hide their money in Government bonds. I have seen the demoralization of defeat on many fields. I have seen cannoniers the demoralization of defeat on many fields. I have seen cannoniers cutting loose their horses; I have seen infantry in flight throwing away their arms, and I have seen hatless horsemen in wild retreat; but, sir, if a democratic House shall change bonds payable in silver into bonds payable in gold, and shall create six hundred and seventy millions of wealth to bear no share in the burden of taxation, I shall confess that I have never seen demoralization before. I am opposed, sir, to any refunding whatever. I shall vote to amend the bill as far as I can, and then I shall vote against it when amended

There are three classes who favor a perpetuation of our debt: the protectionist, who desires an excuse for a high protective tariff; the national banker, whose existence depends on a national debt; and the centralizer, who believes a national debt a national blessing. To each and all of these I am utterly opposed, and hence I oppose this bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] made a remark to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. He stated that undoubtedly a 3 per cent. Treasury note or bond could be issued at par, provided we would permit that note to be made a circulating medium, for we take such notes now without any interest. He objected to issuing such a note; he preferred that this Government should pay a higher rate of interest rather than to allow the debt to be used as money. He would compel the people to pay for being deprived of the nse of their debt as a medium of exchange. I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this Government has made between thirty and forty issues of Treasury notes and that such as have been non-interest-bearing, both before and during the late war, have been eagerly taken by the people, much more so indeed than interest-bearing bonds. The value of the note as money is greater than as a bond. The only reason why we attach one cent of interest to Treasury notes is because we are governed by the interests of bankers and usurers rather than by the interests of the people.

The national banks of this country, Wall street and Lombard street, have been stalking in here from the hour we met until this minute. Almost every speaker has advised us what his banker wants or what he thinks. The very chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has read a letter from a leading banker in his district or in the city of New York upon this question. One gentleman after another has stated what would be satisfactory to the national banks; and, to his eternal shame be it said, one gentleman stated to the committee that he is under instructions from a national bank.

Lest I do the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] injustice, I quote his language as tak

I say what the bank of which I am a director authorized me to say; because I went to them to say how I should vote on that question.

Shame on a Congress that receives its instructions from its creatures. Shame, eternal shame! This is not a question, if we are to judge from this debate, as to what the people themselves want, but a question as to what the corporations, the syndicates of this coun-a question as to what the corporations, the syndicates of this country, want.

What do the people want? I will tell you what, and I defy any man in any party to dispute my word. The people of this country want a Treasury note that can circulate as money. They want a note that can be used in their business from day to day, and if you will issue such a note you can pay off all the bonds that become redeemable this year without violating any contract, but with the sanction of the bondholders. Experience proves, if it proves anything, that rather than take offered coin for their bonds the holders will prefer non-interest hearing Treasury notes.

prefer non-interest bearing Treasury notes.

In the face of the fact that such a money famine exists in this country as to have recently, within one month, forced rates of interest upon call in New York city to over 300 per cent. per annum, we are asked to issue Treasury notes bearing interest enough to prevent their new convents.

their use as money. The leading papers of New York are already predicting a great panic, for want of sufficient money. I clip from the New York finan-cial report of the American, of Philadelphia, December 25, this state-

Nothing but the fact that the manipulators of the market were unable to cart the gold through the streets for the purpose of locking it up has saved us from a Wall-street panic. Had the bank reserves been in greenbacks a single messenger might have transferred a sufficient sum in the course of an hour to a private vault to have done more mischief than six months' prosperity could have corrected.

The business of the whole country rests upon a volcano.

The gamblers and bankers of New York were only prevented from inflicting greater woe than six months of prosperity could overcome because of the inconvenience of handling coin. In the mean time members of this House are so fearful that the people will use Treasury notes and have enough to transact their business without regard to stock gambling operations in New York that it is proposed to load them does not be supposed to load them. them down with interest enough to insure their being locked up in

Now I ask you whether you will pass a bill in the interest of corporations and bankers or pass a bill in the interest of the people. I have had the honor of introducing a substitute bill, such as I think the people want; a bill that I believe to be in their interest; and I ask for it the candid consideration of all members.

ask for it the candid consideration of all members.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I believe there are no other gentlemen who desire to address the committee. I propose we shall now take a vote, and that then the committee shall rise.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to address the committee.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I should suppose that this debate, so far as the question of rate is converged and nearly as to the question of

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I should suppose that this debate, so far as the question of rate is concerned, and nearly as to the question of time, has been pretty well exhausted, and that gentlemen have about made up their minds. I propose, therefore, to take a vote so far as it may reach my amendment, and then to move that the committee mittee to rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the flower to close debate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. By unanimous consent that can be avoided. I assume that debate on the amendment has now exhausted itself, and we are ready to take a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to move that the committee rise?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. No, sir; I desire the committee to come

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a vote be now taken on the pending amendments.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of asking the House to limit the debate on all the amendments now pending.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Oh, no; only on this amendment.

Mr. McLANE. I ask the gentleman from New York to give way till I offer an amendment which I desire to have printed in the Rec-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland can submit in the House his amendment for printing in the RECORD. The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the refunding bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the present amendment and amendments thereto that all debate on the present amendment and amendments thereto be limited to five minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Say one minute.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Well, I will say one minute.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pending which he moves that when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumes the consideration of the refunding bill, all debate on the pending amendments he confined to one minute.

consideration of the refunding bill, all debate on the pending amendments be confined to one minute.

Mr. CLAFLIN. On the amendment and amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. On all pending amendments. The House cannot preclude the offering of amendments in Committee of the Whole. And pending the motion of the gentleman from New York the gentleman from Iowa moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the present rule it is competent for the House to close debate on the whole section or paragraph if the House shall see fit shall see fit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Chair stated, in reply to the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Claf-Lin.] that the House could not cut off future amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Not amendments; but the House could cut off debate on amendments to be offered to the section.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McLane. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw the motion for a moment that I may give notice of an amendment which I desire to have printed in the Record.

Mr. Weaver. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McLane. I give notice that at the proper time I will offer the following amendment as a substitute for the first section of the bill:

the following amendment as a substitute for the first section of the bill:

Be it enacted, &c., That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt." and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds or Treasury certificates of denomination of not less than $10, in amount not exceeding $637,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of not exceeding 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after one year, and payable in ten years; but not more than $100,000,000 of said bonds or certificates shall be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and certificates shall be, in all respects, except as herein otherwise provided, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, but the Secretary my, at his discretion, make the interest on the certificates herein authorized payable annually: Provided. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange, at not less than par, any of the bonds or certifiates herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ the certificates and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent.: Provided, That said certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par.

From and after the passage of this act, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be receivable as security for national-bank circulation. That this act shall be known as "The funding act of 1881;" and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. WEAVER. I now renew the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there wereayes 81, noes 90.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for tellers.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois, were appointed.

The tellers having taken their places, no members came forward to be counted in the affirmative.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to withdraw the demand for tellers. The time will be taken up anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia can withdraw the demand for tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays. The Chair presumes the House now wants to vote on the question of adjournment by tellers, and not by yeas and nays, and save time.

The tellers reported ayes none; noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The vote will now be taken by the tellers on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 33.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed by consent the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYNE. The Chair supposed by consent the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. BAYNE. When?

The SPEAKER. A few moments ago.

Mr. BAYNE. The demand for the yeas and nays was sustained some time ago by 36 affirmative votes.

The SPEAKER. Was not that the vote on ordering tellers?

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. HAZELTON. I submit it is too late to raise that point now.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] demanded the yeas and nays and the Speaker decided the yeas and nays were ordered by a rising vote of the House. Thereupon the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays, and the vote was taken by tellers and the demand failed.

Mr. BAYNE. There was no vote taken upon that by tellers, because nobody voted. The gentleman from Georgia withdrew the demand for the vote by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The House appeared to change its mind as to the mode of voting on the motion to adjourn, whether by yeas and nays or by tellers, and decided to rescind what was its former intervening action and vote on the motion to adjourn by tellers, which it has done.

Mr. BAYNE. World it now be the right of one fifth of the mem-

Mr. BAYNE. Would it now be the right of one-fifth of the members present to have the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands, as is his right, that another opportunity be given him to test the sense of the House on taking the vote on the motion to adjourn by yeas and nays. The Chair will give him that opportunity.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 10, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, Mr. WELLS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WELLS. I desire to give notice that on Monday next I shall endeavor to obtain action of the House upon the bill I have just reported.

reported.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. JONES. I have been unable to obtain an opportunity to-day to submit some remarks on the funding bill. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates some remarks prepared by me on that subject.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See CLAIMS ALLOWED BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Appendix.]

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TENTH CENSUS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Super-intendent of the Census, asking an additional appropriation of $500,000 for completing the tenth census; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RECRUITING THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, concerning an estimate for recruiting the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LAND-TITLE DIVISION, WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the creation of a land-title division in the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PENSION OFFICE BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to a renewal of the lease of the build-ing occupied by the Pension Office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REMOVAL OF SNOW IN WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an additional appropriation for the removal of snow in Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REINSTATEMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition on the subject of reinstatement of officers in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE WILLAMETTE VALLEY AND CASCADE MOUNTAIN WAGON-ROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers relative to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain military wagon-road in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE HARPER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian-depredation claim of George Harper; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ANNIE J. ELLIOTT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian-depredation claim of Annie J. Elliott; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

JOHN ELLIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian-depredation claim of John Ellis; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DEPUTY COLLECTORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an amendment to section 2633 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

INTERCHANGE OF DOCUMENTS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND FRANCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution relative to the interchange of documents between this Government and the Republic of France; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

WAR DEPARTMENT LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the binding of books in the War Department Library; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communications; which were severally referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of Portland Harbor;

A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the Louisville and Portland Canal;
A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers;
A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the breakwater near the city of Calais:

the city of Calais;

A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of Minton Point, Illinois;

A letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the survey of Coan-jock Bay;

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of work on Connecticut River; A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report on the survey of the Savannah, Salkiehatchie, and Edisto Rivers; and A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the survey of the Snake, Upper Red, and Minnesota Rivers.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. A. HERR SMITH asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mrs. Charlotte Andrews, widow of J. J. Andrews, late of Company H, One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying for a pension; no adverse report.

ABUSE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. There is upon the Speaker's table another communication from the Postmaster-General, touching a matter which has been the occasion of some dispute here. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] in his seat.

Mr. KEIFER. If that communication is now submitted, I ask that it be read.

Mr. HATCH. I object to the reading of it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio assumes to represent the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair will present the communica-

Mr. KEIFER. I ask that it be read. Mr. WARNER. Let it be printed and referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. KEIFER. And read also.
Mr. HATCH. If this proceeding requires unanimous consent, I object.

The SPEAKER. The communication can be reached by a motion to go to the Speaker's table. This is the first paper that would be reached.

Mr. HATCH and others. Regular order!
The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from

Mr. KEIFER. I simply desired to carry out the wish of the gentle-man from Indiana, that when the communication is presented it should be read.

Mr. HATCH. I insist on the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] loses none of his rights.
Mr. KEIFER. I see no reason why the paper should not be submitted.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to its coming in now; and, as the Chair has stated, it can be reached by a motion to go to the Speaker's table whenever that motion be in order.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that motion in order now?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order pending an affirmative vote of the House on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed not. The communication will have to go over for the present. I would myself be willing to allow it to be referred and printed; or if it could be printed in the RECORD, that would be satisfactory. would be satisfactory.

Mr. BLOUNT. It might be referred and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. I would have no objection to that. Mr. HATCH. I call for the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Morrison obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Superintendent of the Census asking for an additional appropriation for the completion of the tenth census; which was referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting recommendations of the First Assistant Postmaster-General in regard to changes of laws affecting the Post-Office Department, and asking that it be made a part of his letter of the 5th instant; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief of Engineers reporting the inadequacy of the appropriation for removing snow and ice, owing to the unusual severity of the season, and recommending an additional appropriation of $2,000 for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the clerk in charge of the War Department Library calling attention to the act of June 30, 1878, and recommending that it be amended so as to except the library of the War Department and thereby place it on the same footing as the Congressional Library and the libraries of the Department of State, the Patent Office, and the Surgeon-General's Office; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copies of certain papers and correspondence.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copies of certain papers and correspondence relating to the lands granted to the State of Oregon and conferred by that State upon the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company; which was referred to the Committee on Mil-

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which were referred Senate bill No. 400 and Senate bill No. 1199, both bills being I believe identical and entitled "A bill to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," to report the same adversely with a written report. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] who introduced them is not in his seat, and as he may desire to take the sense of the Senator them, I ask that they be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Joint Select Committee on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, reported a bill (S. No.

1988) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library; which was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. VOORHEES, recommitted to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire merely to say that while I am impressed with the necessity of early action upon any bill in relation to building a public library, yet I shall seek an early opportunity to test the sense of the Senate as to the proper site.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask the permission of the Senate that that committee may sit during the sittings of the Senate for the remainder of the session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, asks leave for that committee to sit during the sittings of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1889) to authorize Charles William Siemens and Frederick Siemens to make application to the Commissioner of and Frederick Siemens to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of their patent for a regenerator furnace; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on patents.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1990) granting a pension to Harley S. Wait; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask leave without previous notice to introduce a bill for the relief of James Gibbons, of Baltimore, State of Maryland, and with it a petition from him in regard to the subject-matter contained in the bill. He is really the archbishop of the See of Baltimore, and asks for some change in a trust deed of property in this District. For the purpose of the convenience of the members of the Senate to whom the petition and bill will-be referred, I ask that they both may be printed. be printed.

be printed.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1991) for the relief of James Gibbons, of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill and petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and be printed.

Mr. WHYTE subsequently said: I desire to ask consent of the Senate to change the reference of the bill in regard to the application of the archbishop from the District of Columbia to the Judiciary Committee, as I find a note to that effect upon my table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change will be made.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1992) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army; which was read by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear that bill read at length, Mr. President. It is short and I should like to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in recognition of the eminent public services of Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, and ex-President of the United States, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the retired list, with the rank and full pay of General of the Army.

SEC. 2. That at any time when the President shall consider that an emergency has arisen requiring the services of General U. S. Grant on active duty, he is hereby authorized to assign him to any command commensurate with the rank of General.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1993) to correct and complete the record of Colonel B. H. Grierson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military

Mr. McPHERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2009) to regulate the promotion and retirement of certain officers in the naval service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 140) in regard to the extension of the franking privilege; which was read the first time at length, as

Be it resolved, &c., That the franking privilege is hereby extended to all official business sent through the mails by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; in all other respects to be under the restrictions and limitations of existing law.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want it referred to a committee unless there is objection to it. I desire to state the object of the joint resolution. Official communications come from the Departments to constituents is objection to it. I desire to state the object of the joint resolution. Official communications come from the Departments to constituents of members of Congress on which they have to pay postage of three cents, and the joint resolution would allow the matter to be franked and go free. So far as I am concerned—I can speak for myself—my postage on mere matter coming from the Pension Office costs me from five to seven dollars a month, and one month $10. These communications come to me from all parts of the country, and it is a pretty heavy tax. I suppose other Senators and Members of Congress feel the same tax upon them. It is a mere matter of accommodation to our constituents, and not to us. I do not desire any franking privilege on any private communication of Members or Senators, but on official business going through them to their constituents. I do not see why there should be any objection to the joint resolution. If there is not, I ask the Senate to adopt it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois that it ought to be "sent to or received by."

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to use the words "received by." Let the people who send communications pay the postage themselves. It only applies to those communications that go through Senators and Members of Congress to their constituents on which they now have to pay postage.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest to the Senator that a poor soldier who sometimes has to write dozens of letters in regard to a single pension ought to be permitted to send his letters free. The Senator from Illinois is more familiar with that class of cases than any member of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that; I only put the resolution in this shape, so that Senators will see that it is a protection to the postal service, that there can be no improper use of the franking privilege. That is the only object I have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is, Will the Senate consider the joint resolution at this time? It requires unanimous

Mr. KERNAN. I suggest that it had better go to a committee. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, let it go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe, on the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] that I will allow the joint resolution to lie on the table, so that I can call it up again to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be laid on the table subject to the call of the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed under the rule.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL

Mr. BLAIR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ARMY AS POSSE COMITATUS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Territories:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the necessity and propriety of so amending section 15 of an act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," that its provisions shall not be applicable to the government of the Territories of the United States.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS FOR STATE LIBRARIES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing consider the propriety of furnishing to the State library of each State copies of all bills, resolves, and other documents and papers printed for the use of either House.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BURNSIDE, it was Ordered, That General Schuyler Hamilton be allowed to take from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying his petition for restoration to the Army, pro-vided he leaves copies of the same on file.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880, for distribution by the said superintendent.

DISTRICT LIQUOR LICENSES.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish to the Senate the names of all persons applying for liquor licenses for the year commencing November 1, 1880, with all the signatures of property-holders and residents appended thereto, and all the indorsements thereon, designating those to whom licenses have been granted and those to whom licenses have been refused.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further business for the morning hour, that business is concluded, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the special order upon that subject.

The bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order upon the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the condition of this bill before the Senate proceeds further with it. It was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. An amendment was then offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan,] which amendment was amended by one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar.] The Senator from Massachusetts afterward offered another amendment in another part of the section; so that the pending motion is that of the Senator from New York, to strike out the paragraph from the bill which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 5, after the word "support," it is proposed to strike out "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms."

Mr. HOAR. The amendment which I offered, though in another part of the section, was in substance a correction of the entire section, designed to perfect it before the amendment of the Senator from

New York was voted upon, which proposes to strike out one large class of cases from the application of the whole section.

The Chair, therefore, I suppose for that reason, at any rate for some reason the Chair held the other day that my amendment was first in order, and it was submitted to the Senate and discussed for some time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did so hold, supposing the amendment was proposed to the paragraph under consideration. It being of the same general nature, however—

Mr. HOAR. It was in substance a perfecting of the section.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the Chair adheres to his former that the amendment which I moved was in substance a perfection of the section, and was to be first put before the amendment of the Senator from New York, which was to strike out a portion of the section, and the debate proceeded on that the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without examining the section the Chair afterwards saw that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts was to the latter part of the section; but on observation he sees that it relates to the same subject-matter, and so holds that the first amendment is that of the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be reported.

that the first amendment is that of the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be reported.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 23 of section 1, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "may, in the discretion of the court;" so that the clause will read:

And upon conviction thereof, or any part thereof, in the police court, or in any court of competent jurisdiction, upon information filed in the name of the District of Columbia, may, in the discretion of the court, be required to enter into security for their good behavior.

for their good behavior.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, this bill, as I have had occasion to state before, was draughted at the request of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, whose familiarity with the business of the District is supposed to be such as to have great weight with the committee. It has been represented to us, and our own observation concurs in that, that of all cities in the United States which need the protection of a law relating to vagrancy, perhaps Washington City is foremost. All kinds of characters, from the political deadbeat down to the fellow who stands upon the crossing with a broom in his hand, assemble at this place. Sharpers, thieves, pickpockets, confidence men, gamblers, and all kinds of criminals make a habit of consorting here for the purpose of plying their vocation. Many consorting here for the purpose of plying their vocation. Many instances have been given to us by the commissioners showing the great necessity for some law of this sort for the protection of the people of this city.

This bill was framed in conjunction with the solicitor of the District. After its introduction, especially when it was last under consideration, I was astonished to see it so vigorously assailed, as it was by both the honorable Senators from New York, by the honorable by both the honorable Senators from New York, by the honorable Senators from Delaware, from Wisconsin, and from Massachusetts. They assailed it with so much vigor and so much ridicule that I had almost become ashamed, as the organ of the committee, of my own inhumanity, and had come to the conclusion that I was a hard-hearted wretch, entirely devoid of the ordinary instincts of philanthropy and humanity. That led me, in justification of myself and my colleagues on the committee, to examine the laws of the States of these honorable Senators, thinking that, of course, as they were so ultra in their humanity, and so humane, so liberal, so broad-gauged, that I could find in the volumes of statutes of their respective States a form for a bill that would meet all the requirements of the most advanced humanity.

The first State whose laws I had the honor to examine on the subject of vagrancy was the State of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and I propose now to read what the humane laws of that humane State are. In section 28 of the general statutes of the State of Massachusetts I find the following:

Rogues and vagabonds, idle and dissolute persons who go about begging, per-ns who use any juggling or unlawful games or plays, common pipers, and fid-

Mr. VANCE. Bear-baiting; I thank the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. He said they objected to bear-baiting not that it gave the bear pain, but because it gave the spectators pleasure. I cannot see any reason for forbidding a man to play the fiddle in the State of Massachusetts.

So much for the statutes in relation to vagrancy in the State of So much for the statutes in relation to vagrancy in the State of Massachusetts. Any one who will take the pains to examine this statute in connection with the bill now pending before the Senate will find that the Senate bill is incomparably superior, in my judgment, to the statutes of the State of Massachusetts.

The next statute to which I directed my attention—
Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair.) Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly, sir.
Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes from what he has been reading, if he deems it important, as I suppose he does, or he would not have taken the time of the Senate with it—

Mr. VANCE. The Senator will oblige me by speaking a little londer.

Mr. HOAR. I cannot speak louder, so that we neither of us lose very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from massachusetts is unable to speak louder.

Mr. VANCE. I do not wonder.

Mr. HOAR. The provision of the State of Massachusetts which the Senator has read is precisely what it was contended ought to be the provision of the bill introduced here. The statute of Massachusetts authorizes a magistrate, in his discretion, to require this recognizance from idle and disorderly persons. The Senator's bill makes it the absolute duty of the magistrate to require it from idle persons, whather they are idle and disorderly or only idle, and from persons absolute duty of the magistrate to require it from idle persons, whether they are idle and disorderly or only idle, and from persons who commit trespasses on real estate of the slightest character. I did not attack the Senator's bill. I only suggested to the honorable Senator that instead of making his bill peremptory in all cases, he should leave a discretion with the court, just as the Massachusetts statute leaves it; and I think I shall be breaking no confidence if I say that a very large majority of the committee who reported the bill agree with me; but that will appear when they come to vote.

The Senator has totally misapprehended any position that I have taken. Certainly there is nothing in the statute of Massachusetts which he has read of the harsh character of the statute which he has reported, if it be correctly interpreted to mean what I suppose it reported, if it be correctly interpreted to mean what I suppose it means. I think if the Senator could hear the noise that those common fiddlers and pipers make in the streets he would join in any legislation against them.

Mr. VANCE. It is possible, Mr. President—
Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VANCE. Oh, yes, certainly.

Mr. DAWES. The other day when this measure was under discus-

Mr. DAWES. The other day when this measure was under discussion it was impossible, it seemed to me, to bring the Senator's mind to the objection to his bill. The objection was not to the class of persons that he desired to reach by the bill; but it was from the fact that whatever was the degree of offense, he made it obligatory on the court to impose imprisonment or exact bonds to keep the peace. He has brought in a section of the statutes of Massachusetts very much like his, though not altogether like it, in the class of persons—

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina decline to yield further?

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that upon reflection as I have not recurred to the last debate recently, it was to flection, as I have not recurred to the last debate recently, it was to the objection of the Senator from New York to the bill that my re-marks were principally directed. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts I do not believe would be objected to by the com-

Mr. DAWES. Then it is not worth while to take any time, except that the Senator will allow me, as he has been disposed to make a little fun of the Massachusetts statute, to express my gratification that the Senator from North Carolina approves of the statute so much as to embody it in this bill and is willing to conform more exactly to it to-day than he was a few days since.

Mr. VANCE. Fiddlers and pipers excepted.

Mr. DAWES. I am gratified that the Senator applies himself to the protection of fiddlers and stragglers. The people of Massachusetts do not care so much for them as the Senator from North Carolina seems to do. seems to do.

Mr. VANCE. The next statute which I consulted in relation to vagrancy was that in relation to the State represented by the honorable Senator who now occupies the chair. I read from Taylor's Statutes of the State of Wisconsin, volume 1:

SECTION 1. All idle persons

I commend that to the Senator from New York, not "willfully or viciously idle" persons, but—

All idle persons who, not having visible means to maintain themselves, live without employment; all persons wandering abroad and lodging in groceries, beerhouses, out-houses, market places, sheds or barns, or in the open air—

It seems to be a crime for a man to sleep in the open air, if he has got no house, in the State of Wisconsin—and not giving a good account of themselves

If that would not be called by metaphysicians a psychological and physiological inquiry I should like to know what would—"a man not giving a good account of himself!"

All common drunkards; all lewd, wanton, lascivious persons in speech or behavior; all persons wandering abroad and begging, or who go about from door to door, or place themselves in the streets, highways, passages, or other public places, to beg or receive alms, shall be deemed vagrants.

Section 5 provides that-

All male children under the age of eighteen years, and all female children under the age of seventeen years, convicted under the provisions of this chapter, shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the house of refuge, at Waukesha, for a term not more than one year nor less than three months.

The bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, which is under consideration, does not provide a minimum term of punishment, but provides that the punishment shall not exceed confinement for a certain term; but here it shall not be less than three months. A child of five years of age found begging on the streets shall be committed not in the discretion of the magistrate but absolutely, if found guilty, shall be punished by confinement for a term of not more than one year nor less than three months.

In all other cases, the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding ninety days, there to be kept, if the justice shall so direct, in solitary confinement for the whole or part of the time of his or her imprisonment; or if, in the opinion of the justice, the defendant is a proper subject for such relief, he shall commit him or her to the county poor-house of such county, if there be one, or to the almshouse or poor-house of such town or city, there to be kept at hard labor for a term not exceeding six months.

So much for the statutes of the State of Wisconsin. The next State to which I directed my attention—perhaps it should have been the first, as it is the greatest State in importance of this country—is the State of New York, the one represented by the honorable and humane Senator who made objection to this bill. I read from the Revised Statutes of New York, Banks & Brothers, page 836, volume 2, title II, reading 1:

All idle persons who, not having visible means to maintain themselves, live without employment—

Here the bill, as now amended, reads, "All willfully idle, vicious, or disorderly persons;" but the statute of the State of New York makes idleness a crime itself, provided the man has not visible means to support him in his idlenes all persons wandering abroad and lodging in taverns, groceries, beer-houses, out-houses, market-places, sheds, or barns, or in the open air, and not giving a good account of themselves; all persons wandering abroad and begging, or who go about from door to door, or place themselves in the streets, highways, passages, or other public places, to beg or receive alms, shall be deemed vagrants.

The punishment that is provided is as follows:

Those are some of the statutes which I have examined. I have examined more, but it is not necessary to weary the Senate by reading from them all. Suffice it to say, that so far as the effect of this act which the committee propose is concerned, the bill follows almost in totidem verbis the language of the chief States of this Union in re-

Mr. VANCE. I suppose the date would make no difference if the law is still in force.

Mr. ALLISON. It might make a difference, perhaps.

Mr. VANCE. I do not find it, sir.

Mr. WHYTE. The Massachusetts statute is 1864.

Mr. VANCE. I do not find the date in the margin, as is suggested. I was going to remark that I do not think in harshness these laws exceed any of the laws of the various States in the Union in relation to vagrancy, if indeed they come up to them; and when we come to consider the peculiar character of this city and the tendency which there is to overflow it with all kinds of adventurous characters, from the lowest to the highest order of crime, I do not think that there ought to be any hesitation at all in protecting the people of this city.

As to the substitute which was offered by the honorable Senator from Alabama, I will say that it would relieve the Committee on the District of Columbia, it would relieve the Congress of the United States very much, which has to legislate for the District, if such a law could be constitutionally passed. But I am of the opinion that its constitutionality is doubtful; that the legislative power proposed to be vested by the amendment of the honorable Senator from Alabama in the three commissioners of the District of Columbia could not constitutionally be so vested, and that it will remain still in the power of Congress and still be the duty of Congress to enact the legislation necessary for the government of the District according to the Con-

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I notice that in the laws which have been quoted vicious persons are provided against. Under the bill we are considering a vicious person will not be punished unless he has other terrible things attached to him. I will read them; they

That all idle, vicious, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia, without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.

A man may be a vicious person, he may be a disorderly person, but under the bill reported here, unless he goes about habitually "begging or receiving alms" the disorderliness does no harm, the vice does no harm, but it is the begging. Now I will read the bill as it stands without my amendment:

That all vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia, without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms."

So that if a man does not beg, but some charitable person sees that he is in need, has not shoes to cover his feet from the snow, and steps up and hands the man a dollar or two and says, "Go and get something for your feet," he is receiving alms, and that is enough; he is idle and has received alms. It is not in the conjunctive, but in the

Mr. CARPENTER. Read the next two lines.

Mr. CARPENTER. Or he may pass across a vacant lot to make a

Mr. KERNAN. Yes. If the laws in New York or in any other State have been made with provisions like these they ought to be repealed. have been made with provisions like these they ought to be repealed. I do not hesitate to say so. I do not believe any man ever heard of punishing a person not vicious, not disorderly, simply idle because he could not get work whereby to earn his bread, who goes to a man, if you please, habitually, day after day, and gets something to sustain him, receives it even without begging for it, but merely shows himself and excites commiseration, and the charitable impulse of some one gives him something. The idea that that is to be an offense for which he shall be sent to jail unless he can give security is, I think, not in accordance with what is right. not in accordance with what is right.

I have not looked at the statute of the State of New York recently, but I venture to say that no man ever heard that a person there was wilfully idle and was sent to jail because he received a coat to cover him, or because he or his family habitually went to neighbors who knew all about their character, knew they were deserving, knew they were sick, knew they were hungry without their fault, and that for that he could be arrested, taken before a magistrate, and required for that he could be arrested, taken before a magistrate, and required to be sent to jail if he could not give security. The friends of the bill ought to have this stricken out. The idea that under the bill a vicious person must habitually ask or receive alms in order to be punished is not right. I think if we take care of the vicious, of the disorderly, of those who hang about public places, and pickpockets, &c., it is all we ought to do; but to say that an individual who receives alms because a person who thinks he is deserving gives them and tells him, as many a family does, "Come around every day and you shall have something for your children"—to say that such recipients of charity are to be classed with pickpockets and disorderly persons is not what I think should be the law anywhere.

Mr. ROLLINS. I should like to inquire what has become of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Morrill in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is now pending.
Mr. ROLLINS. I hope a vote will be taken on that amendment.
Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, if that amendment be adopted we might as well abandon the bill entirely.
Mr. CONKLING. I think we had better abandon the bill, whether it is adopted or not.

Mr. WHYTE. I have no objection to abandoning it. It is a bill which has been called for by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. It is a bill similar in character to almost all the tramp laws which have been enacted throughout the United States since 1873. It may not be in totidem verbis with each one of the statutes, but it comprises most of the provisions of those different statutes throughout the States.

throughout the States.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire is there such an act in Maryland?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, but not in the same words exactly.

Mr. CONKLING. In substance?

Mr. WHYTE. A tramp act? Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it true under that act that if a person goes into the Senator's yard and commits a petty larceny that he may be sent to jail—if that is what it is called in Maryland—for thirty or forty days, or whatever; but if, without stealing anything at all, he walks into the Senator's yard, goes to his back door and asks for a loaf of bread, that he may be sent to the penitentiary or somewhere else for a year? Is that one of the provisions of the Maryland statnte?

Mr. WHYTE. Neither is it the provision here.
Mr. CONKLING. No; it is not here; it is the provision of some of these so-called tramp acts, which the Senator says this bill resembles; and if it does, it is a resemblance which would prejudice me very much against it. I could refer the Senator to so-called tramp acts, not in Maryland—for I have inquired for information about that—but in State which Levell name under which execute the measurement. but in States which I could name, under which exactly the monstrons thing that I have stated to him may occur by the terms of the act.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is so in Connecticut.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope we shall avoid anything resembling that, rather than embrace it.

Mr. WHYTE. It is exactly what I was saying, Mr. President, that so far from this being a severe bill it is more moderate, more benignant in its character than almost any tramp act in the United States, because it lodges in the hands of the judge of the police or criminal countries this District the power of the countries of the countrie because it lodges in the hands of the judge of the police or criminal court in this District the power to fine two cents or one cent, to discharge the prisoner on his own recognizance. It is the mildest of all these various acts. It has some provisions that, when we read them, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin, ought to go out; some provisions that may be amended; but on this part of the case the Senator will see that the punishment of imprisonment only follows where the bond is not given. There is no other provision; and if you leave it discretionary upon conviction to exact a bond the man is convicted and not punished at all. What are you to do with him? If the bond is not furnished he is to be sent to the work-house. It is only in the case where the bond is exacted that he is sent to the work-house, and yet the conviction stands there upon the face of the act. Is it not case where the bond is exacted that he is sent to the work-house, and yet the conviction stands there upon the face of the act. Is it not better to leave it in the discretion of the judge when he comes to try the case? If it is a case not willful in its character, if it is a case that ought not to be punished, he can discharge the man upon the execution of a recognizance of his own to keep the peace. Nobody will be arrested unless he is habitually going upon other people's premises. This act ought to be amended in that it does not provide for insane persons, and I intended to propose, after this amendment was disposed of, after the words "disorderly persons" to insert "not insane." They must be relieved, of course, from the application of this law. That is an oversight which, I am sure, the Senator from North Carolina will correct. But the act of my State is this—and this is the mature result of an examination of all the statutes and of the practical working of our own statute—drawn by the attorney-general of our own State, one of the wisest criminal lawyers we have there, and this is the result of his examination into other statutes and into the practical workings of our own statute, and we had to there, and this is the result of his examination into other statutes and into the practical workings of our own statute, and we had to alter it; it was too severe when it was first passed, and now, at the very last session of the Legislature, we altered it in these words:

Every person, not insane, who wanders about in this State and lodges in markethouses, market places, or in other public buildings, or in barns, out-houses, barracks, sheds, or in the open air, without having any fixed place of residence, and without having any lawful occupation in the city, town, or county in which he may so wander, and without having any visible means of support, shall be deemed to be a tramp, and be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to imprisonment in the Maryland House of Correction for a period not less than two months nor more than one year.

The pending bill is even milder in its punitive character than this act, because there it is discretionary with the judge to imprison a day, an hour, five minutes, if he thinks proper; that is proper, right, natural, and fair for the protection of the citizen. The minimum is not expressed, because it comes down to the smallest farthing of money or the very shortest period of imprisonment.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that if this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted by the Senate, we had better just put the bill out of the Senate altogether.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, it is well known that a few years since, when the tramp scare spread over the country a good deal more generally than the tramps did, the Legislatures of the States rushed madly into legislation upon this subject and passed a great many statutes of which I have no doubt they are now rather ashamed. It is certain that they passed statutes which for severity and for cruelty were never equaled in this country by anything since the so-called Blue Laws of Connecticut. This statute the Senator from Maryland says will be the mildest one in existence on that subject. I suppose that is so because it will be the last, the latest, the most remote from the alarm produced on that subject. I take it that every law which passes from this time out in the State Legislatures or anywhere else will be still milder and milder until people will get so far restored to their confidence in self-preservation under the old and restored to their confidence in self-preservation under the old and habitual laws of the land that they will repeal them altogether. I

Now, to save time and to test the sense of the Senate, I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed, and on that motion I ask for the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in thinking there ought to be some discretion left with the court in regard to the penalty to be inflicted or the security to be demanded in case a conviction is made. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the Senator from North Carolina whether it would not be well, and whether it would not meet the wishes of both Massachusetts and to the Schater from North Caronia whether it would not be well, and whether it would not meet the wishes of both opinions upon this subject, to modify the bill by inserting the word "may" before the words "be required," in line 23, and by striking out the word "shall" after "they," in line 27, and inserting "may;"

May be required to enter into security for their good behavior in a sum not exceeding $300 for a space of time not exceeding one year; and in case of refusal or inability to give such security they may be confined, &c.

That will leave no doubt as to the fact of discretion, and it appears to me, as that is the customary use of the word "may" in statutes of this kind, that it would so far modify the asperity of the bill as to meet the views of those who are opposed to it; and I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts whether he will not accept that in lieu of the amendment that he has offered. If he will, I will offer it as a compromise, in order to test the sense of the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. I am authorized by such portion of the committee as I can consult to accept the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Senator from Kansas moves to amend the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as will be now reported:

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Kernan, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, on the 12th day of March, 1878, the Senate recommitted by a resolution Senate bill No. 346 of the Footy-fifth Congress "referring the daim of Banjamin Helladay to Forty-fifth Congress, "referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims," to the Committee on Claims, "with instructions to report to the Senate what amount, if any, is equitably due to the claimant on account of his claim, and that said committee shall have claimant on account of his claim, and that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and to take testimony." After the expiration of more than eighteen months from the adoption of that resolution, the Committee on Claims reported back the bill that had been thus recommitted to them, and reported as the amount equitably due to Benjamin Holladay the sum of $526,739. That sum was made up of three items; first for the amount of loss sustained by the removal of his mail-route under military orders of the United States; second, for provisions and forage taken and used by the United States will say while engaged in Indian bastilities on the plains; and third military while engaged in Indian hostilities on the plains; and third, for Indian depredations committed upon the property of Benjamin Holladay while he was engaged in transporting the mail from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City.

In the discussion that has taken place in reference to this report there seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the relations which this claimant bore to the mail contract for the transportation of what was called the overland mail. I understand the facts to be that the route called "the overland" was first established by act of that the route called "the overland" was first established by act of Congress upon what is known as the southern route through Texas, and the contract was taken by what was called "the Overland Mail Company;" that the chief security and bondsman of that company was Benjamin Holladay; that after the mails had been carried for a time upon this route, by act of Congress also the route was changed, to what is termed the middle overland route from the Missouri River, starting somewhere near Atchison, by Salt Lake City, to Placerville, California, a distance of between seventeen hundred and eighteen hundred miles, and this same Overland Mail Company undertook to perform that service and began stocking that part of the line from perform that service and began stocking that part of the line from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City. When in the summer of 1861 they refused to go any farther, and were about to break down and throw up their contract, Holladay came forward as their bondsman; assumed their obligations either as a sub-contractor or lessee for so much of the line extended from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City; and from that time, as this committee has found upon its investigation, until 1866 he was to all intents and purposes the mail carrier of the overland mail from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City. This virtually broke the line at that point, and the rest of the service was performed from Salt Lake City to Placerville by the Overland Mail Company. The entire contract price for the service from the Missouri River to Placerville was $1,000,000 per year, and of this sum Benjamin Holladay received for his part of the service $450,000 per annum. The Overland Company and Holladay made a bargain or contract with the Vanderbilt line to transport a part of the throw up their contract, Holladay came forward as their bondsman; or contract with the Vanderbilt line to transport a part of the mail that was less valuable and more weighty (embracing principally the newspapers transportation) by the Vanderbilt route, and for that these two companies paid the Vanderbilt company the sum of $150,000 these two companies paid the Vanderbilt company the sum of $150,000 a year; one-half of which was paid by Holladay, and the other half by the Overland Company; so that Holladay's compensation for the service which he performed, so far as the Government was concerned, was but $375,000 a year. The impression has been made that he was drawing this $1,000,000 a year for this service.

Now, as to the line established by Holladay, its eastern portion had three branches. His stages started from Atchison, from opposite Nebraska City, and from Omaha, and converged to Fort Kearney, a distance out on the plains of some two hundred miles and there formed tance out on the plains of some two hundred miles, and there formed a trunk line extending from Fort Kearney to Salt Lake City, established in the first place upon what was called the emigrant trail, the Fremont line through the South Pass. This line involved the establishment of eighty stations with four-horse coaches, two to each station, forty stations with six-horse coaches, two to each station, making in all one hundred and twenty stations with an aggregate number of fourteen hundred head of horses and two hundred and forty stages. For the transportation of the necessary supplies he had to have and did employ and own fifty-six mule-wagons with six mules to each did employ and own fifty-six mule-wagons with six mules to each team, fourteen with four, and sixty wagons drawn by oxen. These one hundred and twenty stations had to be established. This mail was not carried, as we all know, through any settled country. When he left the Missouri River he went out almost upon a trackless plain, and therefore he had to establish stations from point to point sufficient not merely to accommodate the stock that he might find it necessary to use but also to accommodate the men, and if there was any travel to accommodate that too.

Not a great while after this line had been established Indian hostil-

Not a great while after this line had been established Indian hostilities broke out on the plains. The civil war that was raging in the United States had its reflective force and effect undoubtedly upon these wanderers of the plains, and Indian hostilities very soon broke out there, and as early as 1862, on this South Pass route, he met with a great deal of interruption and many of his stations were broken up.
Mr. Holladay came to Washington and had an interview with the President. That interview is succinctly stated in his sworn testimony submitted to the committee that made this report. He stated frankly the difficulties and dangers that surrounded this service, and he said to the President that he must be protected and his losses made good, or he would be compelled to abandon the line. This was in 1862; and he was sent back there to perform the service with the assurance that he was sent back there to perform the service with the assurance that he should be thus protected. He returned, and for the purpose of making that protection easier he transferred nearly three hundred miles of his line, west of Julesburgh and crossing the Rocky Range, to what is called the Middle Pass, the Bridger Pass through by Sherman's route, or the Sherman Pass—very nearly the line of the present Union Pacific Railroad. This transfer he made without any direct military authority or order, for the purpose of securing a safer and better route. The President gave orders for military protection, and as far as it was possible for the military to afford it they did so; but after endeavoring for a time to maintain this line he was subsequently, by military order, directed to change it again.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me for one moment, I wish to suggest that the first change of route was recognized by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. McDONALD. Undoubtedly; but it was not made by any military order.

tary order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It was not.

Mr. McDONALD. But it was made after his conference with the President and after his assurance of protection and reimbursement.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If it will not interrupt the Senator, nection with what he is now saying.

Mr. McDONALD. I shall be very glad to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the communication will be read at the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Copy of an official order issued by Postmaster-General M. Blair, on the 7th day of July, 1862, as the same is of record on his official journal. Route No. 10733, Missouri; Saint Joseph to Placerville—Overland Mail Company.

Ordered, Permit change of route so as to leave present road and keep along the South Platte and Cherokee trail via Bridger's Pass, and intersect present route at Fort Bridger, shortening the distance one hundred miles, provided the offices on the present route omitted by the change be supplied with the mails once a

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Indiana will allow me a moment to call attention to the official letter of General James Craig, in which he says that he has received a telegram informing him "that the Postmaster-General has ordered the Overland Mail Company to abandon the North Platte and Sweetwater portion and remove their stages and stock to a route south of this, running through Bridger's Pass." There is an official letter which shows that the change to the northern route was made not only under the authority but by the order of the Postmaster-General, as well as the Cut-off route by the order of Colonel Chivington.

Mr. McDONALD. It was undoubtedly by the permission of the Post-Office Department, but not directed by any military order. As to the second change, however, we have no difficulty on that subject, as the following order of the colonel commanding will show:

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF COLORADO,

Denver, December 2, 1864.

SIR: I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians, which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As it now runs, I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one. You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

I am, sir, with respect, your obedient servant,

J. M. CHIVINGTON, Colonel, Commanding District.

BENJAMIN HOLLADAY, Esq., Proprietor Overland Stage Line.

And in obedience to this order of December 2 1864 the second change was made, taking in Denver and reaching Salt Lake City by what is here called the Cut-off route. In the performance of this service Benjamin Holladay had stolen or taken from him by the Indians at least one hundred and ninety head of mules, at least three hundred and sixty-four horses, and of other stock at least ninety head, and had destroyed twenty-six stations which he had built and supplied. He had furnished the stations and the supplies.

These were the losses that he incurred in the performance of that

These were the losses that he incurred in the performance of that service, which the committee in its careful aggregation has calculated at the sum it has put in the bill reported back to us, and the question now comes before the Senate whether that report shall be sustained.

It is insisted in the first place that this contractor, who did not become voluntarily a contractor in this case, assumed all the risks of that line when he undertook to perform the service and that the compensation which he was to receive from the Government, and which he did receive, (not what has been suggested, a million of dollars a year, but $375,000, which was the actual compensation received by him.) was the full equivalent of the service that he performed and of the undertaking into which he entered. Inasmuch as the losses sustained by him in the destruction of his property and in the capture of his stock form the largest item of his claim of damages, the whole opposition rests upon this objection. I admit that it is the general rule that when persons enter upon a contract to perform a particular service they stipulate for whatever may be the ordinary risks of that service; and in a contract for carrying the mail, for instance, in a settled country, where there are plenty of means at hand, where there are no unusual difficulties to encounter, this rule ought to be strictly applied; but I insist that in a case of this kind it is not a proper rule, it is not equitable or right to apply it; and I insist that if ever in extraordinary cases it was proper to apply it, it is not right if ever in extraordinary cases it was proper to apply it, it is not right to apply it in this. There were circumstances then surrounding this enterprise that it is somewhat difficult for us to look at now as they appeared and presented themselves then.

The only communication that we then had with the Pacific coast and the new States erected there and the people of our blood and belonging to our nation who were there settled, was mainly by this overland mail. The only other mode of communication was tedious, overland mail. The only other mode of communication was tedious, long delayed, and uncertain. The Vanderbilt line, carrying its passengers and its mails by the Isthmus, by sea, until it reached that point on this side, and by sea on the other, of necessity consumed a large portion of time in passing from point to point; but here was an overland mail established, a mail-route fixed by act of Congress, by which it was proposed to carry across that plain uninhabited for fourteen hundred miles and over a daily mail to those people out there and bring back from them daily their communications to us. At any time an enterprise of that kind would have been somewhat extraordinary. At any time it would have encountered great diffi-At any time an enterprise of that kind would have been somewhat extraordinary. At any time it would have encountered great difficulties, because we all know that over that plain were roaming then and have been since bands of Indians sometimes friendly, sometimes hostile, always to be watched, never to be trusted; and that even in profound peace, when we would have had no other interests in those far-off settlements than those of kinship or commercial intercourse and commercial correspondence, a line like this would have had in the performance of such a require as this from 1051. and commercial correspondence, a line like this would have had its difficulties. But the performance of such a service as this from 1861 to 1866 through the civil war is anomalous in our history. It was the only thread that extended from the eastern to the western part of our country; it was the only means by which we could communicate with them or they with us. And so important was it found to make this communication more certain than stage lines could make it, more rapid than the swift foot of the horse, that even at that time the subject of constructing a railroad communication between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast, was a subject of all absorbing interest. subject of constructing a railroad communication between the Missouri River and the Pacific slope, between the Western and Middle States and the Pacific coast, was a subject of all-absorbing interest to every one who took any interest in the country or its welfare. And while Benjamin Holladay was performing this service, while he was making these changes, while his property was thus being seized and destroyed, while the Government had to send out, according to this testimony, five troopers with each stage to guard it on its way, while these things were going on Congress in 1862 and in 1864 passed those acts which provided for the construction of railroad communication between the Pacific and the Middle and Atlantic States, and it gave to those who undertook that enterprise a domain for its construction. A strip ten miles in width of the public lands for every mile of road constructed was given absolutely, and the bonds of the Government were given in loan to the companies for nearly sixty millions of dollars. These were the outlays with which the country was endeavoring to supplement the line of the Overland Company, of which, so far as the eastern end of that line was concerned, Benjamin Holladay was the company.

Now, I ask, Mr. President, if it is fair, or right, or just to apply to a service of this kind the narrow rule that has been suggested? Did he understand when he went out from the White House after his consultation with Abraham Lincoln, who was honor and truth itself, consultation with Abraham Lincoln, who was honor and truth itself, that he was sent there under the ordinary and cold provisions of a contract that made him responsible for all its losses? Did Mr. Lincoln, when he gave orders to the military authorities to give him protection, and said to him that if he met losses beyond that Congress would undoubtedly reimburse him, suppose this was an ordinary contract for the carrying of mails in settled countries, where there can be no great danger that cannot be foreseen? Did these men, when they undertook this middle line in 1860, foresee that the civil war would break out in the spring of 1861 and involve this whole country, and with its disturbing elements set on fire on these prairies the roving bands that were there and stir them up to plunder? Did they see that, and engage for this sum to jeopardize life and property and all to carry these mails daily? If that was so; if that can be fairly said in reference to this branch of the case, then Mr. Holladay must pocket his losses so far as Indian depredations are concerned.

Mr. President, so far as the property of Benjamin Holladay taken and used by the Government is concerned, there can be no question raised anywhere; but it is said that the losses he sustained by the removal are akin to the other; that is, that having stocked one line, established his stations, planted his corrals, placed his provisions there, all his forage and his supplies, when it cost twelve cents a pound to the Government to haul supplies out to the plains—that when he had done that and was then ordered by a military officer to remove those stations to a line far south and to abandon what he had done there and reconstruct and re-establish a new line he is to have pathing for that, for that was embraced, too, within the terms have nothing for that, for that was embraced, too, within the terms of the contract. No, Mr. President, the Senate did not so understand this question when they adopted the resolution I have cited directing the committee to ascertain what is equitably due to him on account the committee to ascertain what is equitably due to him on account of this claim that he has preferred.

But it is said that this claim is made out upon exparte testimony; that exparte affidavits are the foundation and support of it. Now, Mr. President, I do not think that is so. I have endeavored to examine with some care the testimony that this committee with great labor has taken, and to my mind it is not necessary to consider the exparte affidavits that were properly filed for the purpose of bringing this claim forward in any other light than as bills of particulars submitted; that the sworn testimony taken upon examination and cross-serving sufficiently, and substantially establishes the cross-examination sufficiently and substantially establishes the amount that the committee have returned, simply using the affidavits and the accounts that are attached thereto as so many bills of particulars presented.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to some testimony on this subject that is not ex parte, and first I will read from the evidence of General Robert B. Mitchell, the general commanding that district:

General Robert B. Mitchell, the general commanding that district:

Question. State what injury was done to the property of the Overland Mail.

Answer. I think most all the property was destroyed and taken from one point east of Kearney and Fort Kearney clear through to Green River, with the exceptions of these forts, where the forces protected the stage property. We at times protected the line pretty well, and at other times they would make a sweep on us, and divide up for a thousand miles on that line, and lay waste to everything. I really had not force enough to whip the combined forces of Indians. They never whipped us, but their policy was not to stand a fight, but get pre perty, stages, mules, provisions, and everything, and run off. There was scarcely a ranch except at Fort Cottonwood—well, there was no ranch from Cottonwood to this Frement Orchard left along the road—everything, the citizens and everything were wiped out, the stage company's property and all. At Julesburgh I had occasion to examine the Indian affairs there personally; that was the supply post for the entire line for grain and provisions, and there were fine stables and houses there, and that was a good eating-place—it was called an eating-station. I was afterward through there and found it all destroyed; that I know also from official reports. I was not there at the time of the fight, but I was there two days afterward, and saw evidences of the fight. I had fifteen men killed there, and another company three or four. There were only two companies there, and they would all have been killed, but that they had two howfizers and good arms. There were from fifteen hundred to two thousand five hundred Indians; there were about eighty men to a company.

There is the testimony of the commanding officer. He says the

There is the testimony of the commanding officer. He says the principal depot at Julesburgh was destroyed, entirely destroyed, destroyed while being defended by two companies of United States troops. It was assailed by some fifteen hundred Indians. It was a rich prize. He says he had not troops enough to defeat the Indians, but they never defeated him. It was not their purpose to engage in any general battle; their purpose was plunder, and the richest plunder they could lay their hands on was the property of this Overland der they could lay their hands on was the property of this Overland Mail Company.

In reference to the character of these Indian hostilities and their depredations, the testimony of Colonel Otis is to the same effect. But it is said that there are overcharges here; that horses are put down at $200 apiece, mules at $200 apiece, and corn at large prices. Mr. President, the testimony of the Government officers who were out there on the plains would warrant a much higher rate being affixed to any of this property. They testified that the Government was paying at that time for hauling supplies from the Missouri River out upon those plains to supply the different stations as high as sixteen cents a pound for corn, and that the hay the Government obtained through its quartermasters and commissaries was worth from $50 to $100 a ton. Now, my friend from New Jersey says they ought to $100 a ton. Now, my friend from New Jersey says they ought to have cut this hay upon the plains. Very evidently he has not gone have cut this hay upon the plains. Very evidently he has not gone over those plains.

Mr. McPHERSON. They did cut it.

Mr. McDONALD. Ah! Not upon this line, not upon this route.

There were such places here and there. If the Senator had crossed the plains he would have known something more about them. There were places here and there where hay could be cut; but for hundreds of miles the rankest vegetation that grows upon these plains is the buffalo grass that he would have to grub out of the ground with his fingers. with his finger

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. McDONALD. Yes.
Mr. McPHERSON. How is it, then, that at the different stations along the line, at stations where we have knowledge that grass does grow and at those where he avers grass does not grow, the same price is charged for hay in the bill of particulars—the same at every station

Mr. McDONALD. I am not informed, nor does this testimony inform me at what stations grass did grow. I should judge from what I know from passing once upon what was the center line of this overland mail, that there were very few places where crops of hay are harvested. But I will simply read the testimony of a Government officer who was out there at the time, Colonel Charles G. Otis. He was there in the latter part of this service. He had served in the Army in the East before that, but he was stationed at Denver during the year 1865. He says:

My regiment was distributed over the line from station to station. Our head quarters at that time were at Camp Collins—

This was the safety line—the third line taken up after the establishment of the central route to California, the "cut-off" as it is called here, through Denver, where it had been placed by the direction of the commanding officer who had preceded Colonel Otis:

Our headquarters at that time were at Camp Collins, and then we had men stationed at different stations. Some men at Virginia Dale, Bitter Creek, Big and Little Laramie, Cooper Creek, Halleck, Platte Crossing, at Sage Creek, at Pine Grove, and at the crossing of the Platte, Bridger Pass, and Salphur Springs. And the regiment was stationed along those; we sent five mounted men with the stage each

So much for the safety of the line. Now, then, as for the cost of articles of a similar character which the Government had to obtain and which it had just as much means of obtaining as Mr. Holladay had:

Question. Have you any means of knowing the value or cost of construction in that country?

This is as to the stations.

Answer. Yes, sir. I have some means. We built some storehouses and things of that kind at Fort Collins while I was there, and I am professionally acquainted with the knowledge of building, because I have served at that trade myself when I was young. I am a mechanic.

Q. Can you state the cost of building any station at any point—in Colorado, for of that kind at Fort Collins with the knowledge of building, because I have served at time track.

I was young. I am a mechanic.

Q. Can you state the cost of building any station at any point—in Colorado, for instance?

A. I could only do it as a matter of judgment, not of knowledge; but I would say it was very expensive from my knowledge of the cost of things, because I know that during the winter of 1865, from my knowledge of the cost of wood forage, we found everything was very high; and I know it seemed like burning money to burn wood there, because it had to be hauled eighty or ninety miles.

Q. What was a cord of wood worth?

A. From $90 to $100.

Q. Do you remember the price of lumber?

A. The prices at those stations sometimes run up as high as $200 a thousand.

Q. Do you remember how low it ever reached?

A. I think $80 or $90.

Q. Had you any means of knowing the value of corn and oats?

A. At our station there was a contract. The contract price for hauling grain was fourteen cents a pound. Wallace was one of the contractors. I knew he bought a large consignment of corn there—several hundred thousand pounds—and it was fourteen cents a pound for hauling, to my recollection.

Q. What would that make the corn cost at your station?

A. I do not recollect what the corn was worth. It was worth twenty-five cents a pound. It varied according to the trouble of getting it there.

Q. How was the price of oats?

A. We used very few; but it was about the same as corn.

Q. Do you know the price of labor; or did you at that time?

A. We had a carpenter at our station we paid $100 a month.

Then, in reference to the value of the stations themselves, he fixes the amount at something like two thousand dollars a station, as the cost of establishing one. Some of these stations were more costly than others, because it became necessary, as a matter of course, to have certain stations that would have better accommodations and be a source of supply to others. In reference to the price of stock, this same officer testifies that the Government was remounting its cavalry by purchasing at Atchison and along the Missouri border horses much inferior to those used in the overland mail at $175 apiece, horses that yet had to be taken out on the plains to the farthest end of this line, over 1,100 miles.

Now, the committee in their finding in this case have not given Mr. Holladay just $200 apiece for all his stock; the average is something below that, as anybody will ascertain who will take the trouble to make the calculation; but if they had given him $200, it would have been inside, and long inside, of the testimony offered on that subject, not on the affidavits but the testimony of witnesses examined and not on the affidavits but the testimony of witnesses examined and cross-examined, and witnesses disinterested, too.

But it is said that Mr. Holladay must have paid himself for all this by the transportation of passengers, that it was a passenger line. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] who has spoken in favor of this claim has given you some idea of what kind of a passenger line it was. He said to you that he had traveled by it on some occasions when compelled to do so, because it was the best there was, and where it was indispensable that he should go he sometimes availed himself of this mode, but that he did so with his rifle upon his knee. He sat in the stage-coach with his rifle upon his knee. If it took five troopers to guard each one of these coaches as it left the station and went from station to station, I should think a passenger would want at least two rifles and one or two other perpassenger would want at least two rifles and one or two other persons to help him use them, who would venture upon such a journey as that.

To undertake to pay this man now for the actual losses he sustained in keeping up and maintaining this line at a time when it was indisin keeping up and maintaining this line at a time when it was indispensable that it should be done, when perhaps the very integrity of the Government depended upon the daily communication that passed over this line in holding one section of the country to the other—I say to undertake now to pay him out of what passage-money he might have received from passengers who traveled under such special circumstances as these would be a mockery of justice; and in place of instructing this committee to ascertain what was equitably due to him, the Senate ought to have instructed the committee to ascertain how much he ought to refund on account of the passengers who traveled with their rifles upon their knees in a stage-coach guarded by five mounted soldiers of the United States; and this did not furnish protection, as the testimony abundantly shows. The evidence of General Mitchell, not cx parte evidence, beyond any possible doubt shows that this could not always protect the line, because even their chief depot of supply, guarded by two companies of United States troops furnished with artillery, was burned and destroyed, and the troops driven out, the stock and property taken and carried off—that which could be carried off—and confiscated and used by the Indians, for that was their very purpose. They were not endeavoring to do anything else. They did not care about fighting the United States particularly; their object was depredation, spoliation, and seizure of whatever could be carried away or driven away. This testimony, outside of any cx parte affidavits, shows that their losses could not have been less than what this committee have reported.

I desire simply, in conclusion, to say, Mr. President, that no claim which has come before the Senate since I have been a member has been more carefully examined, nor do I believe any has been more thoroughly sustained; and this report of the committee comes to us almost with the solemnity of a verdict of a jury fully supported by the evidence they have taken at great labor. Therefore I shall not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to send this case to the Court of Claims, but I shall vote to give this man what I believe he is entitled to, the amount which has been returned here in this solemn manner, and on this full investigation, by the committee to whom it was referred for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it was not my purpose when this case was called up to say anything on the subject: but I could not

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it was not my purpose when this case was called up to say anything on the subject; but I could not keep my seat without saying something in this behalf after hearing honorable Senators, as I did the other day, denounce as fraudulent an honest and just claim of a meritorious man who risked his life and honorable Senators, as I did the other day, denounce as fraudulent an honest and just claim of a meritorious man who risked his life and his fortune in the service of his country during the most perilous period of its whole existence. This undertaking of Mr. Holladay was a great enterprise, probably greater than ever before was undertaken and accomplished by a single individual in any country; an enterprise requiring the employment of a vast amount of capital and credit, of great courage, large experience in business, great energy. Sir, it required a great man to accomplish it. All these requirements were brought into play and employed, as the committee tell you, as all of the witnesses tell you, with a fidelity and a patriotism and an energy almost unexampled. Sir, instead of being denounced as Mr. Holladay has been, he should receive the thanks of his country.

Mr. President, it is curious to observe that in all that relates to foreign countries, that in all that concerns the interests of certain favored and powerful classes, our Government proudly asserts the national honor and the faith of the nation is maintained with the utmost scrupulousness; but when the rights of a private citizen are to be considered, I say almost with a blush that our Government is mean beyond all example. It looks with a jealous eye and a suspicious eye upon every claim and every claimant ready to presume that one is a fraud and the other a cheat. Every obstacle is thrown in the way of a fair and full investigation of his rights; and at last if justice is tardily done him it will be found, in nine cases out of ten, that it has been delayed so long that the poor man, wearied and worn with waiting and watching, finds at last that he has expended more money than his claim amounts to; and broken-hearted he falls into a panper's grave. The calendars of our legislation are as full of these cases as the dockets of the English courts of chancery. We are doing every day in Congress such injustice to our own fellow-citizens.

Why, sir, the se

Why, sir, the services rendered by this man, if they had been rendered to any other government than our own, would have been rewarded by decorations of honor, and perhaps by knighthood itself. What did he do? He carried our civilization across the trackless desert to the remotest confines of the continent; he blazed a way for the great railroads that now span it and literally bind the country with bands of iron. This claim is of such exceptional merit in itself that it should be treated and considered with generosity and liberality instead of with narrowness and jealousy. What is it, sir? In 1861 Mr. Holladay was the surety of a company that had undertaken to carry the mail across the continent. That company was unable to accomplish its contract, and was about to fail and fall through, when he, to save himself from loss in consequence of his being on the official bond of that company, and by reason of other liabilities in large amounts, reaching altogether to seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, was compelled to buy it out and assume its contract. He assumed it from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, a distance of over twelve hundred miles. He Why, sir, the services rendered by this man, if they had been rendered River to Salt Lake City, a distance of over twelve hundred miles. set himself to work at once to reorganize the whole affair. Instead of the rickety old spring-wagons he bought one hundred and ten splendid Concord coaches, costing him $1,200 apiece, and put them on the line. He purchased and put there nearly eighteen hundred mules and horses for drawing the stages and hauling supplies, besides four hundred oxen. He employed five hundred men; he built one hundred and twenty stations, costing upon an average certainly not less than two thousand dollars apiece, and, with all the other improvements and paraphernalia belonging to an enterprise of such magnitude as this, requiring in the whole an expenditure of more than two million dollars. When he undertook this contract, in the fall of 1860, we were in profound peace with all the Indian tribes along that vast route of twelve hundred and fifty miles. The whole Army of the United States was posted out there, and kept the Indians quiet by its pres-

But soon that Army was withdrawn to other fields of operaence. But soon that Army was withdrawn to other fields of opera-tions, leaving but small garrisons in the posts, wholly inadequate for the purpose of giving protection to emigrant trains and the stage-coach line across this continent. These troops being taken away, at once the Indians, for a space of five hundred miles, seven or eight warlike tribes that had been repressed and kept in peace by the pres-ence of the Army, put on their paint and went upon the war-path. They swooped down upon the country and swept away Mr. Holla-day's stage line for a distance of five hundred miles. Holladay went at once and took his chief superintendent to Wash-day's stage line for a distance of five hundred miles.

Holladay went at once and took his chief superintendent to Washington City, called upon the President and Postmaster-General, and represented to them that it was perfectly impossible for him to carry the mails unless he had military protection; that he would be compelled to abandon the line. The President said to him that that must not be done; that the mails must be carried through at all hazards; that the confederate cruisers were upon the high seas, and that the mails could not be intrusted, nor the bullion so much needed by the Government to transportation upon the needs and that this mail mails could not be intrusted, nor the bullion so much needed by the Government, to transportation upon the ocean, and that this mail must go, cost what it might, and he assured Mr. Holladay that he would give him all the protection in his power, and said to him, "Keep accurate account of all your losses, and when we get through this trouble Congress will do you justice and indemnify you for the losses you sustain in this service to your country." This is proven. If it were not positively proven as it is, it would sufficiently appear by the very facts and circumstances of the case. Who but a fool would undertake such an enterprise in any such territory? What government would demand it but a tyrant? The President gave him this assurance and directed him to go back and re-stock his line, upon which he had lost upward of three hundred horses. He purchased those horses; he went back; but when he got there the general in which he had lost upward of three hundred horses. He purchased those horses; he went back; but when he got there the general in command found it absolutely impossible to protect the line, the war had become so general, and he believed it best, and so communicated with the postal department at Washington, and an order came from the Postmaster-General directing that their route should be changed from the North Platte route for a distance of five hundred miles to a line three hundred miles south of this.

These are the facts, and for all these losses—
Mr. MCPHERSON. May I interrupt the Senator one moment to ask a question for information?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In what part of the report or any of the papers accompanying this case does it appear that Mr. Lincoln, the then President of the United States, promised to Mr. Holladay the protection stated by the honorable Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It appears in George K. Otis's deposition; it appears in Ben. Holladay's deposition; and it appears from the facts themselves, because, as I stated, nobody but a madman would undertake it on any other basis.

take it on any other basis

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator allow me a moment? It appears more strongly perhaps in the testimony of General James Craig than in anybody else's, to the effect that he was out there in 1862 with a command acting under the direct and specific orders of the Secretary of War—that is what General Craig swears to—to take care of the overland mail-route.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And General Craig swears that he informed the Department at Washington that it would be impossible to carry that mail any longer by that route except with the consent of the Indians

These claims of Holladay are large, it is true. How could they be themselves.

These claims of Holladay are large, it is true. How could they be otherwise than large? They grew out of a vast transaction in perilous times. But because they are large, is that a reason that they do not appeal to the justice of the Government? They are large, and therefore so much the greater reason that they should have been paid long, long ago. If they are large delay in their payment is so much the greater injustice to Mr. Holladay and their denial is so much the greater wrong.

These claims of Mr. Holladay for spoliations upon the line may be divided naturally into four heads: First, his claim for compensation and damages in consequence of his forced removal from the route on the North Platte line to the Bridger Pass line for a distance of five hundred miles, involving the loss of twenty-six stations, which could not have cost him less than an average of two thousand dollars a station, and the loss of supplies upon that line which could not have cost him less than twenty-five thousand dollars. The second head of losses is for the removal of his line from the Platte route to the Cut-off route by order of Colonel Chivington, involving the removal of fourteen stations, with all the grain and appliances, stock, materials, &c., belonging necessarily to those stations, for a distance of from forty to sixty miles. The third head of his losses is for provisions and forage consumed by the Federal soldiers necessarily during these troublesome times at stations along the route. The fourth class of claims is for spoliations by the Indians in stealing and running off his horses, in destroying his grain, his hay, and his other property, and burning his stations.

Now Mr. Holladay comes before Congress asking the indemnity which his Government had solemnly promised him and which it failed to give him for these losses. There can be no doubt as to the number of stations that he lost by the first order communicated by the Post-Office Department through General Craig to him. It is sworn to in the affidavits; it is sworn to in the depositions; it is positively proven the amdavits; it is sworn to in the depositions; it is positively proven and clearly stated by General Craig, who did know. The value of the grain lost, &c., is also proved.

Now, as to the second removal to the distance of one hundred and forty miles, under the order of Colonel Chivington, George K. Otis, who was superintendent, swore that he was present and superintended and directed the entire removal, and that he knows the loss amounted to $50,000.

Then as to the third class, which is the amount of provisions, hay, corn, and wood consumed by Federal soldiers along that line, this is positively established, every item of it, and the witnesses all state, and every business man of sense knows, that a lot of soldiers patrolling up and down a line of twelve hundred miles in length in gangs of from five to ten, for from two to three years, with no supply trains accompanying them, with no depot near from which to draw their supplies, necessarily fed upon Mr. Holladay, fed themselves and fed their horses upon his grain and his provisions; and the amount of $30,000 charged for this does not cover, in my judgment, one-half the loss. Look at it yourselves.

loss. Look at it yourselves.

Now, when we come to the loss of horses, can any man doubt that the number of horses charged was lost? Senators fall into the error of saying that these horses are all charged at the same price. It is a mistake. Horses are charged at from $50 to $225; the average price amounts to $98. Will any man say that is too much? In addition to the proof of the witnesses, let us take our own proofs, go to our own recollection of prices. In the time of the great war the demand for mules by the Quartermaster's Department and for horses for cavalry was so great that never in the history of this country were mules and horses so high as they were during the very period of which we are speaking. I know of my own personal knowledge that they could not be bought then for that money, and I know that I am a pretty good judge of these things, let me tell you. I do know that at this day you cannot duplicate that stock for the same money and put them upon that line. On a gold basis, you cannot do it this day. day you cannot duplicate that stock for the same money and put them upon that line. On a gold basis, you cannot do it this day. I know that many of these mules were bought by Mr. Holladay in the city of Louisville at as high as $250 apiece. I never saw, and none of you ever saw a cavalry horse during the war obtained for less than $175 to $250. The best sort of horses were required for these stages; the best kind of mules were demanded for the freight wagons. A light, common mule could not pull through the deep sand; an inferior horse could not carry these splendid Concord coaches with their passengers and their mail, at the rate of six miles an hour. Bould trip, saw the fact: and he says another thing.

passengers and their mail, at the rate of six miles an hour. Bowles, in his transcontinental trip, saw the fact; and he says another thing, too, that this was the finest stage line upon the American continent; it was an honor to the whole country; to the Government that conceived it and to the man who operated it.

It is all bosh to talk about these horses being high. They are low, sir. As for the price of grain, is not the price of grain and hay positively proved by the testimony of six officers of the Army, by the testimony of eight witnesses, the very men of all others in Mr. Holladay's employment best qualified to know and testify in regard to the facts about which they are talking? The Senator from Vermont says that it is unfortunate for Mr. Holladay that all his witnesses are his own men. Why, in the name of God, who else could he get? There were no neighbors around there when the Indians depredated upon own men. Why, in the name of God, who else could be get? There were no neighbors around there when the Indians depredated upon his property to call in and swear, nobody but these very men or the Indians themselves who took the property. It was the only proof possible under the circumstances. The officers were there for the purpose of protecting his route, and they and the division agents, the pose of protecting his route, and they and the division agents, the paymasters, the superintendents, the purchasers of grain, the men whose business it was to supply the route, knew the value of the things taken. The general average was the thing that these men could always testify to, because they did know how much forage was necessarily kept at the station, and they knew how much was fed every day, and if two hundred and fifty sacks of corn had been at a station two weeks they knew exactly how much was left when the station was burned. They could not tell when twenty Indians swooped down exactly what price to put on every horse out of thirty that was down exactly what price to put on every horse out of thirty that was seized and carried off, because there was no time to take an inventory when the Indians were firing upon a small squadron of soldiers. How, seized and carried off, because there was no time to take an inventory when the Indians were firing upon a small squadron of soldiers. How, then, could they take an inventory and set down the value of each particular horse? But they knew what the general average value of the horses was, and they have testified to that. It is the general average we are trying to get. There were no white people from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, except in Denver; there were no justices of the peace; there were no courts. There is a very singular fact about all this testimony, and it is this, if you will notice it, that every one of these depositions was taken exactly at or about the time the depredations were committed, beginning in the spring of 1802 and running up to the termination of the contract. How do you think that happened? Mr. Holladay tells me exactly how it happened. When Mr. Lincoln told him he was going to be indemnified for his losses, Holladay said, "In the name of God how shall I perpetuate my proof about them?" "Why," said the President, "when a loss occurs just take your superintendent, he can draw up an estimate and an affidavit, and you can bring in your stages some Federal judge from the Territories or some notary public and swear these people," and Holladay did exactly as the President advised him, and there never was a set of affidavits more clear than these; and the fact that they were taken at the very time the damage occurred rebuts the insinuation of the Senator from Pennsylvania that this claim has grewn since it made its appearance first. It is not the fact. It has never grown. The testimony was prepared on the spot, and all that was then in is now in, and no more, except the depositions taken by was then in is now in, and no more, except the depositions taken by the committee itself.

Gentlemen talk about the price of corn and the price of oats being $10 or $11 a bushel. I paid that for them myself. That would make about $26 a bushel; but we know that it is not the cost of production that is the standard of the value of grain six or seven hundred miles from the fields where it is produced; it is the cost of transportation, and we have the means of ascertaining that, and I tell you, Senators, if you will examine the books of the Quartermaster-General you will find that in the years 1857, 1858, and 1859 the Government of the United States paid for transporting supplies to the forces in the Territory of Utah twenty-one and twenty-two cents a round for flour. pound for flour

There is nothing extravagant in all that. I do not want to fatigue the Senate by going over this testimony, but I will just read a few extracts from the testimony of one of the most intelligent witnesses who has been examined in the case. I happen to personally know that individual, and he is an intimate friend of both the Senators that individual, and he is an intimate friend of both the Senators from Missouri, and I hesitate not to say that there is no man in the country who stands higher for integrity and probity than George H. Carlyle, of Missouri. What does Mr. Carlyle say? He says that he furnished stations with grain from the Missouri River, six hundred and fifty miles west; that he was perfectly familiar with all of Holladay's business in connection with the line from 1862 to 1866; that he laday's business in connection with the line from 1862 to 1866; that he was in Holladay's employment all that time; that the stations were ten to twelve miles apart, built of cedar logs or frame, worth $2,000 each; that logs had to be hauled one hundred miles and lumber four hundred from Denver City; that there was a dwelling as well as a barn and stable at the stations; that every one hundred miles there was a warehouse capable of holding from five to ten thousand bushels of grain for distribution among the smaller stables; that he delivered the grain and measured the hay; that grain was worth $10 a bushel at Julesburgh; that he tried to buy it for General Connor, of the Army, at that price, but could not; that he loaded a train of six wagons at Nebraska City with sixty-five sacks each, but had to feed his teams going and coming, so that he could only leave at the end of his route ten sacks out of sixty-five to each wagon.

There you see, Senators, how it is that corn gets to be worth $10 a bushel. He also testifies that the stations were all burned from Fort Kearney to Julesburgh inclusive; that there were about fifty tons of Kearney to Julesburgh inclusive; that there were about fifty tons of hay at each station worth $50 a ton, which had been hauled from seventy-five to one hundred miles; that grain destroyed over the three hundred miles would average near two hundred and fifty sacks three hundred miles would average near two hundred and fifty sacks to the station and about forty tons of hay, leaving out Julesburgh, which was a depot; that the troubles on the eastern end of the route began in 1864 and continued till 1866; that the troubles commenced on the west end of the route in 1862; that it cost twenty cents a pound to get corn from Kearney to Julesburgh, and that he paid that price; that he went over the line in 1862 with the paymaster and saw expenses paid, and that they were over three hundred thousand dollars a quarter exclusive of grain account.

Mr. Holladay got but the $450,000 a year for carrying the mail, and his quarterly expenses were over four hundred thousand dollars. It was not the carrying of the mail that Mr. Holladay expected to be so much profitable to him, for that would not have paid his forage account, but it was the passengers and it was the bullion from the mines of California which was needed by the Government at Washington from which Mr. Holladay expected to draw his profits, and his profits would have been large if the Government had furnished him the protection that they promised and could not give. He asks nothing for the failure of that in the way of consequential damages, but he does ask and has a right to demand of Congress that he shall nothing for the failure of that in the way of consequential damages, but he does ask and has a right to demand of Congress that he shall be paid for the property he actually lost. Mr. Carlyle says further that he made contracts to supply stations at twenty cents a pound; that he paid five to six hundred dollars a pair for wagon mules; that they were not as good as stage mules. They were heavier mules, larger mules, and not so stylish and fine, because it required a better mule to trot his stage than it did to work at the wheel of a draught wagon. Mr. Carlyle further states that oxen cost $200 a yoke; that he knew of twenty-nine oxen being taken by the soldiers for beef; that he has read all the affidavits and knows most of the affiants, and that they are men'd good character, and that he is satisfied that that he has read all the affidavits and knows most of the affiants, and that they are men of good character, and that he is satisfied that their statements are true and that the value of the property is not overestimated; that he knows that there were one hundred cords of wood, worth $50 a cord at Julesburgh, burned by the United States soldiers; that the grain, provisions, and fuel used by the soldiers could not have been less than thirty thousand dollars.

Besides the testimony of Mr. Carlyle, there are the depositions of Mr. Street, General Hooker, General Craig, General Mitchell, the officers of the Army who were there for the protection of this contractor, and his employés who knew everything in connection with his business. They knew the price of animals when they were called upon to buy a single horse or mule for a particular route where it was needed; they could not help but know it. They bought the supplies; they paid for them, and they were bound to know all about them. And unless you believe that every witness who has here testified has perjured himself, you must believe in the justice of the account reported by the committee. I do hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be voted down, and that a vote will be taken at once upon the report of the committee of this Senate.

It would be the greatest injustice now to turn Mr. Holladay over to the mercy of the Court of Claims, where he might hang for years, and then, if the matter was taken to the Supreme Court, the poor old man would be in his grave before he ever got a dollar on this claim. We have no right to send him there. The Senate referred his case to this committee, and by a resolution acknowledged that the Government was bound to pay Mr. Holladay, and ordered that committee to ascertain how much in equity and good conscience was due him. That was the question for their investigation, and they have reported it just like a commissioner in chancery would report, or just like a jury would find the facts in an issue, and we have nothing to do but as judges in the case to enter judgment in favor of Mr. Holladay for the amount reported; and when we have done that, we have only done an act of justice to a most meritorious and patriotic private citizen, who has done more to develop the West than any other man now living in it. I do not believe there can be found in this broad country another man possessing the means, the practical knowledge, the courage, and the energy to have accomplished the great work which Ben. Holladay did, and we should deal liberally and promptly and generously with him. It is not compatible with the character of this great Government to higgle over proper remuneration to the men who served it efficiently in times of peril and danger.

I will not trouble the Senate longer.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Claims, after a good deal of deliberation, have reported a bill to pay out of the Treasury of the United States $526,739 to Benjamin Holladay "in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of said Holladay against the United States on account of his contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the United the order of the military authority of the United States, and upon the request of the President, during the existence of Indian hostili-ties on the line of said mail-route; and in full satisfaction for the property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States."

This is in substance the full amount of Mr. Holladay's claim. If this money be due to him, whether it be on an implied obligation or whether it be under the seal of the United States Treasury, his claim has equal force upon my vote. I do not hold that the credit and honor of the United States ought to be exemplified only by the bonds issued from its Treasury; but I hold that good faith and honor require the full payment of every just debt by the Government, and certainly to the citizen who has performed meritorious service, no matter how that debt may be authenticated. But upon what grounds are we, the guardians here of the public Treasury, to take money out and apply it to the private uses of a citizen? Let us take the grounds as stated by the petitioner himself. He alleges that as a contractor with the Post-Office Department—

His service was interfered with impeded, and obstructed by large and numerous

His service was interfered with, impeded, and obstructed by large and numerous bands of Indians, who murdered his agents, servants, and employes; who captured and carried away his horses and mules; who burned his store-houses, station-houses, barns, stables, large quantities of forage, provisions, wagons, harness, clothing, and other property which had been provided for properly conducting the business which your memorialist had contracted with the said Post-Office Department to conduct, and which he was compelled to replace at enormous expense and with tedious delay and damage in order to enable him to perform the service which he had contracted to perform.

The second ground is that he was compelled, in consequence of Indian depredations, by military orders, to abandon a large number of his buildings and stations and also a great quantity of his supplies. Now let us examine that ground first.

The contracts of Mr. Holladay were in the usual form made by the Post-Office Department. They contemplated a vast, important, and very difficult service. He was paid large sums, not undue, in view of the work to be performed; but all of the difficulties and dangers and all the expenses and troubles were contemplated by both parties to all the expenses and trombles were contemplated by both parties to the contract at the time the contract was made.

Now, sir, will any one rising in the Senate state that any contract under which these alleged losses occurred contained a provision of indemnification to this party for the depredations which he alleges destroyed his property? Does any one say so? Can any contract be produced which between man and man would make the contracting party with Mr. Holladay liable for these losses by Indian depredations? Does the letter of the contract say so? Does any paper here brought from the Post-Office Department suggest such an idea that the United States became the unqualified insurers of this contracting party against losses by Indian depredations? Why, sir, the answer must be emphatic and conclusive. There is no such pretension; no word or line can be found in any contract, in any articles of covenant must be emphatic and conclusive. There is no such pretension; no word or line can be found in any contract, in any articles of covenant between Mr. Holladay and the Post-Office Department that bound the United States to pay him one farthing for such losses.

When, then, and how shall the obligation of the Government arise? It must be conceded that it cannot be found in the phraseology of the contract. No interpretation, however ingenious or favorable, can create such an obligation upon the face of that instrument of the Government to pay for one farthing of these losses. Then, how does it come? Is it from the force of war? There was war, a terrible war, flagrant in this country at that time. The Indian tribes unquestionably had an evil opportunity for damage which they would have been afraid to take, which they might have been restrained from executing, but for the fact that the hands of the Government were filled with other and mightier contests. Now, is there any rule of law by which the weakness of the Government to protect the private property of its citizens on sea or on shore creates an obligation to pay that citizen for a loss which arose from the inability of the Government to protect him? It is sufficient to state the proposition to let it answer itself. If this party had been engaged at great expense in transporting the mails of the United States, under some large and beneficial payment to him, between the United States and any foreign country, and a war had broken out, as it did, which swept American commerce from the sea and which disabled the arm of the Government to give the protection they would have wished to give, can it be pretended that the very weakness of the Government would cause it to incur such unmeasured obligations, and that it should be bound for a loss to person or to property of its citizens growing, not out of the infidelity of the Government to its obligations, but out of its simple incapacity to perform them. war, flagrant in this country at that time. The Indian tribes un-out of the infidelity of the Government to its obligations, but out of its simple incapacity to perform them.

Why, sir, such a proposition would be laughed out of any court if any lawyer should venture to suggest the responsibility of the Government to its citizens under such circumstances. If to-day we should be engaged in foreign war and if to-day our enormous, extended, and unprotected seaboard called for the presence of the entire Army of the United States stripping for the time being the western country of its present armed protection against Indian depredations, and the railways which by the great bounty of the Government have been created for public use across the Territories of the United States were to be exposed to Indian depredations, and their locomotives, their trains, their property, their stations were destroyed by some sudden were to be exposed to Indian depredations, and their locomotives, their trains, their property, their stations were destroyed by some sudden unexpected irruption of an Indian force, will it be pretended that because the mail cars were destroyed, the mail service suspended and the caariage of those mails subjected to immense losses entirely outside of matters connected with mails in their transportation, this Government would be bound to replace all the trains of cars, all the disturbed track, all the lost locomotives, all the losses of profit which their mail agent contemplated in the contract he made with them, and in view of which disturbances his compensation had been adand in view of which circumstances his compensation had been adjusted according to his own voluntary act? Why, Mr. President, this case cannot be distinguished from that. There must be something else. I would beg the Senate to pause before they commit this Government to the attitude of an absolute insurer against every vie major, against every foreign foe, against every result of war in dealing with specific contracts with their carriers of the United States mails.

This claim as to its bulk is founded upon such an idea, and that idea I do most earnestly repudiate. Better give the sum ten times over, but do not base it upon any such principle as this. Three hundred and sixty-nine thousand dollars of this $526,000 is expressly based upon the idea that the United States are answerable under their based upon the idea that the United States are answerable under their contracts with Holladay for Indian depredations upon his property used in connection with the transportation of the United States mails. I say in connection with the United States mails, because the great bulk of this property was only incidentally connected with the transportation of the mails. The statement of Mr. Isaac E. Eaton is to be found at pages 10 and 11 of the testimony.

Before I pass from that point, for I do not desire to detain the Senate long upon this subject, I will refer to the so-called precedents found at page 5 of the committee's report, which were read by the honorable Senator from Wiscousin [Mr. Cameron] the other day to show that instances had occurred which had become in his view precedents for payment to mail contractors for depredations by Indians. There were cases. There were that class of exceptions that prove the There were cases. There were that class of exceptions that prove the rule, because they were distinctly stated to be exceptions. The Senate will observe that at page 5, after reciting certain small cases immaterial in amount, the committee say:

Numerous other precedents might be quoted to show that Congress has frequently recognized the existence of an obligation on the part of the Government, under exceptional and hard cases, to indemnify Government contractors for losses sustained by reason of Indian depredations.

But while they report a bill not to grant an amount ascertained by Congress, but to send the party to the Court of Claims where there shall be opportunity of cross-examination and rebuttal of testimony, they say:

With, however-

And this is the case of Mr. Holladay. I read from the report adopted by this committee and made in the Senate in 1877:

With, however, the distinct statement that nothing herein stated shall be regarded as a rule or precedent fixing the liability of the Government to mail contractors in any case wherein the peculiar circumstances of this case as herein presented are absent.

I translate that at once to mean that this particular case under protest is to be accepted, but never as a precedent. Mr. President, that kind of legislation will never do. There are duties to the people of the United States as well as to the individual claimant. There are broad rules and principles of governmental liability which we should be most careful that we do not stretch beyond the claims of right and justice. Therefore, by the very language used by the honorable Senators who adopted that report, there was the careful exclusion, the protest that this case should not be considered a precedent for adopting the principle that the Government of the United States for adopting the principle that the Government of the United States is liable to a mail contractor for depredations by Indians in an Indian country, all of which were contemplated at the time the price was fixed at which he agreed to carry those mails.

Now comes the question, was there anything in the action of the United States military authorities; was there anything in the engagement of the President of the United States, (Mr. Lincoln,) the Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; was there anything in his action which created an obligation that we are bound now to appropriate this money in discharge of? In the nature bound now to appropriate this money in discharge of? In the nature of things, Mr. Lincoln could as well have guaranteed the final success of the war as he could have guaranteed complete protection to this party from the incidents contemplated by his contract at the time he entered into it. It is perfectly plain that Mr. Lincoln realized the importance of the route to the Government; that he saw the importance to the country of maintaining that communication with the Pacific States; and what did he do? Mr. Holladay's own deposition and the deposition of his agent, Mr. Otis, both show that the President of the United States took exceptional interest in this case, and gave exceptional orders for the necessity protection of this party and gave exceptional orders for the peculiar protection of this party and the mail-route which he was operating. He did not leave him to chance. The order of Colonel Chivington is thoroughly explanatory of that. Read it:

Headquarters District of Colorado,

Denver, December 2, 1864.

Sin: I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians.

It was an exceptional action on the part of the President of the United States to protect this party to a degree far beyond the usual amount extended to a mail contractor. If the President felt, as he did feel, and as we can well understand his feelings, that this mailroute was of exceptional importance to be maintained, my answer is that he took exceptional methods and pains to protect it:

I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians, which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As thow runs, I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one. You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

I am, sir, with respect, your obedient servant,

J. M. CHIVINGTON, Colonel, Commanding District.

The affidavit of Mr. Holladay of what passed between Mr. Lincoln and himself is equally strong on that point. He states that the President said to him-I read from page 62-

"These are perilous times, Mr. Holladay, all over our country; my anxiety is great. We have no soldiers to spare, but I will do all in my power." "That," I said, "Mr. President, will not pay me for my losses." His reply was, "You will be reimbursed for all losses and damages; like all patriotic men, you must trust to the honor of our Government," he holding me by the hand while saying this.

That is Mr. Holladay's statement. Mr. Otis testifies to an interview with Mr. Lincoln, as follows:

view with Mr. Lincoln, as follows:

I said, "Mr. Lincoln, unless we have troops to protect us we cannot restock the line; our men will not go out, and if you haven't any troops that you can furnish us, if you will give me permission to raise five hundred or one thousand men, it can be done in twenty-four hours." Lincoln said he could not do that; "but," says he, "this thing must be protected, and it shall be protected, and I will give you a letter to one of my generals," (putting the emphasis upon the word general) and said, "all these generals are not mine; but I will give you a letter to one whom I consider to be one of my generals, and I think will do what I want, and that is General Curtis, at Fort Leavenworth." He then sat down, and with his own hand wrote a letter introducing me, as the general superintendent of the Overland Stage Line, to General Curtis, saying that he had had a full conversation with me, and that he must, at all hazards, take steps to furnish the line with troops, and see that it was thoroughly and fully protected, as it was of the most vital importance to the welfare of the country. I took his letter and presented it to General Curtis. General Curtis did everything that was in his power to protect us, and the line was restocked, and we continued to run it.

Now, what is the result of these facts? It was always in the power.

Now, what is the result of these facts? It was always in the power of this party, in the face of war, to have retired from his contract and given it up; but he saw fit, with the promise of protection as far as was in the power of the authorities to grant it—and no more of course could be asked or expected—to continue to risk this great amount of property, which was incidentally only connected with the transportation of the mails, men by hundreds, horses and mules by thousands, employed in the transportation of passengers, in the transportation of silver and gold bullion from the mines of that region to the Eastern States. The President of the United States promised all in his power. Did that amount to a guarantee against loss? How is this language to be construed? I hold that there was an exceptional advantage, an extra protection not called for by law, not demanded by the contract or the spirit of the contract, which was afforded in this particular case, to this particular individual.

Therefore, when the question is presented of allowing this money to be paid to this claimant on the ground that he lost it because of Indian depredations occurring not only in a time of Indian hostility but in the time of general war, none the less extensive because it was a civil war, it well behooves the Senate to look well to the fact whether they will commit this Government to any such obligation. As I have said before, this debate has begun, and I venture to say that it will end, and no one will rise to read a line of the contract or covenant which would bind the United States for any such claim as is now sought to be enforced against it.

Further, it is a guarantee against losses both directly and indirectly, the result of public war, for which no case of allowance is known to Now, what is the result of these facts? It was always in the power me as a precedent. I remember very well when the case of Dr. Best, of Kentucky, was here discussed in the Senate. It passed the Senate and the House, but it was vetoed by the President, General Grant. That was a case involving the liability of the Government to the citizen for the destruction of his property, although that destruction was for public benefit. In that case, I remember, a house was razed to the ground and the furniture destroyed, lest it might be used by the enemy as a point of advantage in attacking a United States force. That case went so far that it was met by a veto that never yet has been overridden. But what was that case compared to this? There was the case of a man true and loyal to the Government of the United States whose property was destroyed lest it might be used to injure the United States. So far that case went, and that was up to the very verge of the doctrine of the liability of the Government for losses occurring in time of war. But this case is away beyond that. Inside of this case, inside of the doctrine laid down by which it is sought to make this allowance, there are raids upon the Treasury to be numbered by tens of millions of dollars. Therefore it is that I beg the Senate to pause upon the threshold and rather give this money, if we bered by tens of millions of dollars. Therefore it is that I beg the Senate to pause upon the threshold and rather give this money, if we are to be generous at other people's expense,—but not upon such a ground as the committee have recommended you to pay it. You are opening the door to a class of claims; you are opening the door to the admission of a principle which is absolutely fatal, and which I am satisfied is utterly unjust. I say this with a strong and sincere regret, where an active, energetic citizen, engaged in a laudable undertaking, should have met misfortune by the occurrence of war; but in that he is not alone. We sat here a year ago debating another class of losses, those of the merchant-marine destroyed by confederate cruisers, and other losses, indirect, far beyond the loss of the ships themselves—the paralyzation of commerce, the ruin of business upon which that commerce depended for its support; and yet no one dreamed, that commerce depended for its support; and yet no one dreamed, however sad might be the result to the individual, that the Government of the United States would be held liable.

*But, Mr. President, upon what manner of testimony is it even suggested that this great sum of money should be paid out of the Treasury? Suppose there was loss; suppose there was a distinct obligation to pay it; what manner of testimony is it reasonable to ask should be taken before we suffer money to pass out of the Treasury? should be taken before we suffer money to pass out of the Treasury? Ought not the testimony to be of a character that at least would put money in the Treasury when the case was on the other leg. Have we a right to deal with public moneys more carelessly than we would deal with money of a private citizen? After all, what fills the Treasury? It is the labor of this country. Every dollar that flows into it represents the labor of some individual from morn till eve. I do not believe in generosity at public expense. I do believe in justice, and I believe in equity in dealing with those who in good faith have performed their duty by the Government.

Let me examine for one moment the character of the testimony performed their duty by the Government.

Let me examine for one moment the character of the testimony relied upon here. I read now from the appendix to the report of the committee. One instance will be sufficient, I think. Let us take, on page 18, the affidavit of S. O. Jerome. First comes his affidavit, and following the affidavit in smaller type is arranged a statement of the "loss and damage done as per affidavit of S. O. Jerome." I will not fatigue the Senate by reading Mr. Jerome's affidavit, but I will merely say he does not give a single estimated item in his affidavit from beginning to end. He says:

Much damage was done in various ways to the property of the line that Leveld.

Much damage was done in various ways to the property of the line that I could not pretend at this time to detail and estimate.

When the second raid was made on the stage line, and in the year 1865, I was not employed on it, and cannot state anything about it.

Yet we find a specific statement, as if it had been sworn to, attested by the oath of Mr. Jerome:

LOSS AND DAMAGE DONE AS PER AFFIDAVIT OF S. O. JEROME.

Lone Tree Station: August 7, 1864. 9 horses, $200 each. 5 horses killed while escaping from Indians
Liberty Farm: 2 sets double harness, $110 each	220
Summit Station: 200 sacks corn, 22,400 pounds, 12 cents	2, 608

I will ask any gentleman interested in maintaining the proof in this case to find in the affidavit of Mr. Jerome one single figure which has here been added, by whom I know not, as the carefully detailed statement in dollars and cents of the amount of loss. There is not one.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Quite a number of witnesses testified in regard to the value of horses; also in regard to the value of harness; also in regard to the value of thaness; also in regard to the value of the value of corn. Mr. Jerome testifies that these horses were lost or killed; that two sets of double harness were lost or destroyed, and that a certain quantity of corn was destroyed. The value is based upon the testimony of other witnesses. There is great uniformity in the testimony of witnesses in regard to the value of property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will excuse me just a moment I will make another suggestion right there.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Spotswood states in his deposition that he himself made out the estimates appended to these affidavits, and that they are correct. This man swears to the loss of stock. Mr. Spots-they are correct. This man swears to the loss of stock. Mr. Spotswood was the general superintendent and paymaster and paid the money, and he knew the value.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit for the inspection and consideration of the Senate the fact that when we are passing upon the allowance of a great sum of money it is our business to know that it is due before we order its payment. I merely repeat what I have said, that the tabulated statements, giving amounts and values, appended to every one of these affidavits, are not the sworn statements of the witnesses who made the affidavits, but they are prepared by somebody else, added to the body of the affidavit itself, and then not from the facts but from a general assessment of these values in the abstract or concrete, as the case may be, the general statement as to what corn generally was worth, as to what horses generally were worth, as to what mules generally were worth, having obtained a general assessment of what this property generically was worth, that it applied it without the authority of the deponent to his deposition and stated as part of that deposition. I need not say that such testimony falls far below even the standard of an ex parte affidavit.

But there is a gross conflict of testimony outside of that. I do not speak harshly of these witnesses. The fact that they were the employes of Mr. Holladay through that country is a fact that may affect somewhat the weight of their testimony from their natural bias; but I do not hold that it discredits them in point of truth. It would be difficult to find anybody else to make these affidavits through a country like that, and they were the parties having probably the best general knowledge of the facts. The only question is whether a man who goes into court to claim money either against an individual or a government can expect to have it paid upon such matters as ex parte affidavits. What cannot be proved by an ex parte affidavit in the absence of a cross-examination, it is very hard for the human mind to imagine.

Question. Were you at Julesburgh before its destruction by Indians?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Q. Describe what buildings were there.
A. I should judge there were from eight to a dozen buildings of various kinds.
There was a blacksmith's shop there, belonging to the Overland Stage Company.
We had some horses shod down there. There was a home station, a store-house, probably; a good sized barn and store or ranch. I think probably a dozen buildings altogether.
Q. Of what material were these buildings constructed? Were they frame or log?

A. I think one or two were of frame; probably three of them were frame and the balance were of logs.

Q. What, in your opinion, would be a fair valuation for those buildings that were burned?

A. All the buildings at Julesburgh—I should think $10,000 would put up all the buildings that were there in 1863.

Thirty-five thousand dollars is the bill; $10,000 is this man's estimate of the cost of putting them all up.

mate of the cost of putting them all up.

Q. When was Julesburgh destroyed; do you know?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. According to your general information, how long after you were there was it destroyed?

A. I was there in November, 1863. My recollection is that it was destroyed about eighteen months after that.

Q. You do not know, as a matter of fact, whether the buildings had been increased prior to the time you were there until they were destroyed or not?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Were you ever at Little Laramie station?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe that station and the buildings that were there.

A. It would compare with the others—it was of pine logs, I should think, probably worth $600. It was not far from timber. Not a very costly building.

On a prior portion of that page he describes the stations:

O. Describe the stations on the lower route-

That is the route abandoned by order of Colonel Chivington-

That is the ronte abandoned by order of Colonel Chivington—

Describe the stations on the lower route; state generally what they were built of; about the size, and what, in your opinion, the value was there at that time.

A. The station at Pass Creek, I should judge, was twenty feet square, and of pine logs covered with dirt. I staid there one night. The station near Halleck was partly of boards and partly of logs. The station at Medicine Bow was probably about the size of Pass Creek station; I should say from twenty to twenty-five feet in dimensions on the ground and eight to ten or twelve feet in height; of logs, and covered, as a rule, with dirt.

Q. Can you state what the cost of them would be at that time?

A. I should say from $300 to $600.

Q. Did you ever build one there yourself, or have any particular knowledge of the building of any?

A. We built a stable at Camp Collins, and built nearly all the quarters at Fort Halleck; chopped the logs, and hauled them down from the timber, and put them up; we hauled what timber there was in them from Laramie Peak.

The Senate will judge, he being actually engaged with his own hands in putting up these buildings, describing their rude composition, their utter cheapness, whether he had any interest, for he had been in the employ of the Government. He had no feeling that I can find expressed in the deposition of animosity to the party claimant. He certainly was cross-examined by the honorable Senator who conducted the investigation so as to produce all sides of his mind upon this subject. If that man is correct we find one most conspicuous case of gross injustice and inaccuracy—$35,000 for a lot of buildings that could be erected for $10,000. Let Senators take this estimate throughout reported by the committee and find a block-house or a station or a barn put at any such price as $300 or $600 at the outside. So far as my examination of these figures is concerned they are estimated at $2,500 for the station at Liberty Farm, $6,000 for horses, barns, mated at $2,500 for the station at Liberty Farm, $6,000 for horses, barns, &c., destroyed at Spring Hill, at Antelope station-house, barn and corral, $5,000. I have been unable to find throughout the whole of this matter any such insignificant charge as $300 or $600 for one of this matter any such insignificant charge as $300 or $6000 for one of those stations, but they are all put at the magnificent figures of from $2,500 to $5,000 or $6,000. I merely mention this as an illustration of the utter looseness of this calculation, of its utter unreliability.

Mr. McPHERSON. Has the Senator observed the case at Jules-

Mr. BAYARD. I have just noted that at Julesburgh and said that while claim is made for $35,000 for the twelve buildings, the express proof is given by a man acquainted with them that he would restore the whole for $10,000. I do not stand here to settle the question of

Mr. BAYARD. I have just noted that at Julesburgh and said that while claim is made for $35,000 for the twelve buildings, the express proof is given by a man acquainted with them that he would restore the whole for $10,000. I do not stand here to settle the question of accuracy of these estimates. I know this body is the worst in the world almost to ascertain such facts. I only refer to it to show the inefficiency of a legislative body like this in attempting to deal with such facts upon ex parte testimony.

Mr. President, if there be a claim that we can recognize in this case upon the grounds of law and equity, I am anxious to do it. If Mr. Holladay did give, as he stated, thirty thousand dollars' worth of his supplies for the use of the United States Army, I wish to see him paid in full for that; but I cannot agree upon any ground that has yet been suggested by the committee or in the course of the debate that in law or equity we can permit the Government to become insurers for any such business as was carried on by him. Because he held a postal contract we did not pledge the Government to be such insurer. So far as this claim consists in a remuneration to a citizen for private property "taken for public use," in the language of the Constitution, I propose that he shall be justly compensated. I will give every opportunity even after this great lapse of time, for which I do not hold him wholly irresponsible. If the Government got his property and used it for its troops let the Government pay him fully for that property. He has lain out of that money a long time, and interest may not be allowed to him upon an unliquidated claim. I will vote for such an amendment as shall submit that question and that question alone to the Court of Claims, where he may be compensated for such portion of his private property as was taken for public use, but I cannot with my view of what is lawful and just, consent that the Government shall before a court or in the Senate be held liable as an insurer under a contract which belongs thought no right to the the court down and declare that certain things should be received as evidence which they knew the law forbade them to receive as such. That was my vote then; it will be so now. There is a statute of limitation. Raise the bar and give him to-day the chance to make good his claim against the Treasury for such portion of his property as the people of the United States have had the use of but for which they have not paid him. So far will I go, but no further in this allowance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have some remarks to make upon the bill now pending, but I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the public interest requires an execu-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. All the Senator from New Jersey wishes is to have the floor for to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be so considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned. fourteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 10, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GILLETTE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There is a matter to which I would like to call the attention of the Chair. On Saturday last I took occasion to reply to some remarks by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Newberry;] but before replying I went to the reporter and obtained an exact copy of his remarks as taken down, which I would like to have read.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what is the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GILLETTE. As soon as the remarks are read, I will explain. The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires, then, to make a correction of the Congressional Record?

Mr. GILLETTE. I do.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do. The Clerk read as follows:

I say what the bank of which I am a director authorized me to say; because I went to them to say how I should vote on that question.

Mr. GILLETTE. This statement of the gentleman's, upon which

Mr. GILLETTE. This statement of the gentleman's, upon which my remarks were predicated, was stricken from the Record by him; and my inquiry is simply whether, after a member has submitted remarks which have been replied to in this House, he can knock from under the reply its foundation, by striking from the Record the very remarks to which attention was called?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the transcript of the reporter's notes, which is entirely different from what the gentleman has had read. I do not know where the gentleman obtained his copy. It differs from the report sent to me before I had made any correction in it. If the gentleman has any such report as he has had read it is not the official report of the reporters. Besides the first part of his alleged quotation takes part of a sentence that relates to something before, and has no connection with or reference to the last part of his quotation, and utterly perverts what I really did say.

I hold in my hand and will send up to be read exactly what the reporter took down. There was considerable confusion, two or three asking questions at the same time. It is in the writing of the reporter.

I ask the Clerk to read the writing of the reporter.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Wait a moment. This is a practical question. I say what the bank of which am a director authorized me to say. I went to them to say how I should vote on

Mr. GILLETTE. The very words which I have just had read, and which the gentleman struck out from the RECORD.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Wait a moment.

The Clerk (continuing) read as follows:

I said: "You, as bankers in the central city of Michigan, tell me what is your opinion I ought to do." And they said: "Vote for a refunding bill at 3 per cent." That is what they told me, without any condition as to taxation.

That is what they told me, without any condition as to taxation.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in this case I did what it behooves every member of this House to do in a question of such importance as the one before this House. I inquired of my constituents, acquainted and experienced in the matter in hand, as to the best thing to do. I am free to say that when desiring information on a public question, I ask men who are acquainted with the subject. If it is a question of navigation, I ask seamen what in their opinion I ought to do in reference to the pending question. If it is a question of agriculture, I ask farmers what it is best to do in regard to that subject-matter. If it is a question of finance, I go to men experienced in finance, and I ask what is best to be done. And I did it in this case. The remarks that the gentleman from Iowa has printed in the Record are not the remarks he made before this House; which statement I submit with all due deference to him. He made no allustatement I submit with all due deference to him. He made no allusion to me in such way I could take it that he meant me. I have only learned since that he did. He there states that a member of this House acknowledges he is under instructions from the national banks as to how to vote. And I read exactly what he did say to show I could not have had the most remote idea that he referred to me:

One gentleman after another has stated what would be satisfactory to the banks, and one gentleman has stated to the committee—that he is under instructions from a national bank.

Stated to the committee!

Now, I say he is not warranted in making any such statement as that from any remarks I made; that is, if he referred to me. He says one gentleman stated to the committee "that he is under instructions from a national bank." As I had said nothing of the kind, I had no reason to believe he referred to me, and I did not notice that remark at the time. If he had said that which he has since added in the report in the RECORD, I would have done so:

Lest I do the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] injustice, I quote his language as taken by the reporter.

Now, that statement by the gentleman from Iowa now printed in the RECORD was not made in this committee at all. The gentleman has done precisely what I did—corrected his remarks. I have merely corrected my remarks, and made them exactly what I intended to say what is the fair interpretation of the report, and what I think I did say in substance; which was, that in their opinion it was better for the country that the 3 per cent. bill should pass rather than by its failure the credit of the country should run risk of injury.

Mr. GILLETTE rose. Mr. GILLETTE rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a difficult matter, and always has been, to draw the line where a gentleman should and should not have the opportunity of correcting his remarks. The practice has been to permit such corrections, if he did not destroy the subthe ruling and the allowance, and there is hardly a day when members of the House speak that they do not, in the same way as the gentleman from Michigan, change or modify the language used by them in debate.

Mr. GILLETTE. One word. I submit that the gentleman did change the substance and the meaning of his remarks most emphatically. And I further state that the remarks which he sent to the desk as being the report of the reporter included precisely the words I quoted, and which were given to me by the reporter verbatim.

Mr. NEWBERRY. The word "because" is not in there as it was given by him, which alters the whole sense of the quotation.

Mr. GILLETTE. It does not alter the sense at all. Not only that, but every member of this House, unless it may be the gentleman himself, and of course I take his word for it, understood my reference to but every member of this House, unless it may be the gentleman himself, and of course I take his word for it, understood my reference to him. The reporters for the press understood it, and mentioned it in the papers yesterday morning. If he did not understand it, then it was simply because he was not paying attention. I only added the report from the reporter's notes, which I had before me when I spoke and designed to read, but did not have time. I added his exact words, so that the slightest injustice might not be done him.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen constantly in the House, instead of having their remarks appear in the next day's Congressional Record, reserve them for revision. It is done constantly, and the Chair does not think any harm comes from it.

CALL OF STATES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, as required by the rules, will now call the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint the States and Territories in apphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference; and under this call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures can be presented and appropriately referred; and on this call resolutions of inquiry directed to heads of the Executive Departments are in order for reference to the appropriate committee, which latter resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week,

MAILS TO FOREIGN PORTS.

Mr. SHELLEY. I submit the following resolution for reference: Resolved. That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to add the following to the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department: For the transportation of mails to foreign ports, $1,500,000, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $30 per mile per annum for transportation one way in such line of steamers equal in construction, accommodation, safety, and speed of those of any line on the ocean in that trade as the Postmaster-General may in his discretion, after public competition, contract with, for terms not exceeding ten years.

The SPEAKER. That resolution is not in order under this call.

Resolved by the Cincinnati Board of Trade and Transportation, That Congress be requested to have a skilled and scientific test and report made by proper officers of the Navy Department of the various devices suggested for the abatement of the smoke nuisance in burning soft coal, and of their relative economy and efficiency; and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the carrying out of the objects of this resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. O'REILLY. I rise to a question of privilege. I wish to call attention to an article from a Washington correspondent that appears in the New York Sun of the 7th day of January. It says:

Three Congressmen from New York have been absent almost the entire time since the session began.

I am named as one of the three. The fact is, sir, that I have not been absent from my seat in this House one day since this session began except on Monday, the 6th day of December. I would not care to refer to this at present, but I have been honored on former occa-sions with similar notices, and I thought it was about time I took notice of it.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the amendments, ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That from and after Wednesday, the 12th of January next, this House meet at 11 o'clock a. m.

INDIAN SERVICE.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives copies of all papers which have been filed in his office during the last eighteen months relating to complaints against any Indian agent, inspector, clerk, or other officer in the Indian service, and to inform this House what, if any, steps have been taken to prosecute the same.

Mr. BROWNE. That should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this reported from a committee?
Mr. DUNN. It is not.
Mr. HASKELL. I would suggest that the resolution had better be referred

Mr. HASKELL. I would suggest that the resolution had better be referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Dunn] asks consent to submit the resolution at this time for consideration. If it should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, under the rules it will have to be reported back to the House within a week.

Mr. DUNN. Why refer it? It only asks the Secretary of the Interior to inform the House what papers of the character referred to are in his office. The answer of the Secretary of the Interior may very properly be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee may have this information already.

Mr. HASKELL. I make the suggestion of reference because some months since the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs submitted, and by the committee was instructed to report to the House, a similar request, which the House adopted. My recollection is that the same information is being sought for by the Indian committee, if it has not already been obtained.

Mr. DUNN. If that be true—

Mr. HASKELL. I am not positive; that is my recollection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] makes what is in the nature of an objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] can have the resolution referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, under the rule, it would come back in a week.

Mr. DUNN Lide not understand that the gentleman from Kansas

Affairs, and, under the rule, it would come back in a week.

Mr. DUNN. I do not understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] has positively objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes cognizance of a qualified objection. When a gentleman rises in his place and suggests that a resolution should be referred to a committee, the Chair considers that as equivalent to an objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DUNN. If what the gentleman states has transpired, this resolution can do no harm.

The SPEAKER. That is not for the Chair to decide.

Mr. HASKELL. I will make my objection absolute.

The SPEAKER. The resolution can be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DUNN. Very well; let it go there.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EVENING SESSION FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following: which was read, considered, and adopted:

Ordered. That on the third and fourth Thursdays of January and February, at five o'clock p. m. or at such other hour as the House may on that day indicate, a recess shall be taken until seven and one-half o'clock for the purpose of considering such matters as may be brought before the House by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LANDS FOR UNIVERSITY PURPOSES.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 1327, to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table. My object is to ask that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in and a committee of conference requested thereon.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken from the

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. BENNETT. I now move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be requested. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR SURVEYS.

Mr. NICHOLS. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Public Printer be requested to print forthwith for the use of the Committee on Commerce the reports of the engineers charged with the surveys of rivers and harbors, made to the Chief of Engineers, for the year 1880, provided to be made by the river and harbor bill passed at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be in the nature of instructions to the Public Printer to give preference to the printing of the reports indicated in the resolution.

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. GOODE. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Yorktown Celebration, which is authorized to report at any time, to Yorktown Celebration, which is authorized to report at any time, to report back with amendments the joint resolution (H. R. No. 337) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis and the British forces at Yorktown, Virginia.

The joint resolution was as follows:

Whereas provision has been made for the erection of a suitable monument at Yorktown, in Virginia, to commemorate the final victory achieved at that place on the 19th day of October, 1781, by George Washington and the Continental Army, with the assistance of their French allies under Count Rochambeau, over Lord Cornwallis and the British forces; and

Whereas it has been also determined by the Congress and the people of the United States that the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown shall be celebrated in a manner befitting the historical significance of that event and the present greatness of the nation; and

Whereas it is eminently proper that the Government and people of the United States should continue to make grateful recognition of the illustrious services rendered by the noble Lafayette and his generous countrymen on that memorable occasion: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the Government and people of France a cordial invitation to unite with the Government and people of the United States on the 19th day of October, 1881, in a fit and appropriate observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown.

The first amendment reported from the committee was to strike out.

The first amendment reported from the committee was to strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask consent—
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the committees should be now called for reports. The Chair will recognize gentlemen who desire to ask unanimous consent after the committees shall have been

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. WHITTHORNE reserved all points of order upon the bill.

BURLINGTON, CEDAR RAPIDS AND NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3442) to provide for the payment of the amount due the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company for transportation of United States mails; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS IN QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the letter from the Secretary of War transmitting the report of the Quartermaster-General in relation to claims arising under act of July 4, 1864, and moved that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES, ETC., OF UNITED STATES COURT OFFICERS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk, and that it be now put on its passage. There is a unanimous report by the Committee on the Judiciary recommending a substitute for the resolution, and it is necessary that the matter should be acted on now.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That a committee of five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States, to ascertain whether any, and, if any, what, abuses now exist, or have existed, or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise. That said committee shall have power to employ a clerk and the services of a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and to report at any time. The expenses of said committee shall be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this

Mr. SPRINGER. What committee does the resolution come from?
Mr. KEIFER. I object.

PROFESSORS OF MATHEMATICS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for concurrence in an amendment of the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 5047) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

After the word "boards," in line 6, strike out to the end of the bill as follows:

"And no person shall be a professor of mathematics in the Navy who is more than thirty-five years of age, unless he shall have been continuously engaged in scientific duty under the Navy Department, or in the duty of instruction at the Naval Academy from and about obtaining the age of thirty years until the date of his appointment."

Mr. BREWER. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I ask concurrence by the House in this amendment.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate concurred in.

Mr. BREWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON obtained the floor.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] who objected a while ago to the resolution which I desired to bring up, did so under a misapprehension, and wishes now to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.] He will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Virginia again in due time.

JAMES M. MASON.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6105) for the relief of James M. Mason, and that the same be now taken up for consideration. It simply gives the supreme court of West Virginia the right to settle a claim.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, the right of objection being

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whereas in the case of the United States vs. James M. Mason, in the district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia, on the 29th day of May, 1878, a preliminary injunction was issued restraining the respondent from doing certain things therein described, the claims of said James M. Mason for damages sustained by reason of said preliminary injunction are hereby referred for examination and adjudication to the said district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia. Said Mason may, at any time within six months from the final passage of this act, file in said court a petition in the nature of a motion in said case, which thereafter may be amended, at the discretion of the court, in the same way that other pleadings in said court are amendable; which petition shall set forth all the material facts upon which the said party relies in support of his claim; and the court shall thereupon order such notice to be given to the United States or to its representatives as it shall deem proper.

Such further proceedings shall be had in regard to the trial or hearing of said cause, liability for damage, measurement of damages, and otherwise, as in the case of similar causes between individuals, and shall be determined upon such legal or equitable principles as may be applicable thereto.

If it shall be determined that anything is due to the said Mason, the said court shall render judgment therefor against the United States for the amount so found to be due to him, and certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for payment; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby anthorized and directed to pay the same, and the sum necessary for such payment is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON. This bill as proposed to be amended makes no appro-

Mr. WILSON. This bill as proposed to be amended makes no appropriation. Mr. FIELD.

Mr. FIELD. Let it go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FIELD] objects unless the bill be referred to a committee.

Mr. BOWMAN. It has been considered by a committee.

Mr. WILSON. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims, and makes no appropriation.

Mr. FIELD. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out at the end of the bill the following:

"If it shall be determined that anything is due to the said Mason, the said court shall render judgment therefor against the United States for the amount so found to be due to him, and certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for payment; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same, and the sum necessary for such payment is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to know whether the committee proposes to strike this out, or whether it is the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON. It is my motion to strike out.

Mr. ROBINSON. The House ought to understand this matter.

Mr. WILSON. The facts are simply these: A case is pending before

Mr. ROBINSON. I think we should proceed carefully in a matter of this sort. I desire to have an explanation. It seems that the gentleman from West Virginia proposes something which the committee did not recommend.

Mr. BURROWS. I think I will object. This matter is too important to be disposed of in this way.

Mr. BOWMAN. Allow me a moment's explanation.

Mr. BURROWS. I think it best to let these matters take the regular course.

MONUMENT AT WYANDOT MISSION, OHIO.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 214) relative to a monument at the Wyandot Mission, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, and that the House now proceed to consider the same.

Mr. BREWER. If this is for the erection of a monument, I object.

Mr. BOUCK. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WARNER. I think the Committee on Appropriations should give us at least one day's notice before taking up a bill of this kind. It seems that we are passing bills and then considering them afterward. I received this morning a report relative to the Army bill which was passed last week. Nobody has seen this Indian appropriation bill in print; and we certainly are entitled to one day's notice before taking it up.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of taking up and considering at this time the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. And pending that motion I move that all general debate be closed in one minute.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done, as the bill has not yet been considered in committee.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House resolve itself into com-I move the House resolve itself into the Committee considered in committee.

Mr. WELLS. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into committee for the consideration of that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole, and the business first in order for consideration is the Indian appropriation bill

Mr. WELLS. I move that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read by sections for amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

For additional payment of the said interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000; in all, $26,500.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike those words out. Preceding paragraphs in the bill already make appropriation for the payment of these same Indian interpreters. This proposes to make an additional appropriation, to be disbursed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the pay of these same interpreters. I think this the Interior, for the pay of these same interpreters. I think this method of making appropriations is a vicious one, and ought never to be indulged in if the committee having the matter in charge, as this committee has, have already in preceding sections made specific appropriation for the purpose indicated. These very Indian interpreters have already been provided for by previous sections of the bill, their salaries fixed, their pay ascertained, and therefore I can see no good reason for providing additional salaries to be disbursed under the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It is for that reason, sir, I move to strike out that portion of the bill which proposes to give additional payment to these interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It is for that reason, sir, I move to strike out that portion of the bill which proposes to give additional payment to these interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000.

Mr. WELLS. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will not prevail. The amount of $4,000 is appropriated for the purpose of allowing the Indian Bureau to employ additional Indian interpreters when there is necessity for so doing. If no such necessity shall arise, of course this money will not be used. Last year we appropriated precisely the same amount.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. It is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. WELLS. I desire to state in this connection that the Department of the Interior asked for $500 for each one of these interpreters, and an additional appropriation of $6,000 for the purpose of employing special interpreters. The committee refused to grant more than $300, which was the sum appropriated last year, and in this paragraph we have recommended an appropriation of $4,000 instead of $6,000 for additional interpreters. It is precisely the sum appropriated in the bill last year. From information derived from the Department by the Committee on Appropriations, I deem it to be important this appropriation should be provided for. There are many instances in making treaties and in conventions between the commissioners and the Indians when it becomes necessary to employ additional interpreters, and interpreters of a different class from those regularly employed in the different tribes. I hope, therefore, the appropriation of $4,000 will not be stricken out.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding what has fallen the different tribes. I hope, therefore, the appropriation of $4,000 will not be stricken out.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding what has fallen from the gentleman who has the bill in charge, I do not see any good reason why the pay of these interpreters for the respective Indian tribes should not be fixed and ascertained. I am not to be understood as alluding to the impropriety of trusting the Secretary of the Interior with this power, but I am speaking generally of all persons who may be in charge, that, in reference to the disbursements of money, the salary should be fixed, and not various sums appropriated for the same purpose. I do not believe in giving the heads of Departments any discretion except what may be absolutely necessary in the execution of the duties properly pertaining to them. There is no reason why the salaries of the interpreters of the respective tribes should not be fixed and ascertained by law, and paid according to the provisions of law

provisions of law.

It is bad policy, Mr. Chairman, whether you look to the Department of the Interior or the Navy Department or the War Department, or any other department of the Government, to make appropriations of a general character. We have wisely, in this regard, followed the practice of the country from which we borrow most of our laws, parliamentary and otherwise, because we will find if we look to the action of the British Parliament in making the appropriations for the heads of its great departments that it leaves little or nothing to their discretion when it is possible to make appropriations specific in their character. Such are the appropriations made for the navy of Great Britain. Such is the character of the appropriations made for the army. They are so that they cannot use the money appropriated for the support of the army in India for the support of the army at home.

priated for the support of the army in India for the support of the army at home.

I say, therefore, this bill should be made to conform to the true rule on the subject of making appropriations specific. They will have no difficulty, I presume, in getting interpreters at the compensation which has already been fixed in the bill, without unnecessarily investing the Secretary of the Interior, be the incumbent whom he may, with the power to spend additional amounts. I can see no reason for it. In keeping with this view, I shall move to strike out other appropriations in the bill of a like character which I think to be in bad policy, and not only inexpedient in themselves and unnecessary, but opposed to a just and economical administration of our Indian affairs and tending rather to an extravagant expenditure of the public money.

And, sir, while we are considering these appropriations for the Indians, it should not be forgotten that the money we are appropriating in nine cases out of ten is the money of the Indians, due to them from the Government, and therefore we should be cautious in making any expenditure of that money other than that required by treaty, and for this reason in addition I insist upon striking out the words which I consider unnecessary to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will not prevail. I believe that the proposed amount, $4,000, is a very small one for the good that will result from it. It is necessary that a discretion should be lodged with the Secretary of the Interior in this matter. It is found that many times it is necessary to move these interpreters from one agency to another, and the additional expense here provided for is thereby incurred. The amount proposed is a very small one for the purpose mentioned, and any one familiar with the necessities of that service cannot claim that it is excessive. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not prevail, but that the amount recommended by the Committee on Appr on Appropriations will be allowed to remain. I know, personally, that this is an important matter.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLS. I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that that would not be in order at this time.

Mr. WELLS. Then I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, $6,000.

For buildings at agencies, and repairs of the same, $20,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out lines 193 and 194, which provide "for necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, $6,000."

There is a prior section in this bill which provides that $3,000 shall

There is a prior section in this bill which provides that $3,000 shall be paid to each of five Indian inspectors, making an aggregate of $15,000. This paragraph which I propose to strike out provides for their traveling expenses the additional sum of $6,000.

I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out this latter clause for the very reason which the committee, by its judgment, have chosen to retain in the bill the clause which I previously moved to strike out. This undertakes to fix a specific amount which it is assumed will be necessary for the traveling expenses of these five inspectors. As a matter of course the duties which may be required to be performed under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior must determine what is the necessary amount of travel done and the expense incident thereto. If you are going to give the Secretary of the Interior, having this bureau in charge, discretion in this matter it seems to me we might as well leave the entire amount blank and not attempt to specify any amount whatever, leaving to him entirely the question of discretion as to the amount. If the opinion of the committee upon the preceding amendment which I proposed is to prevail, question of discretion as to the amount. If the opinion of the committee upon the preceding amendment which I proposed is to prevail, I would like to ask the question, how do you fix the amount at $6,000? How do you ascertain what will be the necessary sum for the Department to expend for such purpose? Already a large salary has been provided for these inspectors in the preceding two lines of the bill, and what object under the law further than this do you attempt or propose to accomplish by this additional sum?

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I insist that it is too late to raise this question. We have already passed that section or paragraph to which the gentleman from Mississippi proposes his amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman is mistaken; we have not yet passed it.

Mr. VALENTINE. The Clerk had commenced reading line 197, providing for contingencies in the Indian service.

Mr. HÖÖKER. The gentleman is undoubtedly mistaken.

Mr. VALENTINE. I leave the decision to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to rule that the paragraph to which the gentleman from Mississippi refers had been already passed over; but if the gentleman from Mississippi states that he rose in time to offer the amendment, the Chair is compelled to recognize it.

Mr. HOOKER. I rose immediately after the reading, as I understood it.

Mr. VALENTINE. The Clerk had read the succeeding paragraph before the gentleman offered his amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I have not heard the Clerk read beyond that, and I could not therefore offer my amendment prior to the time that I did

'The CHAIRMAN. Under the circumstances the Chair will rule that the amendment is in time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the circumstances the Chair will rule that the amendment is in time.

Mr. HOOKER. I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I consider this an unnecessary appropriation for this purpose. As I have stated, you have already provided in this bill for the payment of five inspectors at a salary each of $3,000 per annum. Now, what functions do these inspectors perform? They go, I presume, periodically, under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, their authority and orders being to visit the various Indian agencies. You are then paying, according to this proposed bill, two sets of agents. You pay one agent at the various Indian agencies a fixed sum or salary, ascertained by law, whose duty it is to advise the head of the Department as to everything connected with that agency. Yet in addition to this you have another set of agents called inspectors, whose duty it is to visit the agencies from time to time and see how they are being conducted. You propose, therefore, to pay out a sum of $6,000 in addition for their traveling expenses. In point of fact that may not be required, for the reason that these inspectors or additional agents may not be required to visit more than one or two agencies. It may be that no inspection will be required, or that they will not find it necessary to visit any agency at all, or they may be located in that immediate region of country. They may be required by their other duties to stay there. They are the agents coming between the head of the Department and the local agencies. That function ought to be performed by the agent already required by law to make his reports to the Secretary of the Interior.

[Here the hammer fell.] ports to the Secretary of the Interior.
[Here the hammer fell.]
The amendment was not agreed to.
Mr. REAGAN. I offer an amendment after line 196, to insert the

For the purchase of 1,280 acres of land for the Alabama, Coshatte, and Muscogee Indians, in the State of Texas, adjoining the 1,280 acres of land given to them by said State, situated in Polk County, Texas, $5,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to make said purchase; and for pay of an agent for said Indians for the year ending June 30, 1882, $500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BAKER. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to make a point of order against it at this time?

Mr. BAKER. I reserve the point of order. It is not in the direction of economy. If it is a proper amendment it ought to have been brought in by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman as insisting upon his point of order at this time?

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it for a moment

Mr. BAKER. Then I will reserve the point of order.
Mr. REAGAN. I recognize the fact that the amendment is subject to the point of order if gentlemen see proper to make it. Its object is to increase the amount of land belonging to the Alabama, Coshatte, and Muscogee Indians in Polk County, Texas. Owing to their fidelity to the people of Texas during their struggle for the independence of the applying the Government gave to these Indians twelve bundred and republic, the Government gave to these Indians twelve hundred and eighty acres of land. There are nearly three hundred of them altogether. They have lived there for more than forty years upon that land. The Government has never been called on to aid them, although the State government has occasionally contributed to their aid, and for some years has kept an agent at Government expense to protect their interests.

These Indians find the land they have is not enough to meet their necessities. It is understood land immediately contiguous to theirs may be bought to the extent they want. They want double the quantity, that is, another twelve hundred and eighty acres; and it is understood that quantity of land can be bought for three or four dollars an acre. They do not ask the Government for rations to support them; but to give them the land on which they can make a living. Their desire is in the future as in the past to earn their own living. And I can say for them I doubt whether there is any people in this broad land more honest, law-abiding, and faithful to their duties than those Indians. One of them is a son of an Indian who received a medal Indians. One of them is a son of an Indian who received a medal from General Jackson by a vote of Congress, and is a man of respectability, proud of the honor of wearing his father's medal, won in the service of the United States.

They want also, if the Government will give them the means of increasing their lands, to have an agent to look after their interests. So far as the citizens around them are concerned, I know from personal inquiry they consider them good people and useful in the vicinity on account of their work; they can be employed in aiding to clean the cotton crops and in picking the cotton, as well as in cultivating their own small farms. They are industrious and law-abiding, and have always been faithful to the white people. I am sure, if their history, action, and character were known to the House, gentlemen would not withhold from them the means to obtain a small addition to their land to enable them to make a living for themselves.

It is proposed that they shall have an agent at $500 a year. I do not know if more is necessary. I have mentioned that amount in the amendment somewhat at random. But it is thought a faithful man to look after their interests would be useful in protecting their rights in case of collision with outside people. I know the proposition is subject to the point of order, but I am sure if gentlemen had all the facts before them they would be disinclined to make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on the increasing their lands, to have an agent to look after their interests.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on the

Mr. BAKER. I must insist on the point of order. The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and for pay of employés, and for pay of two special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $32,500.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the clause just read. will endeavor to explain why it is that I think this appropriation ought not to be made. It will be perceived that the committee have ought not to be made. It will be perceived that the committee have made appropriation for so many agents at the various Indian agencies. They have made appropriation for five inspectors. They have appropriated $15,000 for the pay of these five inspectors, and in addition to that the sum of $6,000 for their necessary traveling expenses. Now it is proposed by the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, in addition to these specific appropriations which have been made, to make another expenditure of $32,500. And this, sir, is one of the many items in this bill which if members will turn to the concluding pages of it they will see swell this appropriation paging of it they will see swell this appropriation pagin legiting. made, to make another expenditure of $52,000. And this, sir, is one of the many items in this bill which if members will turn to the concluding pages of it they will see swell this appropriation, not in legitimate payment of what the Government owes in the shape of interest under its solemn treaty stipulations with the Indians, or what it owes for the purchase of supplies, of clothing, of agricultural implements, &c., but that it is an appropriation of the funds of the Indians and the Government for the pay of a multiplicity of officers wholly unnecessary to the proper administration of the Indian Bureau. Therefore, sir, when we come to the grand total of this bill we find it is $4,531,866.80.

I say after the Committee on Appropriations have made specific appropriations of the character I have indicated for the proper agents at the Indian agencies, and have then provided for five inspectors at the large pay of $3,000 a year each with $6,000 for their traveling expenses, I cannot see why it is now that an additional appropriation of $32,000 shall be made for contingencies of the Indian service.

What are these contingencies? Where arising? Where occurring? The Indian service has been appropriated for so long that it seems to me the committee having this bill in charge ought to understand distinctly what will be the legitimate expenses of the conduct of the Indian service, which ought to have been so classified that each particular item of expense should have been indicated and the necessity ticular item of expense should have been indicated and the necessity for it shown. I am aware that sometimes deputations and delega-tions may come from Indian tribes here not provided for by law and where necessarily a contingency arises. But that is not such a contingency as is here provided for:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental exenses of Indian agencies and of their offices—

You have already provided for that-and for pay of employés and for pay of two special agents at $2,000 per annum

Where is the necessity for these special agents? agents at the Indian agencies, and you have already provided for inspectors of those various agencies, and now it is proposed to provide two additional Indian agents. The difficulty in the management of Indian affairs is precisely the difficulty which arises in all cases where the attempt is made to govern too much. The effect is to multiply offices which are unnecessary, and which of course lead to additional expenses in the payment of salaries. [Here the hammer fell.] Why these two special agents? I see no necessity for them.

Mr. WELLS. This appropriation of $32,500 is the same as was made last year, and is the usual appropriation made annually for some years

Mr. BLOUNT. Under authority of law.
Mr. WELLS. And is made under the authority of law. There is a provision in the Revised Statutes authorizing this appropriation. These two Government agents are provided so that in case of the death or removal of any agent there will be some one to look after the interest of the Government as well as of the Indians.

So far as itemizing all these different expenditures is concerned, it would be impossible to do that in any appropriation bill. I have here in my hand a list of the items, covering several printed pages, the amounts of which run as low as five dollars, some even as low as five and ten cents. It would be impossible to itemize them in an appropriation bill.

I will say further that the estimate of the Department was for $35,000; but the Committee on Appropriations reported $32,500, the $30,000; but the Committee on Appropriations reported $32,500, the same as was appropriated last year for the purpose.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] having this bill in charge, whether he means to say that there is a law or statute authorizing this appropriation; or does he refer simply to an item of an appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress or at some previous session? Does the gentleman and extend any incoming? understand my inquiry?

Mr. WELLS. I ask the Clerk to read certain sections of the Revised Statutes which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2076. The several compensations prescribed by this title shall be in full of all emoluments or allowances whatsoever. But where necessary, a reasonable allowance or provision may be made for offices and office contingencies.

Sec. 2077. Where persons are required, in the performance of their duties, under this title, to travel from one place to another, their actual expenses, or a reasonable sum in lieu thereof, may be allowed them, except that no allowance shall be made to any person for travel or expenses in coming to the seat of Government to settle his accounts, unless thereto required by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to show that those sections do not apply to this case at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. How is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] moved an amendment and spoke five minutes in favor of it; and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] has spoken in opposition.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to by the gentleman from Missouri do not justify this appropriation at all. On the contrary, if we are to judge, as we ought to do properly and legally, as a court would construe those sections, they absolutely inhibit such an appropriation as this. What is this appropriation for?

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental exenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and for pay of employés—

Now, I thought the pay of employés was fixed and ascertained by law, not left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else-and for pay of two special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $32,500.

It is that item which, in my mind, constitutes the chief objection to this appropriation, the item for the creation of two special agents. They are unnecessary in the management of Indian affairs. The gentleman from Missouri tells us that section 2076 of the Revised Statutes, under the title of "Officers of Indian affairs; their duties and compensation," justifies this appropriation. What is that section?

The several compensations prescribed by this title shall be in full of all emoluments or allowances whatsoever.

That shows that the object of the statute was to prevent any additional compensation to the amounts prescribed in previous sections, unless for certain reasons.

But where necessary, a reasonable allowance or provision may be made for fices and office contingencies.

There is not one word there about special agents, not one word about the creation of another office, but limiting the powers of the offices already in existence and the office contingencies that might arise under them. The gentleman also had read section 2077, which is as follows:

Where persons are required, in the performance of their duties, under this title, to travel from one place to another, their actual expenses, or a reasonable sum in lieu thereof, may be allowed them, except that no allowance shall be made to any person for travel or expenses in coming to the seat of Government to settle his accounts, unless thereto required by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, I hold that so far from authorizing the creation of a new Now, I hold that so far from authorizing the creation of a new office with an additional salary, the very sections referred to by the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. Wells] absolutely inhibit such new offices. The legislation found in the Revised Statutes was intended to limit the Committee on Appropriations to what had already been indicated as the proper sum to be expended therefor. So far from the statute referred to justifying the giving to the Secretary of the Interior the power to create two additional offices with a salary not fived by law and which cannot be found anywhere in the statute. not fixed by law, and which cannot be found anywhere in the statute-books, it inhibits the creation of those offices, and if they are created under this bill it will be in violation of the statute which the gen-tleman himself has cited. [Here the hammer fell.] I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. Hooker to strike out from lines 197 to 201, both exclusive, and upon a division there were—ayes 30, noes 63.

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Wells and Mr. Hooker were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 39, noes 89.

Mr. HOOKER. I will withdraw the point of order that no quorum has voted, if a vote is allowed in the House on my amendment.

Mr. WELLS. I cannot agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will continue the count.

The tellers resumed and concluded the count, and reported that there were-ayes 44, noes 104.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri:
For interest on $157,400, at 5 per cent., under the direction of the President, per cond article of treaty of October 21, 1837, $7,870.
For support of a school, per fifth article of treaty of March 6, 1861, $200; in all, 1070

Mr. PRICE. With the consent of the gentleman having charge of this, bill, [Mr. Wells,] I move the amendment which I send to the

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the clause just read the following:

"And the money hereby appropriated, and all money heretofore appropriated to said Indians, being the Sacs and Foxes at the Iowa agency, and which has not been drawn by them, shall be paid to them when they shall sign a pay-roll by the head of each family, the correctness of which pay-roll shall be certified by the agent in charge of said Indians."

Mr. WELLS. There is no objection to that amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Winnebagoes:
For interest on $604,909.17, at 5 per cent. per annum, per fourth article of treaty of November 1, 1837, and joint resolution of July 17, 1862, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to expend said interest for the support, education, and civilization of said Indians, $40,245.45.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the words "and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby dijust read the words "and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to expend said interest for the support, education, and civilization of said Indians" and to insert "and said money due on said fund held in trust for said Winnebago tribe of Indians shall be paid to the governing chief of said tribe."

Mr. Chairman, I am induced to make this motion because of the Mr. Chairman, I am induced to make this motion because of the fact that when the Indian commission was sent to the Indian Territory for the purpose of looking into the condition of the Indians we had occasion to visit the Winnebagoes residing at their agency in the State of Nebraska. It will be remembered by those who are familiar with the transactions of the Government of the United States with this tribe of Indians that there was originally due to them as a trust fund held by the Government $1,000,000, upon which, under treaty stipulations with these Indians, the Government paid them annually 5 per cent. interest. Some time after the execution of this treaty and the creation of this fund and its deposit with the Government an act was passed by Congress authorizing the construction of certain the creation of this fund and its deposit with the Government an act was passed by Congress authorizing the construction of certain buildings in the Winnebago agency, many of which buildings, when we visited that Territory, we found to be wholly unoccupied. Yet, contrary to what I believe to be justice to the Indians and good policy on the part of the Government, the money belonging to these Indians, held in trust for them by the Government of the United States, was, by the terms of the act of Congress, expended for the construction of these edifices which are comparatively useless for the advancement of the comfort of the Indians. This expenditure left $800,000, upon which the Government is now paying $40,000 a year interest to these Indians. When we visited them the chiefs having the management of their affairs told us that the money due by the Government of the United States is annually expended in the purchase of expensive agricultural machinery, such as we saw lying in the open fields, eaten up by decay and rust. They said, "Not one dollar have we seen of the money which the Government annually appropriates for our benefit, not out of its Treasury, but from our trust fund."

efit, not out of its Treasury, but from our trust fund."

Now, I undertake to assert that every single dollar of the $40,000 Now, I undertake to assert that every single dollar of the $40,000 annually due these people, numbering not more than fourteen hundred, is appropriated for purposes in regard to which they are not consulted. Yet in point of civilization, in point of knowledge of their property rights and business interests, they are probably as advanced as any other tribe of Indians with whom the Government has dealings. This is the policy which has prevailed for years, taking the money of these Indians and appropriating it not as they desire, not as their interests require, but as the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian agents may choose to determine. These Indians reported that for years they had not received a dollar per capita of the $40,000 which the Government annually spends ostensibly for their benefit; money which the Government owes them, and which this bill properly appropriates, but which it improperly directs shall be expended under money which the Government owes them, and which this bill properly appropriates, but which it improperly directs shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Where can you find a community embracing fourteen hundred souls and having an income of $40,000 a year, payable on bonds held in trust by the Government, who would be willing that any officer should say, "I will undertake to determine how every dollar of your fund shall be appropriated?" This is an unwise investment of discretion in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior; it is an unjust appropriation of the income of these people, without reference to their wishes and without consulting the five or six chiefs who are the governing power of that nation. We are taking the whole of the $40,000 to which these Indians are entitled, and allowing it all to be expended according to the discretion of an officer of the Government who does not reside in their midst and is not acquainted with their peculiar wants.

midst and is not acquainted with their peculiar wants.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WELLS. Mr. Chairman, I doubt the propriety of this proposed change in what has been the uniform policy of the Government with reference to these Indians. I think this matter ought to be left as it has been heretofore. I have not had time to read the lengthy report in relation to this tribe of Indians; but the bill proposes to carry out the recommendation of the Department, which I feel to be more thoroughly advised on this subject than myself or other members of this House. Consequently, I very much doubt the propriety of changing the language of the bill as reported by the committee. The amendment of Mr. Hooker was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows, under the head of "Winnebagoes:"

For interest on $78,340.41, at 5 per cent. per annum, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the erection of houses, improvement of their allotments of land, purchase of stock, agricultural implements, seeds, and other beneficial objects, $5,917.02; in all, $44,102.47.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out in the clause just read the words "improvement of their allotments of land." I make this motion for the same reason that prompted me to make the motion with regard to the preceding paragraph. So long as I may have a seat on this floor I shall deem it my duty to oppose all appropria-tions for these Indians in such terms as those of this paragraph and a seat on this floor I shall deem it my duty to oppose all appropriations for these Indians in such terms as those of this paragraph and the preceding one. The Committee of the Whole is passing upon these measures sub silentio merely upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe without understanding what it is doing. I do not believe, sir, that the members of this Committee of the Whole are giving that attention to the interest of these Indians in making these appropriations now being passed which the importance of the subject, in my judgment, imperatively demands. So prone have we been to follow in the track of the omipotent Committee on Appropriations that, like the blind horse of the tread-mill, we are going all day and yet making no progress except in the way of spending the money of these Indians.

I am opposed to this section of the bill because it proposes to give the discretion to the Secretary of the Interior embraced in the words which I have proposed to strike out, "improvement of their allotments of land." That is in keeping with the policy which the Secretary has long held to and constantly urged upon Congress. He urges upon you at this Congress to pass a general bill, providing all lands of Indians now held in common shall hereafter be held in severalty. Is this Congress prepared to carry out, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, such a policy in all its intents and purposes? He has not dared to apply it to the five semi-civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, who are as capable of understanding their interest as the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else; but he has undertaken to apply it to the savage tribes. This clause in this bill is in keeping with the policy the Secretary of the Interior has inaugurated, and which he intends to carry out if he can get the sanction of Congress.

In my judgment, whenever you coerce the Indians to take their of Congress.

In my judgment, whenever you coerce the Indians to take their lands in severalty, to make an allotment of their lands to them, giving the Government the power to sell the remainder and put the proceeds, in the shape of bonds, into the Treasury of the United States, you will only be paving the way to do for all of the savage tribes precisely what you have done in regard to the Winnebagoes; namely, to have the proposition presented to you again by the Committee on Appropriations to take every dollar of their income and spend it without consulting the beneficiaries; to take the income of their own money—the interest which you owe them on their own money—and expend it according to the theories and fancies and ideas of the incumbent of the Interior Department and the Indian employés who act in subordination to his authority. subordination to his authority.

The very fact, sir, that there has not been an effort to apply this principle to the five semi-civilized tribes, to the Indian who is capable of understanding his rights and capable of maintaining them, and who is prepared to defend them with an intelligence like that, sir, which the Choctaws, the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles exhibit before your Indian Commissioner, delivering speeches which would do credit to any nationality on earth, not only with reference to the beauty of style in which they are couched, but the statesmanlike ideas which characterize them in speaking of their own interests and their own affairs—I say, sir, that the very fact there is no attempt made to apply the same principle to these semi-civilized Indians shows that to the more intelligent, the more highly educated, the more civilized, the more advanced of the Indian tribes you would not attempt to inaugurate a policy which it is proposed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to enforce upon the savage tribes of Indians. of Indians of Indians.

In other words, sir, if this policy prevails and the allotments are made in severalty, and the tribal relations, which is the great bond of union holding these Indians together, is once destroyed, you will then see between the two waves of civilization rolling from the Atlantic and the Pacific the Indian at last hemmed in, with no longer any frontier to drive him to, with no longer any ground where he can take refuge; but you will see him in the midst of the tidal waves of civilization from either ocean bound hand and foot, his property sold, and the proceeds in the shape of bonds put into the Treasury of the and the proceeds in the shape of bonds put into the Treasury of the Government, and the income from them, which should go to him, taken by fraud, force, or violence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FROST. Mr. Chairman, while I agree with the preliminary remarks which have just been made by the gentleman from Mississippi, I cannot agree with those immediately preceding the close of his eloquent speech. He has delivered an attack all along the line against what he terms the policy inaugurated by the present Secretary of the Interior. I think if he will look back to the messages of our Presidents in the past and the reports of their Secretaries of the Interior he will find that the whole of our Indian system, that the policy of all successive Administrations, has looked forward to the time when the Indian shall have his property allotted to him in severalty. That was the theory upon which these five civilized tribes were established upon the present Indian Territory, that the time might come, by locating them together and applying the instruments of civilization to their welfare and advancement, when they would be prepared to assume the responsibilities of property owners—a responsibility, Mr. Chairman, which the history of civilization teaches to be absolutely necessary to the constitution of civilization and to the elevation of the human race.

The gentleman from Mississippi foresees most unfortunate results as the elevation of the human race.

The gentleman from Mississippi foresees most unfortunate results as likely to follow from this allotment in severalty. He tells us that the Indian, the wild, untutored savage, will be swindled out of his property by designing white men, and that, after having obtained the pecuniary proceeds of this property in our possession, we will begin to squander them through our legislative bodies. I am at a loss, sir, to see how by giving a man the absolute title to his property, title in fee simple, we facilitate his parting with it. What, on the contrary, has become of the property of the Indians which has been held by them in common?

them in common? them in common?

Let me point to the history of the Poncas. Let me call the attention of this committee and of the country to the history of Chief Joseph, who was carried away by force of arms from the country which he had inherited from his fathers, carried away from the fair mountain air of Idaho into the malarial atmosphere of the Indian Territory, where within two months of their arrival one-fourth of Territory, where within two months of their arrival one-fourth of their number perished from the ague. Let me call the attention of this committee to an article published by Chief Joseph in the North American Review about six months ago, where he demands the same rights which are accorded to every other American citizen, and where he demands that he shall not be subjected to the arbitrary control of the Secretary of the Interior. He demands that he shall not be relegated to a slavery far worse, Mr. Chairman, than any to which the African race has ever been subjected on this continent; for at least the slaveholder of the past protected the life of his slave if only the slaveholder of the past protected the life of his slave, if only from interested motives, but it seems that the interest of the United States Government points rather to the total destruction and extermination of the savage; at least that would be the inference if we are to adopt the statement which has been so ably advocated by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph. I desire to say a few words in reply to the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] who has just taken his seat. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the illustration given as to the result of the policy that the Government proposes to pursue in regard to these Indians is strikingly illustrated in the case of the Nez Percé Indians, to which the gentleman has referred, and to that I desire briefly to call attention. Now, sir, it was my good fortune to have been able to go into the Territory inhabited by these Indians, and there to look into their condition, on which occasion we visited the camp of Chief Joseph, the chief of the Nez Percé Indians, whose wonderful retreat before the Army of the United States is only equaled by the famous retreat of that other distinguished general in former times. I heard him speak to his people and to the commission. I saw the condition of his people, the condition to which they had been brought by the Government; and the illustration which has been adduced by my friend from Missoari is a striking illustration of how terrible is the result of the policy the Government has adopted toward these tribes. As to the Nez Percés on the one side of the line and the Modocs on the other, with their celebrated leaders at their head, we saw their people dying fact, Mr. Chairman, that the illustration given as to the result of the with their celebrated leaders at their head, we saw their people dying at their feet and perishing, helpless and uncared for, in the unwholesome air of the Indian Territory, under the fostering care of the Government.

What put them there? They were put there, Mr. Chairman, by the same baleful power and policy of the Government of the United States which took them unwisely from the northern latitudes where they had been born and reared, a locality which was endeared to them by associations, and conveyed them into that malarial region of the Indian Territory to live or die there, whichever they could.

It was the same policy which now proposes to coerce the principle of the allotment of land in severalty, and require them to divide their property whether they want to do it or not. My friend asks the question, Would the Indian be any less able to take care of his property, or would the power to protect it decrease, if it was allotted in severalty? I say yes, because it is proposed to limit the power of alienation only for twenty-five years, and after that time the power to alienate and dispose of his property exists and there is no protection alienate and dispose of his property exists and there is no protection in the hands of the Government that can be applied to the care of the Indian. What, sir, would become of them under such circum-stances? In less than twenty-five years more the history of the Indian would have to be rewritten; but it would have to be written in such terms and in such language as, in my judgment, would reflect no credit upon the policy of this great nation.

The very illustration to which attention has been called of the Nez Percés and Modocs shows that the Government has removed these Indians from the only country where they could have lived, where the air to them was genial; lands which were endeared to them by familiar associations, and removed them into a region where they have ever since been dying like sheep in the shambles. If this policy is carried out, such as is indicated in this measure, it will only consign them to the Indian Territory, where they would be located with the consent of the Indian tribes upon lands which are there; and even now the question is being raised whether these lands belong to the now the question is being raised whether these lands belong to the Government of the United States or not, and if so, if they are not, like the other public lands, subject to homestead location, occupancy, and purchase, whereby even this slender reservation (according to the construction which is to be placed upon that question) is threat-the construction which is to be placed upon that question) is threatened to be taken away from them.

I say that the policy of allowing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the fund, thus discriminating according to his discretion for the improvement of allotments, is a dangerous power with which to invest him whose theory is that that is the best method of taking care of the Indians. The Indians themselves, Mr. Chairman, are the best judges of their own interests, and we are bound by the solemn terms of our treaties with them. They not only hold the absolute patent of the Government, but hold their lands in common, and desire to hold them in common—determined to hold them in common—but yet you propose to force them to consent that they shall hold them in severalty and submit to allotment whether they desire it or but yet you propose to force them to consent that they shall hold them in severalty and submit to allotment whether they desire it or not. Such a proposition, sir, in any civilized community, would shock the legal sense of the world. It is certainly not in accordance with the emphatic and figurative language of the great President Jackson, that these lands should be theirs "while water flows and grass grows;" theirs to hold now and in all future time. It is not in accordance with the terms suggested by the great iron-hearted Jackson to say that you will now give, through the Committee on Appropriations, power to Congress to overturn the treaties which have been made with them and place them upon a footing which is neither inst in with them and place them upon a footing which is neither just in principle nor wise in practice.

I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Collecting and subsisting Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico: For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona, $310,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge on what data this recommendation is made to expend $310,000 for collecting and subsisting the Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico? and also—

To subsist and properly care for the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona.

How and upon what data and on whose recommendation do you

How and upon what data and on whose recommendation do you fix the sum of $310,000 as necessary for that purpose?

Mr. WELLS. The committee were governed by the estimate of the Department and also by past appropriations. Last year we appropriated $320,000 for Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. After conference with the Department we reduced that sum $10,000, making it $310,000 instead of $320,000, on the ground that these Indians were partly supported by agricultural pursuits.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri who has the appropriation and expenditure of this $310,000?

Mr. WELLS. The Department: the Indian Bureau.

Mr. WELLS. The Department; the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman says the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Bureau. That is what I want to know.

Mr. WELLS. If the gentleman will read the estimates he will find there the very language that is used in the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. That is what I suppose. This is copied from the estimates, and I wanted the Committee of the Whole to understand

Mr. WELLS. This appropriation is very important. Those Indians have been on the war-path for a long time, and this sum is necessary to sustain them for the ensuing year.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $315,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge how many of these Indians have been collected on the reservations?

Mr. WELLS. Twenty-five thousand.

Mr. Wells. Twenty-nve thousand.
Mr. HOOKER. On all of the reservations?
Mr. WELLS. These Indians we are appropriating for here are wild Indians. They have been gathered on these reservations from different parts of the country, and have given a great deal of trouble. The amount appropriated last year was $305,000. We were assured this year that that amount was not sufficient, and the Department asked an appropriation of $350,000. The committee recommend $315,000. It is an annual anymoviration made from year to year.

000. It is an annual appropriation made from year to year.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is not the same clause which appeared in the last appropriation bill with the use of these Indians.

an increase of $10,000, and whether that increase is not on account of a deficiency

Mr. WELLS. More Indians have been brought into the reservations. The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For support and civilization of Joseph's band of Nez Percé Indians in the Indian Territory, $15,000.

Mr. FROST. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1006 insert

"Provided, That said Joseph's band shall be transferred to such Indian reserva-tion north of the parallell of latitude forty-five degrees north as the Secretary of the Interior may select, and that the expense of said transfer shall be paid out of the sum appropriated for contingencies of the Indian service."

Mr. FROST. I do not desire to make any remarks upon this subject, but would ask the consent of the House to have read a stenographic report of a speech made by Chief Joseph before a Senate committee

Mr. WELLS. I reserve the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri make the point of order ? Mr. WELLS. Mr. FROST.

Mr. WELLS. I do not make it now; I reserve it.
Mr. FROST. I desire to state, before the remarks of Chief Joseph shall be read, that every single member of the committee, all the Senators and Representatives on it, promised when they came back to Washington they would not remain quiet in their seats until the crime that had been perpetrated on Joseph and his band should be righted. I hope that this House will take this opportunity to right that wrong.

I believe the amendment is in order. We may discuss that hereafter. But I do hope the House will take this opportunity to right a wrong which has been rung in our ears ever since it was committed. There is not a single newspaper in this country that has not at some time told the story of this outrage. I hope that this House will not remain deaf to the appeal that comes to us from every side.

The Clerk read as follows:

time told the story of this outrage. I hope that this House will not remain deaf to the appeal that comes to us from every side.

The Clerk read as follows:

When we quitfighting I surrendered to Howard and Miles. I wished for peace. My people wheled for peace. At that surrender we came to an understanding with those two generals. It was a true understanding. We supposed we were to be sent back to our own country, but we were brought down here. In consequence of having been brought down here we are all going to ruin and death.

Why do the authorities at Washington still hesitate to carry out their agreements! I shall never forget that surrender and the understanding we had at that time. There is one sentiment I wish to express to you: Our country is very dear to us. We never committed murder. We never did anything to justify you in taking our lands away from us. We never raised. We never committed any deprodavaway from us and we had been driven from them. I now see what has become of that rash act and the way we were treated in our own country. I can say that all of my people who were lost were lost in a good cause, defending their homes. Our lands were lost in that trouble, and I think I ought to be permitted to select a home without being compelled to go into a country that the people do not see fit to go to and be compelled to live in. We ought not to be forced into a country, I ace nothing here. It is not a rich country. It is not a rich country will not permit us to live. Besides, this is a poor country. I ace nothing here. It is not a rich country. It is not a healthy or good country at all. In a force of the country will not permit us to live. Besides, this is a poor country. I are nothing here. It is not a rich country. It is not a healthy or good country at all. In a force of the country were to a supplied to the country with the country will not permit us to live. Besides, this is a poor country. It all not not all they cannot. Wherever you see grass growing abundantly there you find rich people. Here

Mr. WELLS. I say to my colleague [Mr. Frost] that improvements have been made on this reservation and buildings erected for

Mr. MAGINNIS. This will certainly add to the expenses of the Government. If this amendment is adopted it will require three or four times the amount appropriated for contingencies to effect the removal of these Indians to some more northern location.

We all know about the Nez Percé war, how it broke out in Idaho, and the murder of citizens living there; how these Indians traversed Montana on their way to the British possessions, leaving behind them a trail of blood and murder and rapine. We all know they were on the point of entering the British dominions when they were surrounded and captured by General Miles. I deny that there was any arrangementor agreement that they should be sent back to their own country, where they could not live, because the relatives and friends of those they murdered would be sure to destroy them. They surrendered un-conditionally, and were settled in the Indian Territory, and ought to

Mr. FROST. I think the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Magin-Nis] has certainly fallen into some error in his statement of the causes of that war. However, I do not want to enter into that discussion now, although I am prepared to do so. What the Chair is now called upon to decide is the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order. It does not propose to change existing law, and it is germane to the bill. It is questionable whether the appropriation would have to be increased or not to carry out the provisions of this amendment. As it does not change existing law, and is germane to the bill, the Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment having been ruled in order, I de-

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment having been ruled in order, I desire to address the committee upon it.

The gentleman from Montana, [Mr. Maginnis,] as I believe, has stated truthfully in the rough outline he has given of the outbreak of the old Nez Percé war. Be that as it may, they have been removed to the Indian Territory, have lived there for some years, and have now become thoroughly acclimated. They are on as good a piece of land as there is in the world, and just as well located as it

To remove these Indians would be worse than folly, would be disadvantageous to the Indians, even if there was a favorable northern location to which they could be removed. As the gentleman from Montana has intimated, there is no place near their old reservation where they could stay twenty-four hours in safety.

It was in consideration of that fact, after due deliberation over the subject and consultation with all the authorities, that this location was made. The same thing may be said with regard to the Poncas. Whatever wrong may have been committed in the original removal of the Poncas, it is agreed now on all hands that having been removed to a good reservation, favorably situated, it is best for them

I hope that no provision will be incorporated into this bill contemplating the removal of a single Indian of this band from where he is

Mr. HOOKER. I think the amendment of my friend from Missouri [Mr. Frost] is a very proper one to be made to this bill, and I was very glad to hear the Chair announce that the amendment, being ger-very glad to hear the Chair announce that the amendment, being germane and not changing existing law, was in order.

We come now to consider the merits of the proposition. It is conceded by those gentlemen who have addressed the committee that these Indians were put where they now are without their consent. If Chief Joseph's statement, which has been read from the Clerk's desk, is to be taken as true, at the time of the surrender there was a distinct understanding that he could not be forced into the Indian Territory. How far the Indian Department carried out the terms and stipulations of the surrender, which we were extremely anxious to obtain, I do not now undertake to say. However the war may have originated, whichever party may have been in fault, it was conducted by Chief Joseph with his remnant of a band as gallantly as any war that history records. that history records.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] says that these Indians have been removed to a salubrious region of country. I visited their encampment in 1878, when there was not a residence there, not even a log cabin, but every Indian man and woman were living in tepees and tents in a malarial region of country where hundreds of their comrades were dying about them.

Comrades were dying about them.

I think the enlightened and intelligent chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who has always shown so much sense of justice in whatever he has done, though it has been my misfortune at times to differ with him as to questions of policy, is now satisfied, as are a majority of the committee, that it is impolitic to take an Indian from a northern region where he has been raised and locate him in the Indian Tomation Tomatics. dian Territory.

The gentleman from Kansas says that these Indians have been acclimated. So they have been, with a loss of 50 per cent. of their number. They have been acclimated as all are acclimated who go to a malarial region of country, one-half of them dying. That is the way the Nez Percés and the Modocs both have been acclimated. It was a correct removal by the Government, the Government forcing these Indians to go there without their consent. Even in the thing ing these Indians to go there without their consent. Even if nothing had ever been said on the subject, it is bad policy to take these Indians to that country, unless we hold to the theory which is held by some, that the best Indians in the land are the dead Indians; unless we want to subject them not only to the bullets of our soldiers but also to the baleful influences of a malarial region in which they cannot possibly live. That is exactly what the Government has done to the Modocs and Nez Percés.

But it is said that it is now too late to remedy the wrong; that many of these Indians are already dead; that the tribe has been deci-mated by the diseases of the climate in which they have been forced mated by the diseases of the climate in which they have been forced to live. I say it is not too late to do them justice. The remnant of these Indians now living there are pining to return to their native homes. It is true that you may imprison them with a cordon of bayonets around them, and may keep them in that malarial country until disease and death have swept the last of them from the land; but with the temper and disposition of the Indians their present abode is to them a prison. You might as well say to them at once, "We will incarcerate you for life in that region of country." I think the amendment of my friend from Missouri is not only germang to the hill but ment of my friend from Missouri is not only germane to the bill, but is a proper and just proposition, and ought to be adopted.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the Committee of the Whole by referring to the war in which Chief Joseph was engaged or to the circumstances attending it. It is sufficient to say that those Indians were captured after a bloody and long-continued struggle, and it was determined by the Government after the fullest consideration to place them on a fertile reservation in the Indian Territory. ation to place them on a fertile reservation in the Indian Territory. It is well known that this small band of Indians, three hundred and seventy in number, could not safely be returned to the section of country in which they originally lived; such a policy would be provocative of another Indian ontbreak.

The only argument in favor of this proposition is the statement that these Indians are suffering in health and dying in excessive numbers. I hold in my hand a report on this question made in 1879, and later reports will show a still better condition of affairs. But this report shows that the location is not an unwholesome one, and that the Indians are as healthy as can be expected. It further shows that these Indians, coming from the extreme northern country, were almost all of them subject to pulmonary diseases, and that the loss of life from the alleged malaria in the Indian country is less than from pulmonary diseases in the country from which they came. So that these Indians in point of health are in better condition than in the region from which they were brought.

Mr. HOOKER. Particularly those who are dead!
Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say further that the Government has already expended many thousands of dollars—
Mr. FROST. How many?
Mr. BAKER. I am not able to state the exact amount, but I think

Mr. BAKER. I am not able to state the exact amount, but I think it is more than $50,000. That amount, as I understand, has been expended in building homes for these Indians, in making improvements for their benefit, in furnishing them with wagons and agricultural implements. These Indians are now becoming acclimated, and are as healthy as they could be if they were returned to the country from which they came. All this investment which the Government has made for their comfort would be wasted in the event of their return; and besides we would be subjected to the peril of being involved in new Indian troubles and wars. I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be one of the most unwise things that could be done to return this slender band of three hundred and seventy Indians to that country that they deluged with blood, that they ravished with the hand of vio-lence, and where as we all know they would be likely to be decimated by the rifle of the frontiersmen more rapidly than by the malaria of the Indian country.

Mr. MAGINNIS. They are nearly all under indictment in Idaho for murder

Mr. FROST. We can send them to Montana; they need not go to Idaho. Mr. MAGINNIS. Well, Mr. Chairman, they went through Mon-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] that debate on this question is exhausted.

Montana [Mr. Maginnis] that debate on this question is exhausted. The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. Maginnis. I renew the amendment. These Indians went through Montana; and they left a bloody trail through the Territory of a people who never injured them. Year after year they traveled through that country on their way to the buffalo fields; year after year they went back; and year after year they were kindly and hospitably treated by our people. No man among them was ever killed; no woman among them was ever injured. Nothing was dealt to them except kindly hospitality. But a war broke out—a war with another people alien to us and far away. They went through our Territory and they ravaged it. They killed unoffending men and innocent women, people who had never undertaken to do them an injury. After men, people who had never undertaken to do them an injury. After a dreadful and bloody fight (and I honor the skill and bravery with which Chief Joseph conducted that campaign) they were honorably captured and became prisoners of war unconditionally, subject to anything the Government might do with them. The Government did the very best thing it could possibly do with them.

Mr. FROST. Did General Miles ever make that statement? Did he ever deny Chief Joseph's statement?

Mr. MAGINNIS. According to the terms of surrender as publish.

Mr. MAGINNIS. According to the terms of surrender, as publicly stated at the time, it was an unconditional surrender.

Mr. FROST. I beg pardon of the gentleman. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] remarked just now, I believe, that Chief Joseph never made any such statement.

Mr. HASKELL. I remarked that it was just as impossible for Chief Joseph to stand up and make the speech read from that desk as it would be for him to fly heavenward.

Mr. FROST. Will the gentleman from Montana permit me just a

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana yield?

Mr. MAGINNIS. No, sir. Mr. Chairman, in taking the position that we do on this question, it is not because we of the West think "there is no good Indian except the dead Indian." We are seeking the benefit of the Indian. It is not the people of the West who make Indian wars. We do not profit by them. These wars are owing to the fault and folly of your Government policy. The ignorant interference of eastern philanthropists in Indian affairs is too often the cause of these wars: and one of the greatest crimes of our Indian reliev of these wars; and one of the greatest crimes of our Indian policy is that we continually bring about a clashing of interests between the white people and the red people of the frontier. I deny the statement so often reiterated here, that the western people are cruel toward the Indians. Western men—the men who climb those mountains and the Indians. Western men—the men who climb those mountains and cross those plains—are men of nerve and courage and energy; and such men, wherever you find them, are men of tenderness and humanity and justice. Western men, so uniformly kind to their dogs and horses, certainly would not be unkind to any man, black, white, or red, who wore the semblance of their crucified God. I say, with due regard to the Indians and whites, with an intelligent desire to avoid conflicts between them, that sometimes we endeavor to present views on this floor which, if they did prevail, would be better not only for the whites but the Indians; and I say, sir, that the most cruel thing you could do to these Indians, the most unjust, would be to remove them to that Territory where they have personal antagonisms; where there are many who regard them as the murderers of their relatives and friends and neighbors; and where, as I have already stated, they would be tried and convicted of murder on the indictments pending against them.

against them.

Mr. FROST. I rise to a personal explanation. It is the first time I ever have done so, and I hope it will be the last. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] made a statement that the speech which was read was not Chief Joseph's speech. When I offered that speech to be read I told the House it was Chief Joseph's speech. Therein would seem to lie some question of veracity. While I do not wish that any misconception may arise out of what I have said, and certainly that no injustice shall be done to the gentleman from Kansas, I must insist upon setting myself right in this matter. Now, sir, a Senate committee, accompanied by several members of the House, among others General Clark, of Missouri, who is now present, visited Chief Joseph's camp, and, in response to a question put to Chief Joseph by Senator GROVER, of Oregon, Chief Joseph, standing under one of the very few trees which cast a shadow upon that country, made a speech in the Indian language, which was translated upon the spot by an interpreter and taken down by the stenographer who accompanied that committee. General Clark will remember distinctly the powerful effect that speech made upon us at the time, for really it was considcommittee. General CLARK will remember distinctly the powerful effect that speech made upon us at the time, for really it was considered as an extremely able speech. I was present myself when the speech was made, and I subsequently had conversations with Chief Joseph, through an interpreter, which convinced me of his capacity to make a far abler speech even. I therefore assert that to be Chief Joseph's speech, although I do not understand the Nez Percé language. Mr. HASKELL. I desire to relieve the gentleman from Missouri from any misapprehension that I called in question the truth of his statement. I have not a particle of doubt the occurrences he has narrated are absolutely true; but I happen to be entirely familiar with Indian speeches made by Indian interpreters, and I happen to be familiar with the current rumor that it is said upon good author be familiar with the current rumor that it is said upon good authority to come from this same interpreter, who claims a great deal of credit for the handsome Indian speech he made. [Laughter.] There have been twenty different delegations from the Indian Territory to Washington, and to my personal knowledge interpreters have been brought with them who are capable of writing good Indian speeches. It was as common as any other rumor on the frontier twenty-five years ago to have these men sit down and compare notes as to their ability to make Indian speeches. You can ask any man reared on the border any question concerning this idea and he will tell you that is a common occurrence. I have no more idea that Chief Joseph to-day knows anything about that speech in English, although he may have been where my friend said he was and purported to have made the speech.

Mr. Frost's amendment was rejected.
The Clerk read as follows:

General incidental expenses of the Indian service:
Incidental expenses of Indian service in Arizona: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies, support and civilization of Indians at the Colorado River, Pima and Maricopa, and Moquis Pueblo agencies, $20,000, and pay of employés at same agencies, $16,000; in all, $36,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the paragraph just read, and I make that motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the twelve paragraphs, making thirteen including the one I propose to strike out, are all appropriations for incidental expenses connected with Indian affairs. I do not know that I shall be able to impress the committee with the view I take of this question, but it is in keeping with the amendments which I offered to this bill when it was under consideration at the last session of Congress, and which I believe were properly founded in principle. We are following in the same groove we were in then, and the reasons for taking the steps we took then are precisely the same which are given for taking the steps now, namely, that we have a precedent in previous appropriation bills.

The incidental expenses in these thirteen paragraphs for the particular localities, without specifying the number of employes or the number of agents employed, or any limit or restraint upon the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, are in the first paragraph, $36,000; in the second, $32,000; in the third, $4,000; in the fifth, $10,000; in the sixth, $4,000; in the seventh, $5,000; in the eighth, $13,000; in the ninth, $18,000; in the tenth, $24,000; in the eleventh, $11,000; in the twelfth, $20,000; and in the last $2,000; making an aggregate of appropriations for incidental expenses of $178,000.

Now, sir, there is no limit to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as to how this may be applied. He may take the whole of the $178,000 and apply it to the first items specified here, or to anything he chooses. He may distribute it where and in what manner he pleases. The discretion in him is unlimited and absolute; and it is that sort of an appropriation in reference to Indian affairs or in is that sort of an appropriation in reference to Indian affairs or in reference to money in any particular that ought to be restricted and narrowed down to specific items or specific amounts and paid to officers who are authorized to receive it in pursuance of law. If we are to go on thus from year to year these items which now embrace $178,000 will increase without limit. The two items which I have already called attention to in a preceding part of this discussion, amounting to six hundred odd thousand dollars, are appropriated and placed absolutely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior without specifying the pay of the officer himself or the mode and manner in which the expenditure is to be made. If you can go on in this way, tacking on appropriations according to the estimates or otherwise, you may swell the total amount of the bill to millions in addition to what is reported by the committee. There is no limit to addition to what is reported by the committee. There is no limit to what you may succeed in doing in that way. I feel it my duty, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the committee to the indefinite character of the appropriations here proposed to be made, and ask that appropriate amendments be inserted to cover that feature, at least so that we may have a more specific appropriation in every case when we are required to take money out of the Treasury for any pur-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the paragraph.

The amendment was not agreed to.
Mr. WELLS. I move that the committee now rise.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Let us get through with the bill tonight if possible.
Mr. WELLS. I withdraw the motion if it is not desired that the committee now rise.

Mr. HOOKER. I renew the motion.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 71.

So the motion was not agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of ten citizens provided for in the act of April 10, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the lines just read from 113 to and including 116, and insert what I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the Pre-ident under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

Mr. WELLS. If the gentleman from New York will consider his amendment as pending, I will move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point of order upon that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illineis, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill of the House (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year filling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the funding bill. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRCT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The business of the morning hour is concluded, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the standing order of the day.

The bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order upon the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] which will be no quorum voting.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 5, after the word "support," it is proposed to strike out "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms."

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 17, noes 12;

Mr. KERNAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KERNAN. If these words are not stricken out, you cannot punish a vicious person unless he goes habitually about and asks or receives alms.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not understand the Senator from New York. Does he say that unless this clause is stricken out a hardened criminal cannot be punished?

Mr. KERNAN. If we do not strike out the words the clause will read this way:

That all vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia, without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.

I propose to strike out "who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of receiving alms," so that all vicious persons, all willfully idle or disorderly persons, will be punished, with pickpockets and others, without confining it to those of such classes who habitually go about asking or ing it to those of such classes who have receiving alms.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator from New York will permit me, what becomes of the word "or" in line 5?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is already stricken out.

Mr. VANCE. Was that stricken out on motion of the Senator from New York?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR.]

chusetts, [Mr. Hoar.]
Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Massachusetts moved to strike that out, and he also moved to strike out "idle" and insert "willfully idle" after "vicious," in line 3.
Mr. VANCE. The Senator from New York, I believe, voted for the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike that out.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not remember whether I did or not.

Mr. VANCE. And now the Senator proposes to remedy the defect after concurring with the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. KERNAN. I did not concur with the Senator from Massachusetts, but I said that that would not obviate my amendment and I should insist on having a vote upon it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the amendment strikes out the power to arrest a juvenile beggar, which I think is the most important part of the bill. I appeal to every Senator to bear me out when I say it is impossible to walk from the Capitol to the Treasury with-

I say it is impossible to walk from the Capitol to the Treasury without being solicited on an average at least ten times by little boys and girls who are growing up in vice and wickedness, and it is to prevent that rather than to punish hardened criminals that I think is the great merit of the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Let me ask the honorable Senator does he consider that a proper punishment for these youthful vagrants will be to bind them over to $300 security or send them to jail for one year? Is not the proper cure for such class of offenders to be found in a well-regulated system of police? Is its possible that there is not a discretion to-day reposed in the policemen of this city to curb all of this youthful vagrancy which the honorable Senator objects to in common with us all? The supervisory power and the necessary discretion which ought to be reposed in committing magistrates and in a well-regulated police would reach the whole class of offenses contemplated by the section now under consideration. I submit to the Senator that it is going very far and instituting a very harsh measure to compel a child of tender years to find bail in $300 or go for one year to a prison-house.

child of tender years to find bail in $300 or go for one year to a prisonhouse.

The whole control of this matter can be safely left to a sober, upright, sensible police corps. They can control it all; they can cure all of these minor delinquencies against society which do not rise to the grade of crime, which may perhaps develop into crime unless checked, but the crime is really the crime of want and poverty, if crime it be. It may be the nursery of crime; it may be the seed from which crime is developed; but I do submit that it ought not to be punished in the way that the bill contemplates, and for that reason I shall vote to strike out not only this clause, but I should be very glad to vote against the whole provision.

Mr. ANTHONY. If any discretion is given the police, it has neverbeen exercised, and I supposed that the bill proposed to transfer that discretion from the police to a magistrate. It is not to be supposed that a magistrate will hold a little beggar child for $300 bail.

Mr. BAYARD. The law will compel him.

Mr. ANTHONY. He can discharge him under his own recognizance.

Mr. BAYARD. If we pass this act, such will be the result.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator from Delaware aware that the bill has been amended making it discretionary entirely with the magistrate? An amendment has been already adopted which gives the magistrate the discretion; so that if he is right that there is a discretion now in the police, the point is whether it is best to lodge that discretion in Mr. Bumble or in some magistrate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I shall vote to strike out these words. When they shall have been striken out, if they shall so be, the section will stand thus:

That all vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly persons in the District of Colum-stand thus:

shall be liable to punishment. If the words are left in, children who shall be hable to punishment. If the words are left in, children who are engaged in begging, who may not be vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly will be liable to be punished; and I do not feel like doing that. Making merely the asking of alms a crime, it seems to me is rather severe. If persons engaged in asking alms are either vicious or willfully idle or disorderly they are punishable when these words shall have been stricken out, and I think it judicious to leave the bill in that way. bill in that way.

Mr. ANTHONY. That would leave the evil of juvenile vagrancy entirely untouched.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Not unless vagrancy merely consists in begging. Mr. KIRKWOOD. Not unless vagrancy merely consists in begging. If the juvenile beggar be a vicious person, a willfully idle person, or a disorderly person, he or she is still liable to punishment with these words stricken out. It is only those who beg who are neither vicious, willfully idle, nor disorderly who are covered by the words proposed to be stricken out. A person asking alms who is neither vicious nor willfully idle nor disorderly is liable to punishment as the bill now stands if he or she merely asks alms.

Mr. ANTHONY. The punishment of these little vagrants would be merely to take them up and take care of them.

Mr. WHYTE. Before the vote is taken upon striking out, I would suggest to the Senator from New York that we may probably amend this part of the bill to be satisfactory to him, if we consent to put in suggest to the Senator from New York that we may probably amend this part of the bill to be satisfactory to him, if we consent to put in after "support" the words "or professional mendicants who habitually go from door to door," so as to reach a class of people who live by begging and not by work.

Mr. KERNAN. Let us take the vote on the pending amendment

Mr. WHYTE. Very well. The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHYTE. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina the insertion of the words "not insane" after "disorderly persons" in line 3 of section 1; so as to read "that all vicious, willfully idle, or disorderly persons, not insane."

Mr. VANCE. I believe it has been always held that insanity is a defense for any crime, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland propose that amendment?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir. The Senator from North Carolina has no objection to it, I understand.

objection to it, I understand.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have two objections to that amendment. In the first place, I never read a criminal statute which declared that any man being of sound mind, or being of disposable memory, who shall steal a horse shall be guilty of larceny. The fact that a man is insane is a defense recognized everywhere and need not be recognized in any statute. My second objection is that if the amendment were made this bill would be utterly useless, for I am certain that no tramp not insane would ever come into this District. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator from Wisconsin always amuses whenever he instructs. But the words "not insane" refer to "disorderly persons" only, "disorderly persons not insane." A man might be punished who was insane for being disorderly under the bill, if we did not provide that he should not be.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator mean to provide substan-not provide that he should not be.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator mean to provide substantially that insane persons who may be disorderly shall not be restrained by the police or by any other force in the city?

Mr. WHYTE. No, I do not mean they shall not be restrained by the police, but they shall not be punished by the court. All that my amendment provides for is that they shall not be punished by the court. It is in all the tramp statutes nearly that I have seen, and it is a measure of precaution which legislators have used. In the very last one, of 1850, I find the very words, "every person, not insane," who does so and so shall be punished.

Mr. VOORHEES. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland, with his weight, ability, and reputation as a lawyer, to ask the Senate to legislate affirmatively that an iusane person shall not be punished? I suppose there is not a civilized community on the face of the globe where insanity is not taken cognizance of by the court as ished? I suppose there is not a civilized community on the face of the globe where insanity is not taken cognizance of by the court as an absolute defense for any conduct of which a person may be guilty. I for one shall not with my views stultify myself by voting for such an amendment. I have myself pleaded the defense of insanity in this District in behalf of persons charged with crime; and in a statute to say that insanity is a defense for alleged crime to be taken cognizance of, I should regard as a piece of surplusage, to use no

Mr. WHYTE. I admire the Senator from Indiana as a criminal lawyer, and understand his great success heretofore in defending men who have been charged with crime, and upon the ground of in-sanity. I remember a memorable case in my own State in which he was very successful. But this is not a criminal statute; it is not a statute punishing crime. It is a statute describing who shall be treated as vagrants and who shall be confined and kept off the public streets. That is all it is, and all that my amendment provides is that an insane person shall not be treated as a vagrant and shall not be an insane person shall not be required to give security.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to say to the Senator from Maryland that we already have our laws on the subject of how insane people in the District are to be treated. We have a very elaborate and a very benevolent code on that subject. We have a Government hospital for the insane, so that if a person comes here from any part of the United States or any place else and is found to be insane, a manner of finding that fact is pointed out in laws already existing, and such person is provided for and taken care of now, absolutely. Therefore, I do not think there is any necessity of interposing any further protection for that class of persons to keep them from being treated as vagrants or tramps. The laws already take care of the insane who may be found in this District. I must say that to my mind the bill that is proposed here is not in the nature of a criminal statute, and while there is not much in this question except the harmony of a law I cannot for my part vote, and seem thereby to proclaim that it is necessary so to say, that an insane person shall not be punished.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Maryland, who has charge of this bill, to declare that it is not intended to punish crime—

Mr. WHYTE. I have not charge of it. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] has charge of it.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maryland who sympathizes with it, then. This bill certainly provides that for the things mentioned in the bill persons may be sentenced by the court to confinement at hard labor. Now, I understand that slavery is enforced labor for some other cause than crime of which the party has been duly convicted, and I understand, to put the proposition in a positive form, that any man who is enforced to labor by law, except as punishment for crime of which he has been duly convicted, is enslaved. After all the eloquence that has been poured forth and the blood that has sanctioned it to get rid of slavery in this country, I should required to give security.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to say to the Senator from Maryland and to secure themselves immunity from being asked by a poor boy on the street for a penny for sweeping the stones we pass over, should vote to establish slavery by the positive provisions of an act of Congress. I submit to the Senator in all candor if that be not the very essence and definition of slavery. He says this is not a bill to punish crime; it is not a criminal bill. It does provide that persons may be arrested and tried and imprisoned at hard labor. That is slavery, unless it be for crime of which the party has been convicted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] in line 3 of section 1, after the word "person" to insert "not insane."

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 21; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN I offer the amendment which I send to the Chair.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered to adopt all ordinances, consistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States, that may be necessary to repress vagrancy and mendicancy, and to punish offenses against public decency in the District of Columbia: Provided, That in no case shall the fine or amercement to be imposed under such ordinances exceed $100, nor shall imprisonment when imposed by such ordinances exceed a period of three calendar months.

SEC. 2. That the police court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to try all offenses made punishable by such ordinances, and to enforce the same.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I think the country will not be satisfied, after the discussions of a few mornings past, with spending the time of the Senate in the enactment of mere ordinances for the local government of Washington. My purpose in moving this amendment is to draw the attention of the Senate to the subject of the necessity of creating for the city of Washington its own code of ordinances. The difficulty under which this community is now laboring, and as will be seen from the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] yesterday is a serious difficulty, has originated from the fact that we have removed the people too far from the governing power. Congress, while it is the proper body for legislation concern-ing the greater affairs of the District of Columbia, is neither an appropriate nor is it an efficient body for the purpose of governing in these minor police regulations which are essential to the government of every large city, and particularly a city which has a population so thoroughly cosmopolitan as this has.

It has been suggested by the honorable Senator from North Carolina that my amendment is not constitutional. The ground of his objection of unconstitutionality I have not heard; but if this amendment is unconstitutional then the Congress of the United States since the year 1802 has been sedulously engaged from time to time in passing unconstitutional laws on this subject. In the year 1802 the Congress of the United States chartered the city of Washington and conferred the power of selecting one of the houses provided for its local government upon the people who were authorized by ballot to elect certain aldermen. The appointment of a mayor was confided to the President of the United States. The requirements of the electors of local officers were that they should be white male persons of the age local officers were that they should be white male persons of the age of twenty-one years. That charter gave to the corporate authorities of the city of Washington the power to provide ordinances of every kind and character necessary for the police regulations of the city. The matter stood in that way, with some amendments of the law, but no abandonment of the principle of the right of local government by the city of Washington, until the year 1871, when the Congress of the United States erected a territorial government in the District of Columbia and authorized the people of Washington to elect a delegate to Congress and a legislature and provided for the aptrict of Columbia and authorized the people of Washington to elect a delegate to Congress and a legislature, and provided for the ap-pointment of a governor by the President and gave the legislature the power of legislation, subject to revision by Congress, which of course reserved to Congress the power to repeal or modify their ordi-nances. Of course the power to modify is included in the power to repeal. Under section 50 of that act, it was provided:

All acts of the legislative assembly shall at all times be subject to repeal or modification by the Congress of the United States, and nothing shall be construed to deprive Congress of the power of legislation over the District in as ample manner as if this chapter had not been enacted.

And section 91 provides that:

All laws and ordinances of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, respectively, and of the levy court of the District of Columbia, not inconsistent with this chapter, and except as modified or repealed by Congress or the legislative assembly of the District since the 1st day of June, 1871, or until so modified or repealed, remain in full force. nain in full force Thereby, in 1871, giving a direct congressional sanction to all the laws and ordinances that had obtained in this District before that It seems to me that if there had been any serious ground of constitutional objection against the devolution of this sort of legislative power upon the corporate authorities of the city of Washington, somebody would have found it out before the year 1881. I shall pass by that portion of the argument, therefore, without further answer.

Congress has as broad a power over this subject here as any State has in reference to the government of the particular municipal locality which is its seat of government by a delegation of legislative municipal power to certain corporate bodies. The cases are entirely parallel, and I can see no objection that would obtain in the one case that would not obtain in the other.

Now, this measure does not go so far as I should like it to go. I should like to see a local government organized for the city of Washington and for the District of Columbia; and I think it is not only due to our own respect for the genius of our institutions that we should so organize a government here, but it is due to the proper exercise of the powers of government. My own experience here, my observation of Washington, has taught me that more crimes of a heinous nature, and particularly robbing females of their dearest treasure, have been committed in the city of Washington since I have been a Senator than have been committed in any State of the American Union. There is a reason for this. The reason is that the people of this District have no part or participation whatever in their government, either a legis-lative participation or an administrative participation, and the Congress of the United States is so far removed from them in sympathy and in interest, being made up of members who come from all sec-tions of this great country, that it is not to be expected that they should have the same reverence and respect for the law that they should have the same reverence and respect for the law that they would have if it was enacted and enforced by a body of men somewhat responsive to them in sympathy and feeling.

I believe in the doctrine of local government; I believe in the doctrine of representative government; and I believe that it is the duty of Congress so far as it can delegate its powers to do so into the hands of those people who happen to occupy the District of Columbia. It makes no difference to me what sort of people they are so that they are citizens of the United States, so that they are people entitled to participate in the affairs of the Government and to hold their representatives to a proper degree of responsibility.

I hope that the Senators, at least from the South, will not deny to the neonle of Washington some participation in government. It is the people of Washington some participation in government.

true that we have three commissioners appointed by the President; it is true that one of them is an officer of the Army, and that may be a constitutional reason why you cannot confer upon him legislative power; but if that be a constitutional objection it would be equally an objection that we cannot confer upon him administrative or executive power, because the point in the case would simply be that while he holds office as a military officer he cannot exercise ivil functions. That would be the whole sum and substance of the

But, sir, in 1871 a territorial government was enacted here, and it was enacted by the republican party of this country when it had a two-thirds majority in both branches of the Federal Congress and had the President; and in 1874 that same party, with nearly the same majority, and with the Presidency in its power, repealed that law and deprived the citizens of Washington of all participation in their own government, and substituted in place of their local government the government of Congress bearing directly on them through the executive agency of three commissioners, one of whom was selected from the Army was selected from the Army.

The people of the United States are bestirring themselves, and would like to know why it is that this power of government given to the people of Washington in 1871 was taken away from them in 1874. There can be but one answer to that proposition, Mr. President, and the republican party are responsible for that answer. After the emancipation of the negroes of the South many of them came to this place as a city of refuge. They came here to get under the wing of the Government and under the shadow of the Capitol. Freed from all constraint, emboldened to become violators of the law, they went to work in this community and they wrought such deeds of terrible crime that the republican party in the Senate and in the House of Representatives was compelled to take away from them all participation in government. No man can state the reason truthfully, founded upon the history of events in this country since 1871, which will account for this sudden and remarkable change of policy on the part of the republican party in this country, except the one simple fact that the negroes from the South flocked into Washington City and participated in the government of its people.

Now, sir, it has been the subject of continual reproach to us from the Southern States that we have not been extending to the colored the Southern States that we have not been extending to the colored population all the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizenship in the United States. We have sat here year after year and listened to these reproaches falling from the lips of men who themselves had been compelled to take away what they had conferred on the colored people for no other reason in the world than that they were found to be incapable of proper participation in the affairs of government. Their protestation of philanthropy, their profession of generosity to the negro race, their displaying themselves with proud and Pharisaical pretense before the world as the champions of the right of the negro in this country to vote and to participate in holding office, has all been answered in the District of Columbia, and answered to the utter overthrow of every argument they have made heretofore to the utter overthrow of every argument they have made heretofore and every assertion which they have made in support of their own conduct or in condemnation of ours.

This subject reaches very much deeper, Mr. President, than the mere surface view which I am at this moment taking of it. thing in this question of the return to the people in the District of Columbia of the rights of local government which reaches down to the bottom of our institutions and proves one of two propositions, either that we committed an error in permitting the negro to participate in civil government as a voter and law-maker and office-holder in the United States, or that we are doing extremely wrong in the District of Columbia in withholding from him all participation in government

The republican party is solid on this, Mr. President. Ay, it is solid! Complaint is made of the South that it is solid for the democracy; but here stands an example upon the statute-books of the country which proves that the republican party that has had absolute power in the country to rule and regulate these matters which are of the most immense concern to the people of Washington, are solid, solid in the denial of the right of the negro to participate in the government of this District. This subject has come up in various forms. The South is being continually twitted and abused and maligned in reference to her supposed policy, an imputed policy, which has been fastened upon her and which she has been compelled to execute to the best of her ability, and yet by the gentlemen who have thus maligned her no sort of a remedy has been sug-gested in behalf of those people in whose favor they continue these loud and peculiar protestations of love and affection.

In his annual message to Congress at this session the President of the United States urges upon the Senate and House of Representatives that, in the exercise of what is clearly their exclusive right, to judge of the election and qualification of their membership, they judge of the election and qualification of their membership, they "will see to it that every case of violation of the letter or spirit of the fifteenth amendment is thoroughly investigated, and that no benefit from such violation shall accrue to any person or party." The spirit of the fifteenth amendment allows the negroes to vote in the District of Columbia; the letter of it may not. Who would think of excluding a negro from the right of suffrage in a Territory because States and only States happened to be mentioned in the fifteenth amendment? This is a new subject, however, for a President to take charge of-the membership of the two Houses. That amendment reads thus:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

It is too plain for argument that no mere "person" and no "party" can violate this amendment otherwise than by aiding a State to enact or enforce laws that violate it. The amendment is a prohibition upon any action of a State or of the United States amounting to a denial or abridgment of the right of a citizen to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and that is precisely what the Congress of the United States has done in this matter. The United States have denied to the white people of the District of Co-

United States have denied to the white people of the District of Columbia the right to vote, merely because in voting they were compelled to mingle their suffrages with a set of men whom the republican party now hold are not lit to control government in this District. The fifteenth amendment only applies when the laws of a State or of the United States abridge or deny the right to vote. It does not apply to the conduct of an individual. The advice the President essays to give in reference to their membership to the two Houses of Congress is about as appropriate as it would be for the Houses to advise him that he should not permit race or color to exclude men from his Cabinet or from the bench. He advises us to exclude Senators from seats in this Chamber, not because any State in choosing ators from seats in this Chamber, not because any State in choosing them has in its laws made unconstitutional discriminations against the right of any person to vote on account of race, color, or previous the right of any person to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but because he has jumped to the conclusion that some person or some political party has not dealt fairly with them in receiving or counting their votes. And this, he argues, is a violation of the fifteenth amendment. The logic of these deductions is far beyond the comprehension of ordinary men; and his advice is gratuitous and wanting in respect to a co-ordinate department of the Government. This advice is based on the following statement in the Continued opposition to the full and free enjoyment of the rights of citizenship conferred upon the colored people by the recent amendments to the Constitution still prevails in several of the late slaveholding States. It has, perhaps, not been manifested in the recent election to any large extent in acts of violence or intimidation. It has, however, by fraudulent practices in connection with the ballots, with the regulations as to the places and manner of voting, and with counting, returning, and canvassing the votes cast, been successful in defeating the exercise of the right preservative of all rights, the right of suffrage, which the Constitution expressly confers upon our enfranchised citizens.

This statement arraigns the southern people as the only violators of the Constitution. In order to gain some support for his unjust accusation the President says that the Constitution expressly confers upon our enfranchised citizens the right of suffrage. That he should not better understand the Constitution of the United States would be a calamity if he had any power to execute the fourteenth and fif-teenth amendments without the aid of Congress and the judiciary.

The charges thus laid at the door of the people of many States are so vague and indefinite and so destitute of specifications as to fully justify the answer that they have no real foundation in fact.

We are quite accustomed to such denunciations, but their injustice we are quite accustomed to such definitions, but their injustice is so flagrant that we have ceased to regard them.

The President is not an impartial judge of elections in the Southern States. He has an interest in making it appear that it is the right and duty of Congress to set them aside at its will and change their result according to its pleasure. Considering that enough of the Northern States voted against him in 1876 to make it necessary that he should seem the absorber states to be he should secure the electoral votes of three Southern States to elevate him to the Presidency, and that the votes of two of those States were counted for him when they were cast against him, his administration would have made a better appearance in history if he had omitted any reference to frauds in "counting, returning, and canvassing votes."

If what he alleges against the South be true, he should not forget that in his own case the great precedent was set by destroying the votes of white men and of negroes in Louisiana and Florida through a false and fraudulent count. He should remember the encouragement given to such conduct by the rewards which he has given in offices and employments, supported at public expense, to every man and woman, high or low, who had any participation in that scandalous

The grave charges which I have extracted from the message bear upon many millions of people. The President states these charges as matters of fact, and as being within his knowledge. He does no consort. as hatters or lact, and as being within his knowledge. He does not state these as his opinions or conjectures. He leaves us no opportunity of denial, but condemns us on the spot. He adduces no evidence and refers to no witnesses. He is the witness, and his naked statement is the testimony of our guilt. We do not care to do more in our defense than to refer to the fact, that is apparent from his statement, that his mind is possessed of a vague and unjust suspicion which his recentment toward a political verty has adjided into which his resentment toward a political party has solidified into a which his resentment toward a political party has solidined into a conviction of our guilt.

It is the alleged denial of the right of suffrage to negroes in the South that excites the President to this hot temper against us. What must posterity think of the sincerity of these professions when he has sent in his fourth annual message to Congress without having said a word about the refusal of his party to give the right of suffrage to white men or to negroes in the District of Columbia? They all had the right to vote in their local government, but that right has been taken away in the Federal Capital for no other reason or purpose than to get rid of the votes of the negro race. And the District of Columbia, with more population and wealth than some of the States, is governed by commissioners appointed by the President. This has been the work of the republican party.

The real purpose of this arraignment of the South for a violation " of the fifteenth amendment is not stated in the message, but it is scarcely well concealed. It is to place the sectional division of the country that was disclosed in the recent election upon a false ground. The President attempts to justify this sectional division on the ground of the alleged "resistance to and nullification of the results of the war" by the people of the South, and the indignation of the people of the North toward us because of frauds in the conduct of elections in the Southern States. Neither of these propositions is borne out in the bistory of the country. There is not a State in the South that has not in every form emphasized its adhesion to the three constitutional amendments which embody all that the Government of the United States has claimed to be "the results of the war." They have even humiliated themselves in order to make their meaning plain. The proofs of record, in Congress and elsewhere, also establish the fact that elections in the Northern States have been more controlled by violence and intimidation and more corrupted by fraud than they have ever been in the South. The real leaders of the republican party have not been so wanting in discretion as to stake the result of a presidential election upon a comparison of the conduct of the North with that of the South in reference to intimidation and fraud in elections.

We have a Federal judiciary in the South composed entirely of re-publicans, and we have a national criminal code that is as broad and severe as the most rabid partisan could require for the punishment of political offenses

Why is not the President satisfied with such laws and such agents to put them into execution? The judges are not reluctant, the informers are paid more for their attendance at court than they can earn in other pursuits, and perjury is liberally paid for by the day's work. There is no appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgments of the inferior courts when comprised of a single judge, so that it seldom happens that there can be a judicial exposure of the tyrannies from which innocent men suffer.

This should be enough of power and of unsparing cruelty in its exercise to satisfy any government in dealing with a free people. But the President becomes madly heroic in his threats to urge unsparing public prosecutions. He says "it will be the duty of the Execurive, with sufficient appropriations for the purpose, to prosecute unsparingly all who have been engaged in depriving citizens of the rights gnaranteed to them by the Constitution." An unsparing prosecution is not the most lawful or Christian method of dealing with even the worst criminals. "Justice tempered with mercy" is a more becoming spirit than partisan zeal inflamed with hate.

The President demands that "sufficient appropriations" shall be taxed out of the people to enable the Executive, not the officers of the judicial department, to prosecute the people unsparingly.

If we turn to the history of these prosecutions we find that they have been directed almost exclusively against those who have voted with the democratic party. In this respect the prosecutions have been unsparing, unmerciful, and unjust. But all these denunciations and threats are only intended to hide from the eyes of the people the real ground upon which a sectional division of parties has been urged and nearly accomplished. The President has deceived no one but himself.

To get at the truth of the situation we must give to the election in November a much more important effect than he attributes to it. That was intended to be a business operation in Government and not a mere mawkish expression of sentiment.

I will therefore deal with the matter in the light in which the real leaders of the republican party meant that the people should deal with it when they prescribed the issues on which they aligned the people in the recent presidential election, and then carried the election upon those issues.

The organ of the republican party in Washington already speaks of the "new nation" as an accomplished fact. This is not an im-The organ of the republican party in Washington already speaks of the "new nation" as an accomplished fact. This is not an imprudent declaration, if we are to give credit to the avowed purposes of the leaders of that party. The "new nation" and the old Republic are distinct and altogether different. The old Republic is dead if the "new nation" is in fact established and is ready to be inaugurated. The condition of our Government and the principles upon which it is to be conducted are accountly influenced by neurlar elections that is to be conducted are so greatly influenced by popular elections that we forecast its future course almost exclusively by reference to the iswe forecast 18 into course almost exclusively by relevance to the issues upon which the great political parties claim the suffrages of the people. Considered with reference to this fact, we are to expect that for four years from the 4th of March next the Federal Government will be sectional and not national in its policy. This apprehension may not be realized; but if not it will only be because the President-elect will refuse to follow the course to which he was pledged by the stalwart leaders of the republican party during the recent presidential campaign. I sincerely hope he may be able to disappoint their avowed purposes.

The question now forces itself practically upon the attention of the American people whether it is in keeping with the genius of our Federal Government that the country should be divided into sectional political parties by geographical lines of demarcation, and whether the future of the Government is safe when the exercise of its supreme powers is demanded by one section for the purpose of exerting an absolute and exclusive control over the other section, thereby denying to the subject section its right of participation in the Government further than to formally uphold its power and submit to its

The situation described in this question is the real situation that was established by the vote for President on the 2d day of last November, so far as the success of a political party can establish any such thing; and it will be carried into practical effect after the 4th of March next, unless the President-elect shall reverse the action of

This dangerous situation is without precedent in our history. It is true that we have had sectional political divisions, and that they have been followed by such calamities as have seldom been experienced by a civilized people; but never before have the American people been divided merely by lines of latitude, when there were no ques-tions or controversies between them that antagonized one section against another in reference to their material interests. And this sectional division is not intended to continue only for a day or a sectional division is not intended to continue only for a day or a year. Its lines are laid with a view to the permanent control of the southern section by the northern section of the Union. The shores of the sea are not laid with more of permanence or distinctness than it is proposed to establish these sectional lines of division between the States, on the demand of the leaders of the republican party.

The purposes that have caused them to demand of the people that they should align themselves solidly on the northern side of this sectional line of division are not merely temporary, or adopted in order to carry an election by a trick of strategy. They are the sedate purposes of men who have made up their minds that this Government shall hereafter be conducted alone by the power of a sectional combination of dominant States, the other States being held as the subordinate and vassal section.

In making this statement I am not indulging a sentiment of bitterness or resentment toward political opponents. I am only stating conclusions that I would gladly avoid if the known facts would justify

Neither am I overstating the result which must follow the recent triumph of the republican party if the people of the United States support and assist its leaders to the final accomplishment of their designs.

Two facts, the existence of which no man can justly deny, are quite sufficient, without more, to establish the truth as I have stated it.

The first is, that the leaders of the republican party in the recent presidential election distinctly and earnestly demanded of that party, and of the people of the North of all parties, that they should vote so as to secure the powers of the Federal Government in the control of the Northern States, and thereby to overwhelm and extinguish the power of the Southern States, except so far as they shall be hereafter exercised in subordination to the will of the more powerful section.

The other fact is, that there was not then and there is not now any actual antagonism of interest, either moral, social, religious, or industrial, between the States or the people of the two sections.

trial, between the States or the people of the two sections.

No question of a sectional character exists between the States, or between the people of the North and South, except only that question raised by the leaders of the republican party, whether the North shall hereafter rule over the South as a subject and vassal section.

I insist that no man can point out or define the sectional question,

I insist that no man can point out or define the sectional question, or controversy, or issue between the people, upon which this demand for a sectional political division is founded. And yet the fact stands forth that a great sectional party has carried a presidential election mainly, if not solely, on the ground that its candidates are pledged to the doctrine that the States and people of the North must rule the States and people of the South; that the Government cannot be safe in the hands of a majority composed chiefly of the people of the South, although the people of a minority of the Northern States may unite with them in its control; that it can only be safe and worthy of the confidence of the American people when it is in the control of a majority composed of the people of the North, or in which they are the stronger element. stronger element.

That is the distinct proposition upon which the election was claimed and won by the republican party of the North. The men in that party who do its thinking, as they imagine, and who certainly manage its tactics and determine its strategy, and whose power seems to be absolute in its counsels, have fixed upon this as the great leading proposition that was settled in November last. I do not know that any republican will care to deny that such conclusions are the direct logical results of that election. Certainly it cannot be denied that the strongest men, and most influential journals of that party, demanded, with the most intense earnestness, that the northern people should unite as one man to secure the control of the Government who, in that party, is greater in his political influence than General Grant? It is true that he went down at Chicago beneath the battle-ax of the "white-plumed Henry of Navarre," (the appropriate sobriquet of the Senator from Maine,) but it was soon found that the battle with the democracy, when it was set, could only be won by bringing General Grant, wounded and bleeding, on the field. He saved the republican party from rout, and did it in his own way.

He who had been twice the President of the whole people—the Presi-

He who had been twice the President of the whole people—the President of the United States—came forward and urged the election of a man as his successor, who should be the representative of a section, in the office of President, and who, that he might wield the power of the whole people and keep half of them in subjection, should be the President of the nation of the United States.

The demand for a sectional party to control "the nation" was sharply emphasized by the ex-President, and, with much more of graphic force than elegance, was stated by him in the form of a question, "Whether the dog should wag the tail, or the tail should wag the dog?" Nothing could be more intense than this pithy metaphor. It was to the point, and that saves it from all criticism in respect of the grace with which an ex-President of the United States might use so severe an illustration to give significance and clearness to his state-the grace with which an ex-President of the United States might use so severe an illustration to give significance and clearness to his statement of a great question. It was not a jest. It may not have been designed to insult or to wound.

Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia, had cast their votes for him as President; some in one and others in both elections. He could not have been ungrateful to them. Justice to his high character requires us to believe that he meant no offensive disparagement of fifteen sovereign States whose people number more than twenty. of fifteen sovereign States, whose people number more than twenty millions, in thus alluding to them. His standard is higher than that. He desired to enforce his opinion of the necessity of a sectional vote by the people of the North, and he used an illustration that could leave no doubt as to his meaning, and that would fasten his argument upon the meanest understandings, and excite the jealousy and malevolence of the masses at the North against a people who had fought them in the war between the States.

His success was fully commensurate with his undertaking. His flattered hearers felt that his whole soul was in the subject when he affectionately alluded to them as the dog which should rightfully wag this tail. The important fact that was so happily prominent in his mind was, that the Southern States should hereafter be wagged, and should have no volition as to when or how they should be dealt with as the caudal appendage of the nation.

Other great orators and statesmen had formulated this demand for a sectional party to control "the nation," but none of them presented it in a way so clear and so natural as did the ex-President of the

it in a way so clear and so natural as did the ex-President or the United States.

What was the ground upon which this unjust and unconstitutional demand was made? What facts existed to justify this demand for a total revolution of the methods of government and of the spirit of American liberty, the spirit of equality between the States and of justice between all the citizens of the United States? There was no ground for this movement; there were no facts to sustain it.

It was charged as a crime against the Southern States which justified a sectional movement against them that the majority of the people in those States preferred the success of the national democratic party over the national republican party, that we indulged freedom of opinion and followed our convictions of duty.

This attitude of the majority in the States that were formerly classed as Southern States because they were slave-holding States classed as Southern States because they were slave-holding States was characterized by somebody under the name of "the Solid South;" and this phrase was made the pretext for attributing to the people of the South a united and concerted antagonism toward the people of the North. No pretext more unjust was ever adopted to cover so base a misrepresentation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding, the unfinished business not to be displaced? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, where was the "solid South" in 1876, when the republican party counted in their candidate for President with the assistance of the votes of three of the Southern States? ident with the assistance of the votes of three of the Southern States? Can they now afford to say that the South was solid in 1876? If it was solid then they purloined the votes that elected their President. In 1878 the resentment of the people was inflamed at the overthrow of their sovereign will in the election of a President, and they were unified to a greater degree than formerly, but still they were far from being solid. In many of the Southern States men were elected to Congress and to the State offices in 1878 who were republicans, and greenbackers and independent democrats, who stood in opposition to the regular nominees of the national democratic party. Up to and including that election the people of the South were not solid. In 1880 it was charged against the South that it would be solid in voting for General Hancock. That was a wise and true prophecy. It was a prophecy that at any time since 1868 might have been justly predicated on the gratitude of the people of the South toward a Federal general to whom was given a sword by the republican party with which to smite us, but covering us with the panoply of the Constitution, he used that sword to secure to us protection of life and liberty.

We had a right of free choice between two northern men, and we preferred him who had proven himself to be the truest friend and the most faithful defender of the constitutional rights and liberties of the people. In that respect the South was solid, and so it will ever be while it has the right of choice between opposing parties.

We lift our hearts with gratitude to God that the North was saved from being solid against one who has deserved so well of his country Against him the republican party used every argument and device and remonstrance that shrewd invention could suggest, and the patronage of this great Government, and the personal influence and endeavors of every available man connected with the Government, whether in the Cabinet or in the petty offices of the Departments; and the reason assigned for this serried array against him was that if elected to the office he would be President of the United States, and not of the nation; the President of the whole people, and not the President of a section of the American Union.

The republican party insisted that the people of the North owed to themselves the duty of voting against a man who had acquitted himself with distinguished ability and fidelity in the most important and difficult duties that were ever assigned to an American citizen, for no other reason than that he had also the esteem and confidence of men who dwell in the South-men who now have the audacity, after having been defeated in great battles by General Hancock, to prefer his views of the Constitution over those of the leaders of the republican party. His being a northern man by birth and education was no excuse or palliation, but rather an aggravation of the crime of having, by his noble career, engaged the confidence and respect of southern men.

The South has not been immodest in asking places of high trust and great power for her sons. The right to choose her representatives in the House and Senate is seriously questioned, unless their personal or political history discloses some bar-sinister of treachery to the peo-ple of the South, or holds out the promise of their entire self-abasement for the advantage of the northern rulers of the nation.

Indeed, since the close of the war, and the desperate attempt of the republican party to impeach Andrew Johnson because he held to democratic views of the Constitution, neither party at the South has ever claimed so much of recognition even as the nomination of a southern man for the great political solitude called the Vice-Presidency. The democrats of the South have not claimed such recognition at the hands of their brethren in the North, because they have been afraid that such a demand would lend the color of verity to the falsehood that has ever been ready to leap to the tongues of their tra-ducers—that they ask to participate officially in the Federal administration only to betray and destroy the Government and to aggrandize the South.

The democracy of the South, having full confidence in the democracy of the North, that they would never pervert the cardinal doctrines of republican liberty found in the Constitution and the powers trines of republican liberty found in the Constitution and the powers given to the President to the abuse of the liberties of the people or the rights of the States, have been freely and cheerfully willing to trust the powers of the executive department of the Federal Government in their keeping and control. They have gone still further, and have, in honest good faith, bestowed the highest marks of their confidence on Horace Greeley, who was then the leading republican in this country, because they esteemed him as an honest man, who had not permitted the most intense heat of political or actual war fare to burn the better sympathies from his breast or destroy his capacity of dealing justly with those who were once his enemies. They have more recently voted with zeal and pride for the one man who, above all others, was antagonized with them in desperate warfare at the supreme moment when the southern confederacy was lost in the struggle of arms at Gettysburgh. struggle of arms at Gettysburgh.

His defeat in the recent election is lamented by them, as his defeat would have been lamented by the people of the North had he failed to secure victory to their arms on the hills of Pennsylvania. If this is a crime it certainly is not a crime of rebellion. We have been betrayed into it by our respect for General Hancock's eminent virtues. If our confidence in his virtues is dishonoring to him, the fault is ours, and his is the misfortune.

But why have not the republicans of the South demanded some proof of recognition from their northern brethern in their nominations for the Presidency or the Vice-Presidency? What have they done to for-feit the respect of their northern associates? It has not been for the want of men to fill the offices with as much credit as some whom want of men to fill the offices with as much credit as some whom they have elevated to the highest places. What has kept such men as these in the rear rank of the republican party? It is only because the republican leaders of the North have never been willing to trust any man in the South, even the best exponents of their principles, with executive power or patronage. They have never been content with any less degree of power than that which they have claimed to be their right in the election of Mr. Garfield; and that is the power of absolute dominion over all the people of the South, democrats and republicans alike.

The northern republican leaders have been willing that chosen men among the southern republicans should be deputized by them to rule the other people of the South, provided they would exercise their vice-royalty with due subordination to their own imperial will. This has been the extent of the power accorded to the republicans of the South by their masters of the North. When their proconsuls have ruled us under these conditions, they have been well sustained by the power of the purse and the sword, and also by the petty tyrannies of debauched judges. But the northern republican leaders have never been willing to divide with their southern deputies the supreme powers of government. They are only recognized as fit instruments to rule the people of the South in accordance with the policies that may best promote the interests of the republicans of the North, and to strengthen their political power; and they are severely taught the duty of unquestioning obedience to their requirements as North, and to strengthen their political power; and they are severely taught the duty of unquestioning obedience to their requirements as the price of their license to rule over the other people of the South. It is the South, and not the "solid South," that the republican leaders of the North have put under the ban of their unrelenting hostility. If the South were solidly republican; if the positions of the great parties of the country were reversed, so that the strength of the republican party was in the South, instead of the North, its ranks would be deserted by northern republicans rather than they would submit to southern control in that party. If a sea channel as would submit to southern control in that party. If a sea channel as wide as the channel of Saint George lay between the North and the South the resemblance would be more distinct, but not more true than it was between the sections of this Union when the South was governed by non-resident rulers in both local and national authority.

The Southern States are designed to be the Ireland of the American Union. If they are solidly democratic that is a sufficient pretext for every form of hostility to their peace and welfare. If they were solidly republican, no matter how great their power might be in republican counsels, they would be required to hold and exercise it as tenants at will to their northern rulers. The course of the sectional control of the South by non-resident rulers exceeded in bitterness the curse which has strewn the fields of Ireland, once green and fruitful, with the bodies of her famishing children. Absenteeism in political government will be the bane of the South, as it has been the ruin of the people in Ireland. It will eat up the substance of the land, while it will consign a free people to worse than Irish subjection.

It will be well for the country if the national democratic party and the republican party, as a national party, enter into honorable competition in supplying to the whole people the benefits of good government. But this cannot be when either party is conducted with a view to placing one part of the country under the rule of another part.

Sectional domination is the fixed policy of the leaders of the republican party in the North, and that is hostile to the Constitution and dangerous to the liberties of the people.

Is there any just cause or reasonable excuse for this condition of political parties?

The cry of the "solid South" has been raised to silence the inquiries of those who ask a reason for the demand of a sectional party by the republicans of the North. What is the "solid South?" What States comprise the unholy league—this bête noir that so dreadfully alarms the fears of the leaders of the republican party?

It is asserted that those States that entered into the southern confederacy comprise the "solid South;" and that the old spirit of the rebellion still holds them in union and accord. I need not travel over wide field of argument to refute this assertion.

I have already adverted to some facts that could not have existed if the southern people had not been animated with a perfect sense of honor and good faith in their political course since the war. I repeat that, if the aims and sentiments that led us to secession and war in 1861 are in any sense the same that actuate us now in our affiliation with the national democratic party, we must be stricken with blindness or insanity to suppose that we could accomplish such ends by the election to the Presidency of Horatio Seymour, Horace Greeley, or Samuel J. Tilden, or Winfield S. Hancock. If our solidity as democratic States is due to the secret nurture of feelings of hatred toward the North or of revenge for past grievances, we could not have given even the faintest expression to such sentiments by the selection of such men as the exponents of our thoughts or as the weak and facile instruas the exponents of our thoughts or as the weak and facile instru-ments of our policy. We are not blind followers of blind guides, and have never stultified ourselves by such weak conceptions as are im-puted to the people of the South. If our purpose in supporting the democratic party is to enable us as southern people to control the Government, why have we not brought forward some southern man to represent us in this movement? Why should we be willing only to represent us in this movement? Why should we be willing only to trust northern men? Who is ready to impute to the northern men for whom the South has voted in all the democratic conventions since 1865 that they received our suffrages upon the understanding that they would betray the North into the power of the southern people?

the South we have many eminent men, who in former years have added renown to American statesmanship, whom we would have been proud to have honored with our support, men of all the leading parties of the country, old-line whigs and old-line democrats, Union men and secessionists, soldiers in the Federal Army and in the confederate and secessionists, soldiers in the rederal Army and in the confederate army, but we have not thought that they would be acceptable to the people of the North because they live in the South, and we have not pressed their names upon the consideration of the democratic party. It may be said that we were afraid to make such claims. That is true. Having at heart the success of a party which alone has been willing to interpose its power and influence to restore to the people the blessings of a pure constitutional government, we have been afraid to mar its prospects of success. We have been afraid to give the least excuse to such as might be willing to abandon the cause of the Republic to darkness and ruin, and may be ready to hail with eager servility the purple tints of the rising sun of the empire. Our hopes of restoration to the enjoyment of constitutional liberty have been too dear to us to allow us to put them in peril by an effort to secure to ourselves the honors, or powers, or riches that might appear to be within our reach, however tempting the allurement.

If we are solid in the South in our adhesion to the principles, traditions, and forms of constitutional government, we certainly have not exhibited a grasping or selfish lust of power or a sordid affection

But I press the argument, as one that none of our assailants can either answer or avoid, that "the solid South" is not confined to the States that adopted ordinances of secession from the Union. Missouri, States that adopted ordinances of secession from the Union. Missouri, Kentucky, Delaware, and Maryland, and West Virginia—the child of the civil war, born in the very travail of the great struggle between the States, and nurtured in its cradle by the Federal Army—were not seceding States. They adhered to the Union and took up arms under its flag and fought for it when every blow they struck for the Federal Government fell upon a kinsman's heart. Here the argument that the solidarity of the South is the result of the old secession feeling thoroughly breaks down. There is nothing of it left. The people of the States I have named fought against their kindred, father against son and brother against brother.

When States like New Jersey and California and Nevada are classed as Southern States because they are democratic States, the charge that the democratic party is a southern sectional party is too absurd to demand the least consideration. The States that seceded were absurd to demand the least consideration. The States that seceded were not entirely sectional even during the war, and have never been sec-tional since the war.

The following list of troops that were supplied to the Federal armies The following list of troops that were supplied to the Federal armies by the Southern States during the late civil war tells a story that wholly refutes the idea that the people of the South were solid as a sectional political party, even when their States were invaded and overrun by the armies of the North. In the list I include all the States, that it may be seen how many men were furnished by the States that were said to compose "the solid South" in the political parlance of the recent presidential election:

^{*} Colored troops organized at various stations in the States in rebellion, embracing all not specifically credited to States, and which cannot be so assigned.

After the southern white men in the Federal armies had fought their own kindred until the cause of the Union was triumphant, there must have been some very powerful incentive to bring them into perfect reconciliation with those they had helped to conquer. And yet, such is the fact. The men of these regiments who yet survive are as much responsible for the fact that the South is solidly demowhat has thus united in one political organization the men who for more than four years fought each other from battle-field to battle-field, and from door to door? What has healed their strifes, revived their affections, and knit them together in the closest brotherhood?

In the answers to these questions will be found the vindication of the people of the South, if vindication is needed, for having presumed to exercise the right of choosing between the republican and demo-cratic parties as the guardians of their property, their liberties, and

The history of the recent events which have drawn the southern people into political affiliation with the national democratic party since the war, is a long and bitter chapter in the book of American annals. I can only allude briefly to some of the most prominent facts. There is, however, a necessary preface to this history, of which I must make some mention.

As is well remarked by a brilliant southern authoress, "the democratic party had its origin in the events that led to the war of the Revolution in 1776, while the republican party originated in those that led to the civil war of 1861."

Contemporaneously with the adoption of the Federal Constitution the democratic party—then called the republican party, (in contradistinction to those who demanded a strong central government)—had planted, broad and deep, the foundations of its creed and policy in a demand for the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Continuous contradiction.

In a demand for the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Constitution. They were submitted to the States within two years from the ratification of the original Constitution.

The historian and statesman will not omit to pause at this point in our history and weigh the important fact that a body of organic law, which was considered by its authors as being sufficient to secure, for all coming time, the essential rights of the States and the liberties of the people, should have been amended within so short a time by the addition of ten articles, each of which contained vital principles of government. These principles were not new to the people. by the addition of ten articles, each of which contained vital principles of government. These principles were not new to the people of the colonies, or to their fathers in England, but they were not placed in the Constitution. They were left to rest upon inference, or common right and common consent. This was not enough to satisfy the people. They felt that the struggles of the revolution were endured by the people, and for the people, to secure a government of the people; and so they resolved to have the fact established and stated in the body of their Constitution. A check upon usurpation was put in the Constitution; a barrier was erected then and there that the democracy have protected from that day to this against all assailants.

These ten articles were a bill of personal rights and liberties for the people, to secure them to every individual man, woman, and child, and a bill of the rights and powers for the protection of the States—the local governments of the people—against encroachment from the Federal Government.

from the Federal Government.

I will enumerate the rights secured to the people—their personal rights—established in this decalogue of the democratic party, because it has been the invasion of these rights by the republican party, since 1868, that has driven the helpless people of the South to take shelter under the principles of the national democratic party.

These ten amendments secure to the people the freedom of religion; the freedom of speech and of the press; immunity in time of peace against the intrusion of soldiers into their houses; the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures; their protection against prosecution by malicious and unknown persons; their security against being held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime before a grand jury has made due inquiry into the grounds of the accufore a grand jury has made due inquiry into the grounds of the accusation; the right of the accused to a speedy and public trial before an impartial jury of the State or district, previously ascertained by law, wherein the crime shall have been committed, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; the right of the accused to have compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses, to be confronted with the witnesses against them, and to have the assistance of counsel for their defense; the right of jury trials in civil cases at common law; protection against the exaction of excessive bail and against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments. How a neonle could have been considered a free people without the

How a people could have been considered a free people without the security of these personal guarantees of their lives, liberties, and property, against executive, legislative, and judicial invasion, is beyond my power of comprehension.

And yet, even in the dawn of our independence, and in full view of the then recent struggles of the British people to wrest these guarantees of liberty from the Crown, it cost the people of the infant States a severe effort to secure them in their written Constitution. It was in that effort that the democratic party had its birth. Its whole history glows with earnest, powerful, and successful endeavor to vindicate and maintain these liberties.

Its warfare has been unremitting against class legislation and mo-nopolies. It has stood by the equal rights of the people and the rights reserved to the States, and its mission will only end when there are no free States to protect and when there are no further demands of exclusive privileges by the strong and the rich through which the poor and the weak can be despoiled. Now, let us observe the application of these democratic doctrines to the condition of the people of the South, and but little question will be made why they

When the civil war ended, in 1865, the States were all members of the American Union, and were all necessarily equal in their rights. I do not care now to enter upon a full discussion of this proposition. One fact alone is sufficient to establish beyond all rational dispute that this proposition was then considered true. The thirteenth amendment of the Constitution was submitted by Congress to the Legislatures of each and every State for ratification or rejection. The States tures of each and every State for ratification or rejection. The States all voted upon the amendment as it was submitted, and the Legislatures of more than three-fourths of them ratified it.

If this was not a conclusive declaration by Congress, and by each State that voted, of the equality of every State in the Union and of the legal validity of their State governments, then nothing has since been done or admitted that is conclusive of their present status. If this was not conclusive, nothing will hereafter prevent Congress at its will from expelling any State from the Union, from destroying its government, and disbanding the occupants of its offices; nothing can prevent Congress from remanding Alabama to a condition of government as crude and unrepublican in form and substance as that under which Alaska is now ruled from the deck of a man-of-war. We have always supposed that an amendment of the Constitution which destroyed property in the South to the value of $3,000,000,000 which destroyed property in the South to the value of $3,000,000,000 which destroyed property in the South to the value of $3,000,000,000 and was formally submitted to our State Legislatures to say whether or not we would ratify it, was something more than a mere deception, something less cruel than the mock royalty with which despots sometimes clothe their victims when they are led forth to execution. It was but shortly after this solemn recognition of our autonomy as States that Congress declared that we had no legal State governments, and placed in the creed of the republican party a doctrine which it has never repudiated, to which its leaders still cling, and which they will enforce whenever the party necessity exists, that Congress may at any time anul the powers of any State government, and remand it to a territorial condition of dependency on the Federal Covernment. Government.

It is not my purpose now to discuss these measures. I only desire to consider their effect upon the southern people, as furnishing some of the substantial reasons why they preferred the democratic party, which always opposed them, to the republican party that enacted

It would be very uncandid to say that we have ever approved those laws. We could not be expected to approve them. We were at peace, and were disarmed and prostrate, when these measures were enacted, and they declared war against us; not in form, perhaps, but in every substantial sense.

Under the reconstruction policy military law displaced civil rule, and armies were marched into the States to supply the only authorized force and power of government. The will of the generals commanding military districts, in which States were grouped in twos and threes, was the sole and supreme law. By military orders the entire official incumbency of the civil governments in these subject States was removed from office and their places were filled by military appointees. A clean sweep was made in all the departments, and governors, Legislatures, and judges were made to walk the plank.

The new appointees exercised only a perfunctory jurisdiction, in which they did the bidding of the Army. When they dared to disobey orders, though they sat in the highest courts of judicature, they were torn from the bench by subalterns, and were imprisoned for assuming to decide questions of law according to their consciences and oaths of office but contrary to opinions at Army headquarters.

suming to decide questions of law according to their consciences and oaths of office but contrary to opinions at Army headquarters.

Innocent people were condemned by brutal judges, and were denied the right of appeal. Their property was confiscated under the forms of law, but without its authority; and a tax was imposed by judges upon pardons granted by the President before they could be made available for the release of persons charged with political crimes. The right of trial by an impartial jury for alleged crimes was denied. By ex post facto laws many thousands of free and lawful citizens were denied the right to vote or to hold office; and such as were alleged under the surveillance of partisan were allowed to vote were placed under the surveillance of partisan hirelings, supported by the presence of the Army to overawe and coerce them. State constitutions were abrogated by military orders, and new constitutions were provided for them by act of Congress. Private property was seized unlawfully, and without warrant from any court, and was sold; and the miserable remnant which Treasury agents did not purloin was turned into the United States Treasury. Operous and unconstitutional tayes were levied on action at the same Onerous and unconstitutional taxes were levied on cotton at the rate of $15 per bale. If it was manufactured and exported, the manuof $15 per bale. If it was manufactured and exported, the manufacturer, not the grower, received from the Treasury the full amount of the tax as a drawback, and two cents per pound of the manufactured article as a bonus. Houses were robbed by the officials of the Government and invaded by the soldiery. Contracts were made only by the bought permission and rescinded by the arbitrary and corrupt judgments of the Freedman's Bureau, and the judgments of the State courts were reversed or suspended by military orders. All this and much more was done against the people of these States, while no hand was raised in resistance, nor was a word uttered, except a plea for forbearance.

This is only a meager outline of the situation in which the people of the reconstructed States were placed as soon as the republican party had begun to work its will upon them. That party rode down the vetoes of the President interposed to save us; and, sword in hand, they went directly upon the defenseless people, and ruled them with the power and violence of actual war.

After the republican party had forced these State governments into shape to suit their purposes as more agencies to even to the relieve shape to suit their purposes, as mere agencies to execute the policy of a purely sectional rule over them; when they had filled the State offices with the worst men that could be mustered from the refuse elements of northern communities, they then committed the people of the South to their guardianship, and held us to the responsibilities of free government while we were loaded with chains and paralyzed of free government while we were loaded with chains and paralyzed with the frauds of our rulers.

If the people voted them down, they still held to place and power; and the Army and the Navy were employed to sustain them in the open usurpation of the government of the States.

Legislatures were created or disbanded by military officers to meet the purposes of the republican party, even after the States had been provided with governments to suit that party, and were represented in both Houses of Congress. Drunken Federal judges issued writs of prohibition at midnight against the meeting of legislative assemblies; and their orders, while confessedly void, were sustained by the power of the Army and Navy of the United States. Fraud, bribery, and the sale of votes, offices, and patronage were openly practiced, while honesty was spurned and derided in the legislative councils of the States. In proof of the destructive effects of these methods of government, I bring the following facts touching the burdens of debt that were laid upon them and the terrible taxation inflicted upon them to feed and curich the men who were set over them in authority.

laid upon them and the terrible taxation inflicted upon them to feed and enrich the men who were set over them in authority.

In the State of Arkansas the people were recently agitated with bitter dissensions. The question was whether they would consent to bear burdens imposed upon them by the most atrocious frauds rather than incur the censures of those who would be only too eager to stigmatize them as repudiators of honest debts for being unwilling to take such a yoke upon their necks. They have wisely and courageously voted that it is better to silence the tongue of calumny by yielding to the demands of fraud and injustice than to suffer the represent of the the demands of fraud and injustice, than to suffer the reproach of the least hesitancy in meeting the engagements of those who wrongfully represented the State.

On the 18th of January, 1875, when the people of Arkansas were at last permitted to speak for the State through its Legislature, they adopted the following joint resolution:

Senate joint resolution No. 8.

last permitted to speak for the State through its Legislature, they adopted the following joint resolution:

Senate joint resolution No. 8.

Whereas in the year 1863 the government of Arkansas was taken from the hands of its people and placed under the control of alien adventurers; and
Whereas the present Legislature is the first that has been chosen by the people of the State since that time which has been allowed to assemble; and
Whereas the present General Assembly finds the treasury of the State empty, the bonds of the State dishonored in the markets of the world, and future revenues anticipated by the issue of treasurer's certificates of indebtedness and other tems of a floating debt amounting in the aggregate to about two millions of dollars; and
Whereas it is the wish of the people to re-establish the credit of the State, and to pay as far as possible all of its just debts, and to this end it is thought proper to show to the world the manner in which the means of the State have been squandered and its credit bankrupted:
Therefore, the General Assembly invites the attention of the public to these facts: When the government of the State was taken away from its people, in 1888, the total of the bonded debt of the State was taken away from its people, in 1888, the total of the bonded debt of the State on all accounts was $3,232,401.50; its floating debt was nothing; there was in the treasury in lawful money of the United States the sum of $112,337.33. From July 3, 1888, to October 1, 1874, there was paid into the treasury, on all accounts, the sum of $6,674,511.05, or about one million one hundred thousand dollars per annum. There was paid out during that period, on account of interest and the sinking fund, the sum of $6,674,511.05, or about one million one hundred thousand dollars per annum. There was paid out during that period, on account of interest and the sinking fund, the sum of $6,674,511.05, or about one million one hundred thousand dollars per annum.

No further comment is needed to prove that the people of Arkansas had no other hope of relief than such as the democratic party could afford them against the despoilers of that great State. When we contrast with the facts and figures stated in the joint resolutions just read the expenditures of the State government of Arkansas for the years 1874 to 1880, inclusive, the comparison will show that the restoration of democratic rule in that State has been the only means that could save the people from ruin, or could give to their just creditors any hope of the payment of their debts. The average ordinary current expense of the State government for each of the six years of carpet-bag rule was $1,026,551.07, while under democratic rule since 1874 to 1880, inclusive, the average annual expenditures for the same purposes have been only $251,803.59.

In Tennessee, at the close of the war, the State debt was $32,562,-323.58. In 1870, when Tennessee was restored to democratic rule, the State debt was $41,000,000. The State expenses for the years 1867-78-79, under democratic rule, they averaged $500,000 per annum.

The debt of North Carolina at the close of the war was, in round numbers, $11,000,000. In September, 1870, when the State was restored to democratic rule, the debt had increased to $29,900,000. This does not include about $9,000,000 of bonds that were declared unconstitutional. The whole increase of obligations against the State under stitutional. The whole increase of obligations against the State under the republican régime was $26,000,000.

The republican Legislature of 1868-69 cost, in mileage and per diem, $48,668.55 more than the two democratic Legislatures of 1870-71 and 1872-73 together.

The aggregate cost of the republican convention of 1868 and the Legislature of 1868-69-70, in mileage and per diem, was $517,621.75.

The five democratic Legislatures, from 1870 to 1880, inclusive, embracing ten years, together with the convention of 1875, cost, in mileage and per diem, $671,129.63, which is only $153,507.88 more than the one republican convention and Legislature. The republican Legislature cost, in mileage and per diem, as stated, $430,958.60. The average cost of the five democratic Legislatures, in mileage and per diem, was $128,928.41, or $302,030.19 less than the one republican Legislature.

diem, was $128,928.41, or $302,030.19 less than the one republican Legislature.

The expenses of the fiscal year 1871, which was the first year after the democrats got control of the Legislature, were $564,929.26 less than the year immediately preceding.

Four years of republican rule (1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872) cost $3,073,252.28. Four years of democratic rule (1877, 1878, 1879, and 1880) cost, including amounts expended in permanent improvements, $2,146,712.03. From this amount deduct $324,374.50, the amount expended in the permanent improvement under democratic rule, and it leaves $1,822,337.53. The difference, then, in cost of the government for four years under republican rule is $1,250,914.75 in favor of democratic rule and democratic economy.

At the close of the war Texas had no public debt. At the close of republican misrule in that State it had an ascertained debt of $3,614,568, and other large items of floating debt are still coming to light.

At the close of the war Mississippi owed $812,251.82 to the Chickasaw school fund, a trust fund on which the State is liable for the

When the democrats were placed in charge of the State government in 1876 the State debt was $3,341,162.89. The gross expenditures of the State government for each year since 1869 are as follows:

1870	$1,061,249 90
1871	1,729,046 34
1872	1,596,828 64
1873	1, 450, 632 80
1874	1, 319, 281 60
1875	1, 430, 192 82
1876	020,100 00
1877
1879	553, 326 81

In this State the cost of republican government was annually nearly double the cost under democratic government. Florida owed a debt of $370,617 at the close of the war, and in 1877, when the State went into the control of the democratic party, the bonded debt was increased by the sum of $919,796.65. This debt represents money borrowed to carry on the State government, and in addition to this the receipts into the treasury from taxation from 1868 to 1876, inclusive, were $3,032,359.83. The annual average expenses of the State government during democratic rule were less by $160.840 than they were were $3,032,535.33. The aimtal average expenses of the State government during democratic rule were less by $160,840 than they were under republican rule. These burdens, which were fully doubled in debts of municipal governments in the counties, were borne by property assessed at $30,817,875.

The bonded debt of Louisiana prior to January 1, 1861, was $3,848,000.

The bonded debt issued since the war and up to 1871, was $18,583,000. The expenditures of the State government from 1868 to and including the first quarter of 1879, are shown by the following table:

* First quarter.

The amount of money received by the State on $12,141,240 of the bonds issued since the war was $6,893,307.31. In this single item the State lost about twice the amount of the entire State debt existing when the war commenced, and to this extravagant use of the credit of the State is to be added an increase of expenses of the State government under nine years of republican rule of more than $2,000,000 annually over its expenses under democratic rule. The total debt of the State of Alabama in November, 1865, was $3,893,770.13. This included arrearages of interest due on bonds. Alabama had gold shipped to England through the blockade, and had kept the interest on her debt due there paid up, during the entire period of the war.

In 1874, when the democrats came into power, the direct debt of the State had increased to $11,677,470, and the indorsement obligations amounted to $18,386,098. In addition-to this $5,103,000 of obligations held by railways had been surrendered in lieu of an issue of direct bonds for $1,192,000—showing a total increase of apparent debts and obligations of $31,272,797.13 in about nine years. This charge was laid upon a people who in 1860 owned taxable property to the value of $725,000,000, which was reduced in 1874 to barely $160,000,000.

The comparative cost of conducting the State government under State lost about twice the amount of the entire State debt existing

The comparative cost of conducting the State government under republican and democratic administrations will be readily seen from

The republican administrations had absorbed $7,783,700 of borrowed money, and had paid no interest on the real public debt, leaving still a deficit in the treasury on the account of almost every year. The average annual taxation was, under republican rule, $1,512,522, when no interest was paid on the public debt, while the average annual taxation under democratic administration has been $922,092. And this paid all State expenses and the interest on the public debt, and left a balance in the treasury of $314,922.84, with no unpaid warrants outstanding, to be applied to necessary public improvements. This excess in annual taxation of $590,730, and the added sum of money borrowed by the republicans on the credit of the State and the increase of debt from accumulations of interest not paid by them, made the annual cost of government more than two and one-half times as great as the cost of democratic government.

I have not succeeded in getting from South Carolina and Georgia The republican administrations had absorbed $7,783,700 of borrowed

I have not succeeded in getting from South Carolina and Georgia the statistics that the governors of other Southern States have kindly furnished me. I have a compilation of the debt of Georgia and of South Carolina which, though unofficial, is believed to be substantially

In 1865 the direct debt of Georgia was $5,706,500. In 1872 this debt had been increased to $8,618,750. In 1865 Georgia owed no indorsement debt, but in 1872 obligations had been created against it amounting to more than thirty million dollars.

South Carolina was marked for destruction, and the process of devastation excited less of sympathy in the hearts of the destroyers than vastation excited less of sympathy in the hearts of the destroyers than the fires of Smithfield or the racks and screws of the Inquisition.

The vultures found "enough of good stealing" to gorge them with their prey, but the witnessing world only trusted them to destroy what wealth had been accumulated, and would risk nothing upon their capacity to bind the future earnings of the people. They were confessedly too depraved to be entitled to credit on any reasonable terms, and so they could not find a market for their pledges of "the faith and credit of the State." Their bonds and mortgages attempted to be foisted upon the property of the people of South Carolina were so tainted with the crimes of the pretended legislators that those whose resentments upheld the saturnalia of robbery and fraud which rioted in the State held their noses when the bonds were offered them for sale. They were too well assured of a reactionary feeling among the people of the United States to be found in possession of any of these badges of fraud and crime when reason and justice should be restored to their rightful sway. The bonds did not largely sell, and the result was that the republican rulers of South Carolina had to content themselves with an addition of almost nine millions to the bonded debt of the State.

bonded debt of the State.

They were compelled to rely upon the "beak and claw" of the tax-collector to rob money out of the people, but they took care that the least possible portion of it should be diverted from the pockets of the legislators and executive officers and expended for public purposes. They intercepted the school funds and directed them into capital stock for establishing drinking-saloons and brothels; and the bread of charity provided for the poor was spatched from their hands to be of charity provided for the poor was snatched from their hands to be converted into jewels and furbelows to deck the persons of the most depraved people. Figures give no analysis of crimes like these. They are useless to furnish the statistics of a sea of corruption, where there was nothing honest to be compared with what was all

The increase of county and other municipal indebtedness was almost if not quite equal to the increase of the State debts throughout the South. Taking them together they added more than three hundred million dollars to the burdens of a people whose tax-paying capacity had shrunk to one-fourth of what it was in 1860. This enormous weight of debt was followed by nothing of actual value to the country, which was made almost a desert by the leeching of mercenary politicians.

This was the condition of the Southern States when they and the other States (classed with them in our political nomenclature as Southother States (classed with them in our political nomenclature as Southern States) that felt aggrieved at these wrongs and endangered by such usurpations fastened their hopes of a restored country upon the possibility of again placing it under the security of a restored Constitution. This was and is their true bond of union—the real tie that unites them—and the responsibility for their solidity rests with the party that has forced this duty upon the friends of constitutional liberty. As well may we expect the Christian when "walking in the valley of the shadow of death" to throw away the staff that supports him and discard the sacred book that comforts him, to shut his eyes to the hope of deliverance and to reject the sympathies of the friend who stays lovingly by his side, as to expect the people of the South, in their extremity, to abandon the shelter of the Constitution and to renounce and reject all affiliation with those faithful and true men renounce and reject all affiliation with those faithful and true men who have not "passed by on the other side," but have poured oil and wine into their wounds.

Every consideration that could influence honest men to adhere to lifelong convictions bears upon our course in this matter, and compels us to place our reliance for safety upon the Constitution of the country, and to trust the men who revere and obey it rather than rely upon the promises or adulations of those who confess that they have ruled the promises or adulations of those who confess that they have ruled the country by a law higher than the Constitution and outside of and beyond the powers conferred upon them by its provisions. We do not know when the republican party will again resort to these violent departures from constitutional government. We only look forward with apprehension to that hour. We will keep our course in this business, and will trust to the power of truth and justice to commend our conduct to the God of nations.

If to be thus united and solid is a crime, how shall it be expiated? Shall this be done by our becoming united and "solid" with the republican party? Or shall some of us go over and some remain where we are? These questions put to shame the men who decry us for being solid as democrats, when their demand for our disintegration would, if complied with, only make us solid as republicans, or else, dividing us, would leave us at the mercy of a party united on a race issue. It us, would leave us at the mercy of a party united on a race issue. It is only because we are democrats that they complain of us, and not because we are of one mind, or, as they say, solid. In what way shall we disintegrate, and whither shall our dust be scattered? To whom and to what extent shall we commit our destiny when we have abdicated the right of free will and free judgment in the control of our own affairs, and have extinguished the lights of reason and experience that have hitherto been our guides? How is the South to become less solid than it is for the principles of the democratic party? Who shall be the first to abandon the ground that his conscience requires him to hold?

quires him to hold?

The following of that man would be small indeed who would openly confess the motives that would lead him to abuse his conscience in order to improve his condition or to avoid a manly struggle for the rights of his people. The people will continue to think and act for themselves; and the strongest man in all the South could not induce one thousand men to follow him into the republican party for the purpose of proving that the South will ever be tolerant of the abuse of the Constitution for the sake of ease, or prosperity, or the emoluments of office, or to gratify the lust of power.

To a man of true principles, who has a firm confidence in the justice of his course of conduct, defeat is only a disappointment; a postponement of his hopes. It is not destruction, and it never breeds despair.

It sometimes happens that a present defeat is of more value than

It sometimes happens that a present defeat is of more value than a victory. A victory won too soon often leads to a final and irretrievable loss; while defeat is a blessing to a cause that needs must triumph in the end when it ripens us for the hour of final success. In at least one important matter in the recent election the people of the United States have truly "plucked the flower of safety from the nettle, danger." We can now better afford to wait the return of the people to democratic constructions of the Constitution and methods of covernment since the people have again and finally. I have not of government since the people have again, and finally, I hope, pronounced in favor of the sanctity of their traditional policy, that two presidential terms shall be the limit of any man's ambition for the supreme executive power.

I anticipate no result from the administration of the President-elect which could be compared in its evil effects upon the country with that which would certainly have befallen us had not the strength and that which would certainly have befallen us had not the strength and energy of the democratic party compelled the republican party at Chicago to stand by this time-honored barrier to imperialism.

It is easy to discern that the President-elect will have no ordinary task if he undertakes to preside with impartiality in the high office to which he is called. It will be a terrible rebuff to the men who claim to have elected him on their demand for a sectional President to rule the South as a subject country, if he should find that he is compelled by his convictions of duty to deny to them the privilege of succeeding him in power over a pathway again to be strewn with the wreck of States dismantled and a people destroyed.

Whether the President-elect will follow the example of the people in their efforts to unify the country in feeling and interests, or will yield to ambitious politicians in their demand that the country shall be sectionalized so as to secure to them the power of the stronger sec-be sectionalized so as to secure to them the power of the stronger section, is a question of the future.

The people, and especially the commercial men of the North and the South, know each other better now than at any time in the past. the South, know each other better now than at any time in the past. Their business relations are more intimate and satisfactory than they have ever been. There are few merchants or manufacturers at the North who have not their traveling agents in the South. Through these agents they are constantly acquiring definite information about everything and everybody in the South. Their trade with us continues to increase. This one fact demonstrates the false-hood of the assertions that newspapers and politicians have dinned into the ears of the world, that the southern people have resorted to crime and force to supply the want of numbers in their efforts to govern the States of the South. Such prosperity as has doubled our productions in ten years and gained the confidence of commercial circles everywhere is not the result of crime or misgovernment, but of honest industry, wise and economical government, and assiduous circles everywhere is not the result of crime or misgovernment, but of honest industry, wise and economical government, and assiduous attention to the material improvement of the country.

Democratic government in the South has enabled us to accomplish these results, and has thus commended itself to our confidence. I will not attempt longer to occupy the attention of the Senate in the examination of the causes that have led the people of the Southern States to prefer democratic to republican rule in their local affairs and in the Government of the United States. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of our course, it has not been dictated by a spirit of hatred or resentment toward the northern people. We claim, and we believe justly, that in all our history the southern people in time of peace have never attempted an act of aggression upon the people of the North or any interference with their local upon the people of the North or any interference with their local affairs.

On many occasions, when opportunity of displaying resentment was afforded by the outbreak of masses of dangerous men in the North and by social disturbances that constantly threatened the peace of northern communities, almost every man in the South has been found in sympathy with the conservative part of those people and ready to lend assistance to the support of law and order.

When the country was in a state of intense anxiety four years ago over the succession to the Presidency, to the quiet and conservative course of the South it was chiefly owing that we passed through the dangerous strait without the shedding of blood. No Southern State has ever refused its full support to the Government, in men and money, in any war with a foreign power; and the courage and fidelity of its soldiery is a part of the glory of our history.

I allude to these matters only to justify the statement that neither in its policy nor in the sentiments of the people is the South arrayed against the Government or against the people of the North. It is in its policy nor in the sentiments of the people is the South arrayed against the Government or against the people of the North. It is solid "for the Constitution and the Union and the enforcement of the laws." The men who in former years assembled under the banners that bore this motto are to-day among the truest, most intrepid, and influential of the millions who are now united as democrats. I honor them for their fidelity to their principles.

There is another respect in which we are solid in the South. We are of one mind and heart in the indulgence of the deepest sense of cratitude to the democrats of the North for their confidence and symmetric descriptions.

are of one mind and neart in the indulgence of the deepest sense or gratitude to the democrats of the North for their confidence and sympathy when we were weak and oppressed. We know that this sensibility to the suffering of our people has involved many of them in the loss of great opportunities to serve the country in eminent places, and has caused them even suffering and disparagement. We would more than deserve all that we have had to suffer if we could now turn coldly away from them and censure their motives by asking them to dishout their coverage and disparad their coverage. them to disband their organization as a dishonored thing, and to distribute themselves among other political parties, new or old, in search of more favorable opportunities to regain power or position. I can never cease to remember with gratitude, affection, and pride the labors and sacrifices of the democrats of the Senate from the Northern States in behalf of the people of the South since the close of the civil way. They can paye be forgetten. The remember to see the civil way. of the civil war. They can never be forgotten. The remotest posterity will fully understand the motives of their labors, their self-denial in our service, and the great ability with which they defended a helpless people against organized injustice and oppression. Let those who will now "bend the pregnant hinges of the knee" to the arrogant demands of centralized power "that thrift may follow fawning;" let those who fear to espouse the right for its own sake invite the hastening steps of imperial power in its march against the heart of the Republic. They can never claim to share in the honorable renown of those men who in leaving the Senate will leave to the country a glorious record of duty well performed, of faithful allegiance to right and justice, and of courage equal to the highest demands of constitutional liberty and to the defense of the poorest and humblest man in all our wide borders.

Mr. President, we ought to unite now in forcing upon the attention of this country the doctrine of the right of local self-government in favor of the negroes in the District of Columbia. While that doctrine was never put in the Constitution of the United States with my personal assent, it has received the sanction of my oath as a Senator, and I am bound to uphold it even against the republican party. Let the republicans come forward now and show this country that they are what they pretend to be, men who are devoted to the idea of the equality of citizenship among all classes in this country without respect to race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

PRINTING OF SURVEYS.

Mr. BROWN. Before that is done, I desire, without interfering with the regular order, to ask leave, by unanimous consent, to introduce a resolution instructing the Public Printer to furnish the Senate copies of certain printed surveys that are necessary for the use of

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the consideration of it, and I think there will be no debate about it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate, at the earliest practicable moment, copies of the surveys furnished by the Chief of Engineers of the Altamaha, the Ocmulgee, the Oconee, the Canoochee, and the Savannah Rivers, between Savannah and Augusta, and also the survey of Romney Marsh, near Doboy, and the mouth of Jekyl Creek, as the printed copies of such surveys are necessary for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to it unless there is an addition Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to it unless there is an addition made to it which will include all other surveys made. It is not right that the Public Printer should take up the whole time in printing these special reports when surveys have been made in Missouri and elsewhere that ought to be furnished to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know they are not in. I move as an amend-

Mr. BROWN. The others may be in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know they are not in. I move as an amendment to add "and all other reports of surveys."

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the resolution had better go to the Committee on Printing. There may be some reason why this work should not precede other important work now in the hands of the Public Printer.

Mr. BROWN. I beg the Senator not to urge the reference, for the reason that if we do not get these reports of surveys so that we can lay them before the Committee on Commerce before it makes up its bill on rivers and harbors, it will refuse to consider ampropriations. bill on rivers and harbors, it will refuse to consider appropriations for any rivers and harbors where this estimate has not been made by the Engineer Department. I have been twice to the Chief of Engineers, and he informs me that these reports have long since been delivered over, and are in the hands of the Public Printer. I suppose they are simply lying by while some other printing is being done. They are very important, and if the resolution is referred to the Committee on Printing the matter may be delayed and we not get the reports in

Mr. WHYTE. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there will be no delay. The Committee on Printing has its work entirely up. The resolution can be reported to-morrow if there is good reason why the matter should be urged.

Mr. BROWN. With that understanding I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Kernan, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McPherson. Mr. President, when I took the floor last evening I intended to discuss somewhat at length the relation which the testimony here presented bears to this case, but as I read the very able and exhaustive sneech of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard.]

and exhaustive speech of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] which I had not the pleasure of listening to yesterday, it has rendered that course by me entirely unnecessary. Therefore I shall de-contractor that he should receive not only the support of the Government but reimbursement for his losses. I was referred to the testimony of the petitioner; I was referred also, I think by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] not now in his seat, to the testimony of General Craig. Upon examining that testimony I find it nowhere stated in the testimony of General Craig that Mr. Lincoln had agreed to recompense Mr. Holladay for losses sustained by reason of Indian depredations or otherwise. I do find, however, in a letter which purports to have been addressed by General Craig to his superior officer. General J. G. Blunt, the following words: his superior officer, General J. G. Blunt, the following words:

I am in receipt to day of a dispatch informing me that the Postmaster-General has ordered the Overland Mail Company to abandon the North Platte and Sweetwater portion and remove their stages and stock to the route south of this, running through Bridger's Pass.

I have no doubt General Craig refers to the letter of the Postmaster-General which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Cameron] who makes this report introduced yesterday as testimony. This appears to bear date of the 7th day of July, 1862, and only three days preceding the letter to which General Craig refers. Inasmuch as the letter, or order, as it is called, of the Postmaster-General has been submitted to the Senate as testimony in this case, I will take the privilege of reading it:

Overland Mail Company. Ordered:

What is the order?

Permit change of route-

Not "order." The contractor is not ordered to change; he is allowed to "permit change of route"- so as to leave present road and keep along the South Platte and Cherokee Trail via Bridger's Pass, and intersect present route at Fort Bridger, shortening the distance one hundred miles, provided the offices on the present route omitted by the change be supplied with the mails once a week.

Here is not an order of the Postmaster-General to remove the petitioner from the old route to the new one, but he is permitted to make tioner from the old route to the new one, but he is permitted to make the change.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me a moment? It is not claimed by any one that the change of route made in 1862 was made pursuant to any military order. It is claimed, however, that the Indian disturbances on the north route were so great that the route could not be maintained, and consequently it became necessary for that reason to change it. The north route was exposed to Indian incursions at any time; the south route was farther removed from those hostile Indians; and for that reason it was thought advisable to make the change. It is only claimed that the Post-Office Department authorized or at least consented to the change upon the conditions stated in the order just read by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. I fully agree with the honorable Senator in that view of the case, that the Post-Office Department permitted and that the military authorities advised the change for the reason stated, but it appears here—and I ask the attention of the Senate especially to this point—that by the change of route it shortened the distance one hundred miles over the route then employed by the petitioner in the transportation of the mails. I wish to call attention to another very important phase of this question, that while the order advised or permitted a change of route it did not relieve Mr. Holladay from the performance of his contract, a portion of his contract at least, upon the old route, because it required him to transport the mails over the old route or to the intermediate offices at least once a week. With respect to the testimony of General Craig I will go further. He says in the same communication to General Blunt:

My instructions require me to protect the Overland Mail alone, the telegraph line and emigration not being mentioned.

Showing that an extraordinary amount of protection was given to the petitioner, Mr. Holladay, in the transportation of the mails which was denied to the telegraph company and to the different trains passing over that route. What further does he say?

I am satisfied that the mail company and the Government would both be benefited by the change of route at a proper time, and so wrote the Postmaster-General some weeks since.

I am also cited by I think the honorable Senator from Kentucky to the testimony of George K. Otis. On examination of the testimony of Mr. Otis it appears—I will read his own language:

I was not present at the interview-

Speaking of the interview between President Lincoln and Mr. Holladay

but Mr. Holladay returned and informed me he had a very pleasant interview with President Lincoln, and that President Lincoln said that on no account must the road be stopped; that at all hazards the mail must be carried, and that he would be fully protected by the Government, and that he would be indemnified for his

He was not present at the interview, but Mr. Holladay informed him on his return; therefore it is the testimony still of Mr. Holladay. But we go further in that testimony. We find upon one occasion he did come to Washington as the agent of Mr. Holladay, and we will read his own language on this interview:

I saw President Lincoln, and told him what I wanted and what we must have. President Lincoln listened to what I had to say, and said: "Mr. Otis, we are in a great strait with the country to-day; at this time we have very few, if any, troops to spare. But I want you to understand, as the agent of Mr. Holladay, that this line must, under no consideration, be stopped."

What did Mr. Lincoln do? He gave him a letter to General Curtis and he instructed General Curtis to take steps to furnish the line with troops, to see that it was thoroughly and fully protected, as it was of the most vital importance to the welfare of the country. He

I took his letter and presented it to General Curtis. General Curtis did everything that was in his power to protect us, and the line was restocked, and we continued to run it.

In other words, after the measure of protection which Mr. Lincoln had authorized General Curtis to afford, they continued to run the line, the measure of protection being afforded. I understand that there is nothing on the part of the promise of Mr. Lincoln to either Mr. Holladay or his agent, so far as it appears from any testimony other than the testimony of Mr. Holladay himself, that any promise of indemnification was given, but simply a promise of protection, and of indemnification was given, but simply a promise of protection, and the protection was afforded.

Mr. President, this case, as I understand it, is a very plain one. Mr. Holladay agreed to transport the mails. There is no provision of his contract exonerating him from carrying the mails, nor is he entitled to any claim upon the Government by reason of any act of the country's enemy. If he found it impossible to transport the mails by reason of Indian hostilities, he had the right to appeal to the equity of the Government, and the Government would have released him from the obligation of a contract which he could not perform by reason of the enemy. Mr. Holladay did appeal to the Government, saying that there were depredations upon his mail-route by Indians, and the military power of the Government advised him to change his route. He did change his route and did receive the protection which the Government had the country of the Government advised him to change his route. did change his route and did receive the protection which the Government promised.

Now Mr. Holladay comes to the Senate and demands in addition to Now Mr. Holladay comes to the Senate and demands in addition to the sum of $359,739 as compensation for depredations by Indians the additional sum of $50,000, which he claims to be an amount of money expended by him in removing his stations from the old to the new route—from an old route where without conditions he had agreed to transport the United States mails to a new route over which the Government promised him protection. It was clearly to the advantage of Mr. Holladay to make this change. To continue upon the whole route would have subjected his buildings and his stock to certain capture. To go upon the new route would be to afford him such protection as the Government could give him. Considering the vast capture. To go upon the new rouse would be to allore him steen protection as the Government could give him. Considering the vast amount of money which he had voluntarily and, as I claim, in the performance of his contract, needlessly exposed to the perils of capture, considering as I say this vast amount of property consisting of stores that were intended to be sold to the ranchmen and to the trains stores that were intended to be sold to the ranchmen and to the trains passing over the line, in addition to vast appliances needed for hotel accommodations for the travelers over the plains, in addition to the seventeen hundred and fifty horses and mules and one hundred and ten coaches, used mainly for the same purpose, it seems to me to have refused that protection would have been madness. The Government by that issued to Mr. Holladay a policy of insurance, and the only premium on insurance that Mr. Holladay was to pay was the simple cost of transferring his stations from one route to the other. The protection was given him. Now, after he has received not only the cost of transferring his stations from one route to the other. The protection was given him. Now, after he has received not only the protection for the stock needed for carrying the mail but the protection for all the property, amounting, as I have somewhere heard it stated, to nearly two million dollars, Mr. Holladay comes back here and demands that the Government should pay him back the premium, and that, too, a sum to be fixed by Mr. Holladay's own employés and without permitting the Government to have a single word to say about it, without permitting the Government to bring competent testimony to prove the nature of the claim.

I remember, in 1878, when the bill was under discussion by the Senate, the honorable Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] who is not now in his seat, on that occasion thus characterized this bill. With the permission of the Senate and without sending it to the Secre-

the permission of the Senate and without sending it to the Secretary's desk to have it read, as I only wish to read detached portions of the speech, I will read it from my own place. First:

of the speech, I will read it from my own place. First:

But coming back to this question of the destruction of property on this overland route, there was not during the entire war a single troop from Kansas on the route until I took my own regiment out there in the spring of 1805, and as long as this matter has been mentioned I may say further that while on the route, and while under direction to see that that mail was carried at all hazards, I did carry it on nearly three hundred miles of the route of Mr. Holladay for nearly two months, during which time he had not a teamster or a mule of his own on that part of the line—carried it with Government mules and Government horses, with Government private soldiers as drivers. Now, I submit that if this man is to be paid, the Government is entitled at least to a recoupment for the full amount of that service so rendered. It was a part of it which I did not care to say anything about. More than all that, it was a part of the nuwritten history, and it was a part of the history in the mouths of all men along that route, that every time a coach was taken there were at least a dozen mules counted against the Government that had not been taken at all, and that was the talk among Mr. Holladay's employés themselves. I say from the knowledge I have that I believe two-thirds of this claim is just as base a fraud as was ever attempted to be imposed on the American Congress.

Still further:

Still further:

It is nowhere stated in this report, nor is it stated by a single member of the committee on this floor, that Mr. Holladay did not receive ample pay in the $365,000 per annum which he was to receive under his contract. It is true that the argument of this committee all the way through is upon the assumption that as the Government was bound to have that mail carried it was bound to respond in damages to Mr. Holladay for all he lost while carrying the mail. But the obligation to carry the mail was all on the part of the Government until that contract was let out, and then it became the obligation of Mr. Holladay, and in assuring Mr. Holladay that he should have protection in carrying the mail Mr. Lincoln and his Postmaster-General or any other authority of the Government only did what; tid did nearly every day during that time with reference to the men who were pushing out upon the border and with reference to the men who were carrying freight across the plains. They did it in regard to all of them. There was not a man who had a train to take from Leavenworth or Omaha to Salt Lake City that did not importune the military commanders for help and did not receive assurances that he should have protection. They all stood upon precisely the same footing; and by the same token if Mr. Holladay is to be paid, those men whose trains were plundered, whose mules and cattle were run off by the same Indians, ought to have their pay also, because they were under the promise of protection of the Government. The Government did assume and did try to protect Mr. Holladay. It did protect him in a larger measure than it protected anybody else engaged in business on the plains during those years. It intended to do it. It did it for its own purposes. It wanted the mails to go through, notwithstanding it cost more by the effort to do it than would have been required if it had not had it to do; but it did it, and the fact that it assumed to do it, the fact that it cost thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to do it, instead of constituting a claim on the part of Mr. Holladay against the Government, ought to be the other way. The Government spent money, spent lives, in protecting that route, just as it spent money in protecting other private property; and yet no one is to be indemnified but he, a mail contractor, having a contract large enough, intended to be large enough to cover all the contingencies of that service, and it is large enough to cover them. He is the only man who comes in here and seeks to be repaid for his losses!

I say that even under the theory which the commit

Again:

Again:

The houses that Mr. Holladay built upon that line of road, every house, and every stable, and every corral were just as much his property for other purposes as for the purposes connected with the mail-route. The houses there were just as valuable for other purposes as the house of the ranchman was. In addition to the houses having been used, as the most of them were, for purposes connected with carrying the mails, they were used for other purposes connected with the overland travel. They were partially hotels for passengers who traveled in the stages; they were engaged in the overland trade generally. A large proportion of this property was in no sense used by Mr. Holladay for the purposes incident to or connected with the carrying of the mails.

Mr. President, the testimony of the honorable Senator from Kansas was easily attainable. It is nowhere stated in the report that the committee had availed itself of the opportunity always present of securing his testimony. And yet the Senate deliberately took up this bill at a time when that honorable Senator is absent from his seat, a bill at a time when that honorable Senator is absent from his seat, a Senator whose high character and whose professed knowledge of all the facts governing this case would make his statements of great value to the Senate in informing the gentlemen of the Senate respecting the rightfulness of his claim. I say at such a time the Senate has decided to consider this bill, and, if possible, reach a final determination and decision upon it. This seems to me to be a departure from the usual custom of the Senate. It certainly is not attended with the same degree of caution which has characterized the legislation of this body since the democratic party became the dominant party here. It was owing largely to this class of legislation, doubtful in its character, that the democratic party was given a majority in this Chamacter, that the acter, that the democratic party was given a majority in this Chamber. Our republican friends, if distinguished for anything, have been for their generous use of the Government money and Government credit, and they have wondered strangely at the audacity of the people in attempting to criticize their proceeding.

Mr. President, this petitioner, we are told, has been for fourteen long years knocking at the doors of Congress for relief. During ten years of that long and weary period—certainly long and weary years for Mr. Holladay, if report be true—the republican party was in control of both Holladay, if report be true—the republican party was in control of both branches of the Federal Congress; and during that whole time, when the testimony was easily attainable, when the facts upon which this claim is based were known to all men, a claim so equitable, we are told to-day, that even testimony is not needed at this late day to prove its justice, why was it so long delayed? I cannot account for it except upon the idea that as the country then understood this case and others of like character it required the exercise of a little more courage than was prudent for any political party to indulge in. Certainly, considering the justice of this case, it was a very cowardly act, and for one I feel disposed to vote for a postponement of the day of deliverance of this gentleman to such time as our republican friends may have full credit for doing him justice.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean the 5th of March?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will say to the honorable Senator that if all we hear and read be true the day is not far distant—he will not have we hear and read be true the day is not far distant-he will not have long to wait.

Now, Mr. President, let me say in all seriousness to my friends on this side of the Chamber, that in the hour fixed by rumor when the scepter is to depart from us, let us not signalize it by a departure from the caution which has characterized all our conduct since we have been in control and enabled us to give direction to the legislation of this body; for certainly it can be said with respect to the Senate, and especially so—and to its credit be it said—with respect to the House at the other end of the Capitol, that the legislation has been of a character favoring economy and retrenchment, and opposed to jobbery in every form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]
Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. KERNAN, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That Ben. Holladay be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of any amount for which the United States are justly liable to him on account of any seizure or destruction by hostile Indians of property owned and used by him in performing his contract with the United States to transport the mails on what was known as the Overland Mail Route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, between the year 1860 and the 13th of November, 1866; also on account of any loss of property and expenses incurred in changing his route in carrying the mail, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, and also for any property owned by said Holladay and taken and used by United States troops; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to hear and determine said suit upon the merits and render judgment therein in accordance with the rights of the parties.

SEC. 2. That either party shall have the right to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims is to the Supreme Court of the United States at any time within sixty days after the rendition thereof.

SEC. 3. That if the said Holladay shall not commence said action in the Court of Claims within six months from the passage of this act, and prosecute the same to effect, then the said claims hereinbefore mentioned shall be forever barred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think that I am in favor of this

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think that I am in favor of this amendment in substance. Probably if the Senate were inclined to send this matter to the Court of Claims, some little change ought to be made in some of its phraseology, and possibly we ought to provide for the use of any affidavits and other ex parte testimony that may have been taken in support of this claim before Congress or in the Executive Departments where the affiants are now dead or beyond reach, taken for what weight they are entitled to, the matter has been running so long. It is now almost twenty years since the matter began, the event of carrying the mail, and it is fifteen years since it terminated; and if this claimant has been justly and earnestly enit terminated; and if this claimant has been justly and earnestly endeavoring to have his claim disposed of by Congress, upon the theory, right or wrong in point of law—and I say nothing as to whether it is right or wrong—that the Court of Claims had not adequate jurisdiction to give him the redress to which he thought himself entitled, that may be sufficient excuse for his coming here at all, and for his not having sued the United States in the Court of Claims for a breach of any contract express or implied that the law authorized him to proceed about. In such a case I should be willing ordinarily, and stating it with reserve and with qualifications, to allow ex parte affidavits to be considered by the court if the affiant was, when the matter came to a judical investigation, beyond reach, so as not to deprive a sincere claimant of any means of supporting his pretensions, on account of the accident of death or emigration or whatever it might be, count of the accident of death or emigration or whatever it might be, count of the accident of death or emigration or whatever it might be, while he had been sincerely seeking redress in a tribunal that he believed to be the only one that had adequate jurisdiction to consider the grievance that he thought he ought to be compensated for.

The question then is, subject to what I have said, whether this matter ought to be sent to the Court of Claims at all, or whether the Senate ought on the recommendation of the Committee on Claims to pay out of the Treasury of the United States more than half a million of dollars upon such evidence and upon such conclusions and facts as the committee have reported to us. If the case is so clear in respect of principle, of history, and of the quantum of redress to which this claimant thinks himself entitled, that there is left no reasonable doubt in the minds of any considerable number of Senators as to the propriety of requiring the tax-payers to pay this half a million of propriety of requiring the tax-payers to pay this half a million of dollars, then we ought to pass this bill. If there is such a reasonable doubt arising from the imperfections of ex parte testimony, the difficulties as to a complete and sifting development of the circumstances under which these events occurred, and in respect of the valuations and estimates put upon property consumed and destroyed and so on, as to leave us in a certain degree of maze as to the quantum of justice, if any be due, that ought to be administered, then certainly in some way doing impartial justice to this claimant and to those against whom he makes the claim, the people of the United States, we ought to provide for some sort of an investigation where both sides can be heard; where witnesses can be examined and cross-examined; and where documents and reports of officials on every side during transactions, of the Interior Department as connected with the Indians and of the War Department as connected with hostilities and of the Post-Office Department as connected with changes of routes and changes of stations, can be fully and fairly heard and scrutinized and considered.

I am sure, Mr. President, that the most ardent advocate and be-liever in the totality of this claim would scarcely controvert what I have so far said. Now, I confess I have a great sympathy with Mr. Holladay; he is one of those brave and energetic men who do so much toward extending and protecting civilization on the border; but there are two things that have struck me in the report of this committee, though perhaps I should state more correctly that it is the want of two things that has struck me. In the first place, the Committee on Claims has not, so far as I can discover, furnished us with the original contracts under which this service was performed, so that every Senator could see whether or not the quantum of compensation that was to be allowed for this service had been largely enhanced in order to cover the risk of these very Indian depredations of which we hear so much. Certainly it is within the competence of a citizen of the United States to engage to carry the mail anywhere and to take all risks of fire and sea and flood and robbery and hostiland to take all risks of fire and sea and flood and robbery and hostility if the United States are willing to pay him a sum which in his judgment will enable him to run the risk with a fair prospect of meeting with an adequate reward. Nobody can doubt that, And yet, so far as I have been able to discover in the papers that have been printed and submitted to us, we do not have presented the written arrangements under which, controlling the service, this claim is made. I am sorry for it. I would not have anybody suppose that I mean to intimate that these are withheld either by the committee or the claimant because they might be supposed to be adverse to his claim. I rather attribute it to the committee, having taken it for granted that here was the fact, supposed that it was of no consegranted that here was the fact, supposed that it was of no consequence to consider under what special circumstances and contracts and arrangements this service was performed. That is all I mean to say in respect to the absence of this contract. But feeling a certain interest to know what sort of a contract it was, I succeeded in persuading the Post-Office Department to furnish me with a copy of the original of this contract, which the Department, it appears, has taken great pains to certify in the most formal manner.

The first curious thing that strikes one about this contract is that it does not appear to have the slightest relation to the route or service which grew up under it; but that is according to our methods of legislation and administration. This is a contract—and the Post-Office Department informs me that it is the contract under which this service was performed—a contract for carrying the mails from Saint Louis, or somewhere, by way of Little Rock and El Paso, to the Pacific coast. There it began in 1857 or 1858. It contained these provisions, because it does go down and connect itself with this

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Vermont permit that to be printed in full?

Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will permit anybody to do anything.
Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go into the Record. I think it ought to go into the Record. A resolution was passed some time ago asking the Postmaster-General to furnish to the Senate copies of all contracts in which Mr. Holladay was interested, and I have on my desk the report that he made. I do not think that contract was included in it at all.

the report that he made. I do not think that contract was included in it at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Probably not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed that it was under some one of these contracts that this service was performed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Probably this contract was not included in the report referred to; and that is another of the curious things about this business, because this contract and its modification which appears on the back of it, transferring this service from the southern route by Santa Fé and El Paso to the central route by Salt Lake and Denver, does not appear to be connected with Mr. Holladay at all, and he is neither principal nor surety in it, and the so-called Overland Mail Company, instead of appearing to be a corporation by that land Mail Company, instead of appearing to be a corporation by that name, appears by this contract to be a body of individuals who enter name, appears by this contract to be a body of individuals who enter into this contract, and sign one as president and others as members, and so on, but Mr. Holladay's name nowhere appears, and when you come to its modification, as it is called, by which this southern service is moved up to the central route, as it is called, by Salt Lake this claimant's name nowhere appears. And if I am correctly informed in my personal struggles at and in the Post-Office Department, Mr. Holladay's name as a contractor with the Government, either as principal. laday's name as a contractor with the Government, either as principal laday's name as a contractor with the Government, either as principal or surety in respect of this service, nowhere appears.

It was stated, I think by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday, that Mr. Holladay was a surety for the performance of this obligation by somebody to carry the mail by Salt Lake from Saint Jo to Placerville, in California, and that the company getting into distress this surety was obliged to take it up. The Post-Office people tell me that they do not know anything about that; that all they have got is the papers, and all the papers they have shown me nowhere contain Mr. Holladay's name; and as I say, I have been struggling now for about forty-eight hours to find out what there was there, by letter, by telegram, and by personal visitation and so on, so as to explore this transaction, and try to pick up the threads that the committee did not seem to think important, but that I thought were for my own information. That is where the matter bethought were for my own information. That is where the matter begins and ends; and yet there is no doubt that in some way this gentleman has under these contracts done a certain service. If he has tleman has under these contracts done a certain service. If he has done it directly with the United States, then it is very strange that the Post-Office Department cannot tell any of us under what written authority or stipulation it has been done. I do not say that he has not, because I have found by experience that it is not always possible for a simple and humble Senator to get all the ins and outs of the Post-Office Department on short notice; not that they would wish to conceal anything, but the thing is so emplicated that we are breach rost-Omce Department on short notice; not that they would wish to conceal anything, but the thing is so complicated that no one branch or department that you happen to strike happens to be in possession of the whole arrangement; and so I begind not be suppose that I am reflecting on the Post-Office Department. But here we are. All that they say they are able to give me is this contract for a southern transportation from Little Rock, going from Memphis and Saint Louis both, by El Paso to the Pacific coast, and a modification which moves this service up to a route from Saint Jo, to begin with, and afterward Atchison, by way of Salt Lake, to Placerville, in California.

Now we come to find out under what provisions of law the service was performed. On the 3d of March, 1857, in the Post-Office appropriation bill it was provided in the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth sections, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for the conveyance of the entire letter mail from such point on the Mississippi River as the contractors may select, to San Francisco, in the State of California, for six years, at a cost not exceeding three hundred thousand dollars per annum for semi-monthly, four hundred and fifty thousand dollars for weekly, or six hundred thousand dollars for semi-weekly service; to be performed semi-monthly, weekly, or semi-weekly, at the option of the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted. That the contract shall require the service to be performed with good four-horse coaches—

That is important with reference to the remark of my eloquent friend from Kentucky yesterday as to how this gentleman went to Concord, in the State of New Hampshire, or some other great wagon place and, discarding the ancient carts and mules and donkeys and things that used to carry the mails, got these very fine vehicles:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the contract shall require the service to be performed with good four-horse coaches or spring wagons, suitable for the conveyance of passengers as well as the safety and security of the mails.

Now comes section 12, which may be quite material if the Senate is to consider this matter itself and not send it to the Court of Claims to consider how rich this contract was and how great inducements were held out to the undertakers by way of compensation to guard against the risks and perils of Indian depredations:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted. That the contractors shall have the right of pre-emption to three hundred and twenty acres of any land not then disposed of or reserved, at each point necessary for a station, not to be nearer than ten miles from each other; and provided that no mineral land shall be thus pre-empted.

That provided that the contractors should be entitled to pre-empted and take up three hundred and twenty acres at every ten miles over this 1,500 to 1,800, miles as I suppose it was, but 1,500 is near enough for the general consideration I am advancing. That would be 3,200 acres for every one hundred miles at points at which necessarily emigration would center itself; that is at each station, and where emigration gathered around the station by settlement of other people there would be a village, and land would become valuable, it would be a village plot.

Then the thirteenth section of this act provided as to the length of time required for the trip, twenty-five days, and required security, &c. Under that statute this first contract of 1857 was made by these overland-mail people, as they are called, for the southern route. Following that and coming down to this particular service, we find this in the act of 1861. The fifteenth section of the act of February 27, 1861, makes this provision:

That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to advertise for proposals for the daily transportation of the entire mail, overland, between Saint Joseph, Missouri, or some other point on the Missouri River, connected by railroad with the East, which may be selected by the contractor, and Placerville, California, over the central route, the bids to be received till the first Monday of April, 1861, and the service to commence July 1, 1861, or as soon thereafter as possible, and to terminate July 1, 1865. And the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder furnishing ample guarantees of his ability and disposition to perform his contract: Provided, That the amount of his bid shall not expeed $800,000 per year: Provided, That the contractor shall supply Denver City and Great Salt Lake City at least semi-weekly without extra charge: And provided further. That the letter and newspaper mail shall be carried through in twenty days, and the pamphlet, magazine, periodical, and public document mail in thirty-five days. But the Postmaster-General may authorize the carrying of said pamphlet, magazine, periodical, and public document portion of the mail by steamship route, at least semi-monthly to San Francisco, if desired by the contractor, and if said service is performed at the contractor's expense.

That is material for Senators to remember in connection with what

That is material for Senators to remember in connection with what That is material for senators to remember in connection with what was said, I think by my friend from Kentucky yesterday, as to the enormous amount of this transportation in point of weight, and therefore that it required an enormous expenditure of force and money to carry this mail in those troublous times; whereas it appears, money to carry this mail in those troublous times; whereas it appears, from my examination at the Post-Office Department, from their records that during all or the greater portion of this time this heavy mail was carried by way of the steamship route to Panama and to San Francisco, and was paid for out of this contract, which from $500,000 went up to a million at the same session, as you will see presently. So that apparently it was only the latter mail in substance that was carried, and about one hundred and sixty thousand dollars every year was paid to the steamship people out of this million for carrying the heavy part of the mail the other way.

Then this provision goes on:

And provided further, That the contractor shall not be required, in addition to the letter mail, to carry more of the newspaper mail by the twenty-day schedule than will make the average weight of the whole mail one thousand pounds per

That is equal to about six or seven passengers-and the remainder, if any, of the newspaper mail shall be carried on the thirty-five-day schedule above provided for.

That was the act of 1861. At the same session it was found convenient by somebody to modify that still further. Then we find this provision in the ninth section of the act of March 2, 1861:

That in lieu of the daily service on the central route, provided by the act entitled "An act for the establishment of post-routes," approved February 77, 1:61—

Four days before the one I have just been readingthe Postmaster-General is hereby directed to discontinue the mail service on route number 12578And that is the route in this contract which the Post-Office Department has furnished me—from Saint Louis and Memphis to San Francisco, California, and to modify the contract on said route, subject to the same terms and conditions—

Among which was this pre-emption provision, and another one which Senators will see when they read it, which authorized the Postmaster-General to change the route for sundry reasons that it might be necessary, and under which, as appears in the records at the Post-Office Department that I saw myself this morning, the route was changed and swung to a place one hundred miles shorter on the application of the contractors. Whether it was the same above that it makes the contractors. Whether it was the same change that is spoken of here in order to get rid of Indian depredations, I am not sufficiently familiar with the geography of the affair to know; but it was swung to a route that goes by the Cherokee trail, Bridger's Pass, &c., which was represented to be one hundred miles shorter than the one that the original contract required. The act proceeds:

the original contract required. The act proceeds:

Hereby directed to discontinue the mail service on route No. 12578 from Saint Louis and Memphis to San Francisco, California, and to modify the contract on said route, subject to the same terms and conditions only as hereinafter provided, said discontinuance to take effect on or before July 1, 1861. The contractors on said route shall be required to transport the entire letter mail six times a week on the central route, said letter mail to be carried through in twenty days' time, eight months in the year, and in twenty-three days the remaining four months of the year, from some point on the Missouri River connected with the East, to Placerville, California, and also to deliver the entire mails tri-weekly to Denver City and Great Sait Lake City. Said contractors shall also be required to carry the residue of all mail matter in a period not exceeding thirty-five days—

Here comes the heavy part of it, about which observation has been made—with the privilege of sending the latter semi-monthly from New York to San Francisco in twenty-five days by sea, and the public documents in thirty-five days.

That is to say, it was supposed by this statute, and very rightly, no doubt, that the proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives were of far less consequence to the public of the Pacific coast than the ordinary pamphlets and weekly newspapers and advertisements, and so forth, that private citizens put forth. That was a discrimination against ourselves to the extent of ten days, which no doubt was well warranted in those times; it would not do now at all doubt was well warranted in those times; it would not do now at all, of course. [Laughter.]

They shall also be required during the continuance of their contract, or until the completion of the overland telegraph, to run a pony express semi-weekly at a schedule time of ten days eight months, and twelve days four months, carrying for the Government, free of charge, five pounds of mail matter, with the liberty of charging the public for transportation of letters by said express not exceeding $1 per half ounce.

That was part of the privilege of these contractors—that they might carry private mail-matter on their own hook and charge a dollar per half ounce for the rapidity with which they did it.

For the above service said contractors shall receive the sum of $1,000,000 per annum, the contract for such service to be thus modified before the 25th day of March next, and expire July 1, 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the date of that act?
Mr. EDMUNDS. The 2d of March, 1861. Now I find on the Post-Office books—I do not know that it is here because I have not had time to examine this contract very fully and read it through as it only came to me a short time ago—a copy of the modification of this contract made on the 12th of March, 1861, only ten days after the passage of the act, by which the original contractors, by their president, as he is called, Mr. Dinsmore, and by Mr. Alvord the superintendent, agreed to a modification of the contract in accordance with this act of the 2d of March, 1861; the result of which was that the transportation by the southern route was abandoned and the transportation this act of the 2d of March, 1861; the result of which was that the transportation by the southern route was abandoned and the transportation by this route was adopted; the compensation was increased from $600,000 a year to $1,000,000 a year, with the right of the contractors to run their pony express and carry private mail matter at a dollar per half ounce, and with all the privileges of pre-emption, &c., of the public lands that the original contract by the southern route gave, and with the provision that appears in this original contract that:

If obstacles, such as the want of water, or feed, or physical obstructions, should be found between the points herein designated, so that time cannot be made, and a better line can be found between those points, the Postmaster-General may vary the route to such better line.

Then there is another provision in this original contract, (which

Then there is another provision in this original contract, (which was also modified as I say, in the way of getting $400,000 more compensation and another route and so on,) that the contractors undertake to guard the mail against injury, loss, destruction, and "for carrying it in a place or manner that exposes it to depredation, loss, or injury by being wet," lost or destroyed, &c.

So, then, according to the apparent reading of this original contract, the price paid, with the privilege of pre-emption, &c., was supposed to be measured somewhat in accordance with the difficulty and the risk of that species of transcontinental transportation through uninhabited and unsettled countries where the elements and the Indians usually prevailed. Then when we come to the change of this route, preserving these beneficial provisions for both sides of changes route, preserving these beneficial provisions for both sides of changes and modifications of route for greater safety, there appears to be retained, the advantage of the pre-emption every ten miles of three hundred and twenty acres of land, two quarter sections as they are called in the land laws, and an increase of the compensation from $600,000 to $1,000,000 a year, and with the privilege of carrying private mail matter in their rapid pony express contrary to the ordinary statutes and policy of the United States, at the rate of a dollar perhalf ounce. There they stood.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt my friend from Vermont to ask him, is the term "private mail-matter" in the statute?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, the statute provides that they may carry it. Mr. THURMAN. What is meant by "private mail-matter?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Private letters, &c., which the ordinary statutes do not allow a mail-carrier to carry over a mail-route.

Mr. THURMAN. Were these contractors allowed to carry it themselves, to set up a post-office of their own and receive it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Precisely, to the extent of this fast pony express. They might carry anything that anybody chose to send. They must only carry five pounds for the United States (that is the limit) on the pony express, but they could carry any quantity they liked of private mail-matter, exactly the same thing that is within five pounds in their lock-pouch, for private citizens, and they might charge a dollar per half ounce for it. per half ounce for it.

Mr. THURMAN. And those letters never go through the post-office at all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. They never go through the post-office at all. These were the benefits and advantages: a million dollars a year, the right of pre-emption to three hundred and twenty acres at every ten miles, the right to send all the heavy mail matter, the printed matter, and the still worse than printed matter, such speeches as I am making at this present moment, and so on, by way of the Isthmus in thirty-five days at the ordinary transportation steamboat rates.

Mr. CONKLING. They did not come within the five-pounds limit?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it was not that small bottle of the elixir that my friend is so familiar with that enabled the man who possessed it to obtain at one glance all the hidden treasures of the universe, while his less intelligent companions were allowed to carry off the camel-his less intelligent companions were allowed to carry off the camelloads of congressional documents. I believe that is the Arabian story; is it not?

his less intelligent companions were allowed to carry off the camelloads of congressional documents. I believe that is the Arabian story; is it not?

Here this man began; that is, the committee tell us he did. As I say, the utmost diligence that I am able to exert does not disclose to me in any record of Post-Office Department that they have shown me, that my good friend, Mr. Holladay, was en rapport with the Post-Office Department at all. He only appears there as the signer of receipts. Of course that is a very good attitude to appear in; but there it is. Mr. President, in the light of what the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] said yesterday as to the public obligation of the United States to defend everybody who has a contract with it against all the misfortunes in this world, it does appear to me that it is worthy of some consideration to inquire whether anything can be found in this contract and its modification, under which the Post-Office Department say this claim is made, that will justify us in deciding now and here that we have undertaken any duty of securing this transportation against a public enemy. That is the question.

I think we are rather apt to confound two quite distinct things in considering a matter of this kind, in respect of the nature of the Government of the United States. If the Government of the United States makes a bargain with me to furnish it a hundred bushles of oats to be delivered at Richmond, Virginia, I take it that the true rule of law and justice is that I stand in respect of the obligation of delivering those oats at Richmond, Virginia, precisely as if I had before in reference to my attitude to the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States (waiving all questions of State sovereignty and distinctions of qualification that we need not go into now) is bound to protect me as a citizen of the United States in the enjoyment of all my constitutional rights, and one of them is to make a bargain with you to deliver oats at Richmond. If the British or a Senate, and so on) to defend me; but I never heard in such a case that it was the duty of the Government to be an insurer; and if the British really destroyed my oats that the people of the United States were bound to tax themselves to pay for it. They were bound to do all they could, reasonably and fairly, to protect my rights, and no more. Therefore, every civilized government has always held to the rule that no private citizen had any legal or just claim against his government for injuries that a common enemy had inflicted upon him, if his government had exerted all the force of which it was reasonably capable to perform its duty toward him. In other words, the obligation of protection by a government is not one of absolute quality, but it is one of fidelity. If we were to hold otherwise, all the cotton that grows in that magnificent South which we have heard so magnificently described to-day, and all the humbler substance of hay that the grangers in New England and in all the North grow, and all the industry of every iron mine and manufactory and every other species of industry in this whole country, would be exhausted for twenty years to compensate the injury committed to citizens of the twenty years to compensate the injury committed to citizens of the United States by the late unpleasant circumstances that occurred between ourselves. Nobody holds, I think, on either side of this Chamber, that the duty of the Government of the United States has failed in the slightest degree because it has not compensated every Union man in the South for what he suffered in consequence of a war Union man in the South for what he suffered in consequence of a war that his government could not prevent; or if the case had been reversed and the confederacy had triumphed, no man would have thought, I think, of any obligation on the part of the successful confederate government to compensate its loyal citizens for injuries that they had suffered as a consequence of war. That is not it. The duty of a government is a duty to exercise faithful diligence in protection;

Now, what did this Government do, and what did happen? Here was a contract that was carried from $600,000 a year to a million, with pre-emptions and special privileges, and express provisions for changing routes from dangerous ones to safe ones, and the change here made had the effect of diminishing, if you believe the records of the Post-Office Department, the length of this route by a hundred miles at the request of the contractor and going another way, under which it is said that these losses occurred. With every disposition to do the fullest justice to this gentleman, I am not prepared to decide that he is entitled to half a million of money or the half of half to do the fullest justice to this gentleman, I am not prepared to decide that he is entitled to half a million of money or the half of half a million of money. I wish to be further informed; I wish to have somebody scrutinize for me, by cross-examination and careful elaboration of the facts, the precise circumstances under which these events occurred and the precise degree to which this loss went.

Another thing has struck me as being unfortunte in the report of the committee, and that is when you come to the quantity of this claim, to the value of the horses, the value of grain, the value of buildings, (the property, it is said, of this gentleman, although there is no evidence of that fact before the Senate, it does not appear in these contracts; but I make no point about that; I presume in some way he has come to be the rightful proprietor of this claim,) you find produced by him only the affidavits of sundry persons, when I cannot doubt, although I know nothing about it, that an enterprise as great as this was carried on with some system, and that Mr. Holladay, or the Overland Mail Company, or somebody, kept books, as even the farmers in Vermont and Georgia and Oregon I have no doubt do, of their transactions; and therefore that it was within the power of Mr. Holladay or this company to present to the committee the books of their daily and annual transactions. They would show exactly how much the horses cost, as they were great purchasers in the market and how much they were worth really to them, and exactly how much they lost by the were worth really to them, and exactly how much they lost by the destruction, if it were proved, of a hundred horses. I am told that there is not any such evidence; I asked my friend from Wisconsin yesterday; it had not been produced. When you come to the grain, the oats, and the corn, at $5 or $10 a bushel, whatever it is, (and I am not saying that it is too much; I do not know; that is the thing that troubles me,) I must assume it was within the power of Mr. Holladay or the people whom he represents to show from the books of their trans-actions what that corn cost them at Saint Louis, at Atchison, at Saint Jo, wherever they bought it, and by what methods and at what cost it was put down at Julesburgh, for instance, which is said to be one of the places that were destroyed. In respect of the cost of buildings, one set of which the Senator from Delaware referred to yesterday, as stated by some witness as capable of being reconstructed for $10,000 that is itemized at $35,000, I cannot doubt that the books of Mr. Holladay, or the books of the Overland Transportation Company, or the books of somebody who was carrying on this business, would tell us substantially exactly what those buildings cost and what they were us substantially exactly what those buildings cost and what they were worth.

I do not speak for anybody else, and I do not speak adversely to this claim; I only say, how can I now undertake to decide affirmatively against the defendant in this cause, to use a legal expression, the tax-payers of the United States, upon a case so imperfect as it appears to me this is? At the same time it may be to its fullest extent, for aught I know, perfectly just. What better, then, can I do, what better can we all do, than to send this case to some tribunal, if there has been no inexcusable delay about the statute of limitations, (and it seems to be taken for granted there has not, so that that need not stand in the way,) where there can be a careful and sifting investigation of this whole affair, where the books of these contractors may be produced and where the quantum of their loss—whether the United States is responsible for it or not, which is another question—can be substantially ascertained. We can, of course, go through such an investigation as to what was the actual cost of the horses, of the grain, of the property, the harness, the buildings, that they say have been destroyed, and we can find out as well as a court can find out how many have been destroyed and under what circumstances.

One other remark I want to make, and that is about the military order, which makes one sentence in the report of the committee, which appears to be a moving cause for a large part of this proposed payment, as if Mr. Holladay or the people whom he represents was coerced by some military authority into a change of the line to his great damage. The only official document apparently that we have got in this whole report is that order of the officer, as it is called. I think if Senators will look at that so-called order, they will find that it is not a coercive order at all, but it merely presents to this contractor, who has a right to go by one way rather than another through the Indian country, the fact that if he wants to be best prot equally bound to protect a private carrier of produce or merchandise or a traveler over these routes, and finding that one particular way of going through the mountains was more dangerous than another, the military authorities inform all concerned that they had better change to a better place. That was in perfect accordance with the provisions of the contract, that if that was found to be the case the change should be made; and in respect of one of these changes (whether this or not I am not sufficiently informed to say) the change resulted beneficially to the contractors in reducing the distance that they were obliged to travel by one hundred miles.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Vermont leaves that point, will he permit me to inquire of him whether in speaking of the right reserved to change the route he bases that right on anything except the paragraph in the contract itself, which he has read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The right of the United States to change the route with the consent of the contractor, of course, would only exist by force of the arrangement between the two parties. When you come to the different right of the United States as a political body in protecting its citizens, to say to these contractors exactly as it in protecting its citizens, to say to these contractors exactly as it might have said to them, if they had been private expressmen, "There is danger from Indians here, and you had better get over to the other side of this mountain and save a hundred miles in distance," that is another question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator indulge me just a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For fear that I may forget it, I will state now that the Senator, in his allusion to my remarks yesterday in reference to Mr. Holladay being surety, said he could find nothing of that in this transcript from the postal department. The fact is that the Overland Mail Company sublet a portion of their line to Russell, Majors & Waddell, on the southern route; and when it was moved by act of Congress to what is called the middle route that firm was to take the part from Kansas City to Salt Lake City under the new arrangement for a daily mail with mail-coaches. Mr. Holladay was the surety of Russell, Majors & Waddell to the Overland Mail Company, and not to the Government. Hence it is that his name does not appear on the abstract from which the Senator has read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it may be; I dare say that is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I assure the Senator that is the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to have anybody suppose that I believed Mr. Holladay was a pure intruder here in making this claim, and that he was never west of the Mississippi River; I do not wish anybody to suppose that; but I say that it does not appear according that the Senator, in his allusion to my remarks yesterday in reference anybody to suppose that; but I say that it does not appear according to the statement of the Post-Office people. I do not wish anybody to be bound by that, because I do not believe in legislating on the private representations of Senators except so far as you choose; but I have merely done the best I could in the absence of an exploration I have merely done the best I could in the absence of an exploration by the committee of this business, to inform myself; that is all; and I am giving the reasons why I think we ought not to pass this bill in a lump, but ought to have a careful and fair investigation where both sides and all sides can be heard. Yet in this same original contract, which is the foundation of this whole thing, there is the provision that the contractors shall be responsible for everybody who stands help without the contractors of the contra stands below them, by some phrase or another.

That is, as it seems to me, about the present state of this case; and

That is, as it seems to me, about the present state of this case; and I must say for one that it is not at all satisfactory to me in respect of deciding as a judge against the tax-payers of the United States that this gentleman is entitled to this half a million and more of money. At the same time I am unwilling to decide on the merits that he is not entitled to something. Therefore I should vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] with such modifications as would seem to make it effective and just

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit to be copied the contract to which he has referred?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will be done, so that it can be seen in the RECORD.

ISAAC V. FOWLER,
Postmaster at New York, N. Y.

Ordered, that whenever the contractors and their securities shall file in the PostOffice Department a request, in writing, that they desire to make the junction of the two branches of said road at Preston instead of Little Rock, that the Department will permit the same to be done by some route not further west than Springfield, in Missouri; thence, by Fayetterville, Van Buren, and Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, to the said junction, at or near the town of Preston, in Texas; but said new line shall be adopted on the express condition that the said contractors shall not claim or demand from the Department, or from Congress, any increased compensation for, or on account of, such change in the route from St. Louis, or of the point of junction of the two routes from Little Rock to Preston; and, on the further express condition, that whilst the amount of lands to which the contractors may be entitled under the act of Congress may be estimated, on either of said branches, from Preston to St. Louis or Memphis, at their option, yet the said contractors shall take one-half of that amount on each of said branches, so that neither shall have an advantage, in the way of stations and settlement, over the other; and, in case said contractors, in selecting and locating their lands, shall disregard this condition, or give other undue advantage to one of said branches over the other; the Department reserves the power of discontinuing said new route from St. Louis to Preston, and to hold said contractors and their securities to the original route and terms expressed and set forth in the body of this contract.

AARON V. BROWN,

Postmaster-General.

11th September, 1857.

March 12, 1861.—Route No. 12578, California, Saint Louis, and Memphis to San Francisco semi-weekly, four-horse coaches. Overland Mail Company, E. S. Alvord, Superintendent.—$625,000.

Ordered: Pursuant to act of Congress, approved 2d of March, 1861, and the acceptance of the terms thereof by the Overland Mail Company. Modify the present contract with that company for route No. 12578, executed 16th of September, 1857, to take effect 16th of September, 1858, so as to discontinue service on the present route and to provide for the transportation of the entire letter-mail six times a week on the central route; said letter-mail to be carried through in twenty days' time, eight months of the year, and in twenty-three days the remaining four months of the year, from Saint Joseph, Missouri, (or Atchison, in Kansas,) to Placerville, in California, and also for the delivery of the entire mail, three times a week each way, to Denver City and Great Salt Lake City; and in case the mails do not amount to six hundred pounds per trip, then other mail matter to make up that weight per trip to be conveyed; but in any event the entire Denver City and Salt Lake City mails, and the entire letter-mail for California, to be conveyed. The contractors also to be required to convey the residue of all mail matter in a period not exceeding thirty-five days. And to be required also, during the continuance of their contract, or until the completion of the overland telegraph, to run a pony express semi-weekly at a schedule time of ten days eight months of the year, and twolve days four months of the year, and to convey for the Government free of charge fire pounds of mail matter, with ilberty of charging the public for transportation of letters by said express not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ per half ounce. The compensation for the whole service to be $\frac{1}{2}$, 1864. The number of the route to be changed to 10773 and the service to be recorded in the route register for Missouri.

Note at bottom of this order:

In behalf of the Overland Mail

W. B. DINSMORE, President, E. S. ALVORD, Supt. O. M. Co.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President—
Mr. HOAR. I wish to occupy one moment merely in calling the attention of the Senate to the exact provision of this contract in regard to a question—

Mr. VOORHEES. I believe I was recognized, but I yield.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Chair to recognize me; he looked

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Allison in the chair.) The Chair having recognized the Senator from Indiana, he is entitled to the floor

Mr. HOAR. I think I shall occupy literally but sixty seconds, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will take all the time he desires.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont made a point, reading the contract, it is true, which at the beginning impressed me with great force, which was that the contract itself reserved to the Government the right to change this route; and, if he did not argue he suggested that the compensation fixed in the contract, the contract price, was based upon the liability to the exercise of that right. Now let me read, and I wish Senators would do me the favor to listen carefully, while I read, what the contract says on that subject, which I understand from the Senator from Vermont is all the reservation of such right; he does not base it on any general statute affecting of such right; he does not base it on any general statute affecting all such contracts:

It is hereby further stipulated and agreed that if obstacles, such as the want of water or feed, or physical obstructions, should be found between the points herein designated, so that time cannot be made, and a better line can be found between those points, the Postmaster-General may vary the route to such better line.

In other words, if obstacles of a particular class such as would suggest themselves to a party making a contract like this in time of peace, like the want of water or feed, or physical obstruction, that is if an unexpected gorge or mountain range interfering with the passage of these wagons should be discovered, there may be a change. Does the Senator from Vermont seriously claim that that stipulation in the contract embraces a case of a damage of the line occasioned by the breaking out of a war and the impossibility of the passage along this line of the drivers and others servants of the contractor in charge of his mail wagons? Is that an obstacle such as the want of water or feed found on the line, in consequence of which there may be a transfer of the route to a better line? This man puts his claim, as I understand it, on the ground that there broke out a war such as would be an excuse for the performance of any contract, such as would be even an excuse for the performance by a common carrier of that strictest of obligations known to the law, his obligation to the party to carry safely what is intrusted to him; that there being such an excuse he called upon the President of the United States and the President said, "the interest of this country requires the communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific to be kept up at all cost and at all hazards, and if you will proceed to do that along the line where it is most convenient for the United States to furnish you millitary protection, this line having become impossible, you shall be compensated." It is on that assurance made to him by the President of the United States that the obligation, in honor and in law, of the Government of the United States to make this compensation depends; and it is not such an obstacle as three or four years before the war broke out, like want of feed or want of water, that this contract refers to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Ingalls in the chair.) The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that the Senator from Massachusetts does not quite do me justice about the clauses of the contract to which I called attention. He does not think it worth his while to refer to the clause in it about depredations upon the mail, but does refer to the one as to physical obstructions, and he thinks that an Indian barrier is not a physical but I suppose only a moral or spiritual obstruction.

itual obstruction.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will give him an opportunity to reply.

Mr. HOAR. When stating what I think, perhaps the Senator would like to know what I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am only stating what I think my friend thinks, and that may be quite a different thing. I suppose my friend from Massachusetts thinks that the true construction of this phraseology in the contract relates to obstructions interposed by the hand of nature as distinguished from the hand of man. Is not that right?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator desire me to answer him now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. My point is not as the Senator from Vermont is stating

Mr. HOAR. My point is not as the Senator from Vermont is stating it, that an Indian war is not an obstacle. My point is that the contract speaks of obstructions occurring of a particular character, of which certain ones are specified in the contract, such as want of feed or water, or physical obstructions, but that an Indian war is not an obstacle such as want of water, which is referred to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Massachusetts is right, if the original southern route had been adhered to and a band of Indians not amounting to an Indian war but of depredators (as another part of the contract speaks of; and that is all there was of it anywhere probably) had interposed and by physical force prevented the carrying of this mail on one of the trips, the contractor would not only nave been deprived of his pay for carrying that mail on the trip, but would have been liable to be fined three times the proportionate amount that trip would have entitled him to, on the ground that he had not been obstructed in any of the ways that the contract provided for, and that it was not a good excuse. Now, I do not believe in that. Although literally and at first sight I think the Senator from Massachusetts would be quite right in saying that it covered and inin that. Although literally and at first sight I think the Senator from Massachusetts would be quite right in saying that it covered and included the obstructions of mere accidents of nature, yet I think that when you take it altogether, looking at the objects that were to be attained by it, these provisions about modifying and changing the route were intended to apply to every case in which it was found impracticable to carry the mail by one way, and then the Postmaster-General might name another so as to get it through. That is what the contract was after; it was to get the mail through. So I think physical obstruction there must be construed to mean any physical obstacle that prevented the accomplishment of the great design of keeping open this communication.

Mr. THURMAN. An Indian with his rifle would be a physical obstruction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think an Indian with a rifle, or tomahawk, or scalping-knife, is a physical obstruction, not only within the letter but much more within the spirit of this arrangement, which should but much more within the spirit of this arrangement, which should provide for finding the best means of uniting us between the two coasts of the United States. That is what it seems to me. But then I should not put it, as the Senator has quoted to me, solely on the letter or the spirit of this contract; I should put it also upon the broader ground, as I endeavored to state, that when the Government of the United States makes a contract with a person for a service it occupies exactly the attitude in respect of obligation that any private citizens would who made the same contract, and that it does not imply the obligation to exert the political power of the United States to enable the party to perform his contract in any greater degree or to any greater extent than the United States is bound to exert its political power to enable other citizens to perform their contracts between themselves. That is my proposition, and I am ready to stand by it.

Therefore I say that this change of route, (if it be the same one, and that I do not know at this moment,) which appears in the Post-Office record books to have been one made in the interest and for the benefit of the contractor, and to have diminished one hundred miles of desert and mountain and of danger, is not one that furnishes him prima facie with a right to claim and to be indemnified, and that this prima facie with a right to claim and to be indemnified, and that this military order of a colonel, which is the only document which the committee apparently has favored us with upon that subject, is not to be construed as the committee construe it and as the Senators supporting the bill construe it, as a coercive expulsion of this man or his people from one route to another, but as only furnishing him the means of doing his duty on a shorter line and with less risk; that he was not pushed out of that route at the point of the bayonet and into the other one, but he was only told in the curt language of military people, "We can protect you on this route and we cannot protect you on the other, and so go to this one." That did not oblige him to go; but if it be the same change, which, as I say, I do not know, it was merely the form of carrying out what the Post-Office Department had thought it wise to do for the benefit of the contractor, for the safety of the mail, and for the mutual advantage of everybody by shortening the route by a hundred miles. But I do not know, as I said before, that this change that appears in the Post-Office record shortening the route a hundred miles is the same one that was made on this occasion. that was made on this occasion.

There is another curious thing that appears in these books, and that is that this change from Julesburgh, which is one of the places referred to where very extensive buildings were burned down, appears to have been made on the Post-Office books to a place called Clearwater, and then I do not know how many months afterward, but in 1864, the minute in the Post-Office books is that it was changed back to Julesburgh, whether at the request of the contractor or what not I do not know, and whether the buildings when he got back to Jules-burgh were found to be just as they were before we do not know. All these things, as I said before, lead me to think that this case is in no condition for a final decision upon its merits by this body either

I wish to say one word more, and then I shall thank the Senator from Indiana for his kindness.
